I myself have always believed that we should have taken some street running north, like Sixteenth street, or some avenue that runs up into high ground, beautify that street or avenue, and use it for our public buildings. But we have started upon the other scheme, and, although when I first came here I resisted it as much as I could in my feeble way, I could not see that the resistance counted for anything. At any rate, building after building is going up south of Pennsylvania avenue, and as that is the case, let us, where we are going to put up the permanent buildings, at least put up good ones. That is all I ask for in this case, and not for a $250,000 building on a new site.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], I will say that I have not by any means been in favor of placing all our public buildings south of the Avenue. I was not in favor of the magnificent monument nearing completion for the occupancy of members of the United States Senate. There are many Senators, I have no doubt, here to-day who prefer to keep their own committee rooms here in the Capitol; but I would not for a moment wish to inconvenience a Senator who wants to move out of the Maltby Building or out of the "cave of the gods" down below, and get into the new Office Building. But it strikes me there are two stories over there in the new Office Building that will never be needed by Senators for committee rooms, and if the Committee on the Census would turn their attention to the two upper stories of that magnificent Senate Building, for which there is no more use than there is for the fifth wheel to a wagon, I think they would find room for the employees of the census.

Mr. President, in regard to the quagmire and low ground to which the Senator from Minnesota has referred, I would say that there is no question but that a part of it is of that character. But he must remember, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] very properly suggested, that the ground rises on Fifteenth street, and there is only about one-third of the three blocks and the end of the streets running from Fourteenth to Fifteenth streets that could be considered as low ground. Now, if we appropriate the money to put up the building for the census as proposed in this bill, it will simply detract from and delay the accomplishment of the object, which I believe a majority of Senators have, in providing adequate buildings for the use of the Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce and Labor. In the buildings to be erected we can house all the clerks that we are now paying rent to accommodate in outside properties.

I repeat, if the chairman of the committee will turn his attention to the Senate Office Building across the way, I think he will find two stories in that building which can be utilized for the purposes of the census.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the erection of a permanent building according to the plans that are ordinarily adopted for permanent buildings in this city would scarcely be warranted for the use of the Census Bureau during the three years' work on the decennial census. It must be borne in mind that the census force expands rapidly and contracts rapidly. The Census Committee in considering the question of accommodations for the next census was not unmindful of the possibility of renting as a last resort, but information gathered in that behalf from various sources demonstrated, I think, that there were no available buildings to be had in the city for the accommodation of the next census. Only yesterday evening the Secretary of the Treasury advised me that he had been for weeks in quest of some kind of a building in the city for the accommodation of a division of his office for which he has no present room; that finally he was enabled to secure measurably good accommodations for a portion of the force on G street in a building a short distance east of Seventh.

Mr. NELSON. Is not that the old post-office building?

Mr. CARTER. It is the old post-office building.

Mr. NELSON. That they tried to unload on the Government some little time ago?

Mr. CARTER. Some little effort was made in that direction, I believe. I remember making some objections at that time, and I would renew them now——

Mr. NELSON. I simply suggested that to show how easy it is to make a discovery in these cases.

Mr. CARTER. I recall very distinctly that when there was offered in a bill an appropriation item to purchase that building—I think it is the Union Building—I offered such objections to the appropriation as occurred to me at that time. I deemed it unwise and unnecessary at the moment.

If no provision at all is made for the accommodation of the census force which can not be accommodated in the existing building at the foot of the hill, one of two things will occur: First, a wider distribution of the census than ever before into such buildings of limited capacity as can be obtained, or else a contract by the Director of the Census with some syndicate which may be induced by extraordinary rent to construct a building for a three years' lease. Unquestionably if we are driven to the three years' lease the rental will be fixed at such a rate as to pay for the building and the land in three years. The Director of the Census, a very prudent and faithful officer, investigated very thoroughly the subject of quarters for the decennial census, and he reached the conclusion that the place where the office is now located, supplemented by the ground immediately to the north for additional construction, was at once the most available and economical provision that could be made.

Mr. President, it is clearly and distinctly stated by the director that no agent, attorney, or promoter is in any manner, shape, or form to be compensated or paid a commission out of the proceeds of this sale, if made. The price alone fixed for the property would bear out that statement if the understanding of the director required any support. Three dollars and thirty-one cents per square foot is the price fixed, and upon the land to be purchased at that price is a building entirely adequate for the accommodation of the major portion of the census force, so that no additional construction will be required as to that space which aggregates, I believe, 90,000 square feet of the 118,000 square feet.

Mr. NELSON. May I ask for information whether this ground includes the census building that is on it now?

Mr. CARTER. It includes the census building.

Mr. NELSON. It is proposed to add additional ground to it?

Mr. CARTER. It is proposed to add some——

Mr. LONG. Not an addition, but close to the present building.

Mr. NELSON. This purchase includes the ground and building?

Mr. LONG. It does; and also the "high school building," so-called. There will be three buildings.

Mr. CARTER. Not only the present Census building, but a rather large and commodious building, in good repair, now occupied by the Southern Railway, to the north of the present Census Office, fronting on First street. So we have for $3.31 per foot the ground and the building standing on the ground now occupied by the Census. In addition to that, there will be the building known as the "high school building," formerly occupied by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and at present occupied as offices by the Southern Railway Company.

This leaves only some construction to the west of the Southern Railway Building, and that is provided for in the amendment.

I am informed, and can only state on information and belief, that the ground immediately to the south of the Census building, upon which, it will be remembered, a number of indifferent cabins were located, was purchased by Mr. Bliss for $3.50 per foot, the buildings torn down and a new building erected there, which is quite a sightly and expensive building, evidently upon a good, solid foundation, because it has been standing there for almost a year.

It will be perceived, then, that, first, the Census requires that the space used temporarily may be adapted to some use in the intervening period between the decennial censuses. This main building may be used to a considerable extent for storage purposes by the Government Printing Office, by the Census Office, and by every department of the Government having use for additional storage room for the seven years when the space is not occupied by the decennial census force.

In the meantime the wares therein stored may be removed during the three-year period, and accommodations found in that manner for the Census Office, which is inflated and diminished, as I have suggested.

If we rely upon private enterprise to construct the necessary accommodations for the census, we will pay out the amount of this proposed appropriation, in my opinion, and leave the title in the other fellow at the close of the transaction. The committee did not treat this matter lightly. They consulted with the director, who is well informed, and conferred one with another and concluded that from the standpoint of expediency, the standpoint of economy, it was wise to add this amendment to the bill; and if senators will take the trouble to extend investigation as far as the committee extended it I doubt if a Senator present will hesitate to approve the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I was very much impressed by the statement of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] that we were going to get what are known as the three blocks, and we should have there, in any event, land which could be used for this purpose. But it seems to me, following the debate as it has gone on—and I have been listening to it for information, because I knew nothing about it when it began—the practical question is this: I do not regard the present situation as permanent. I think it is in many ways a poor situation. It is perfectly obvious from the price and the varying character of the three buildings that it is not a building which will be in its nature a permanent building.

It seems to me it all comes down to this: We must house the census force for the next decennial census. Is it better economy and will it lead to better administration to house it in these buildings which are proposed and which are cheap and temporary in this situation or to rent? We have to do one or the other. My own impression, after listening with an open mind to the debate, is that if we put it in that way, that we are not to have a permanent building there, it is cheaper to take this land and build the buildings we need, and when we come to permanent buildings, if we abandon them and the money that has gone in, $680,000, we shall have spent less money in the end than if we rent.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wish to make a suggestion as to the remarks of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT].

The Committee on the Census did not assume to usurp the prerogatives of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. We knew that committee was charged with the responsibility of reporting to the Senate upon questions relating to the location of public buildings. It is true that this proposition was presented last year to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and by it not reported. It was presented to the committee at the close of the session without any adequate opportunity to ascertain all the facts or to present them to the committee. But it is also true that the proposition to acquire the land occupied by the present Census building, though not all the ground provided in this bill, was presented to the Senate some six years ago and was passed by the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. I think it was longer ago than that. It was after the last census.

Mr. LONG. Yes. It was favorably acted upon by the Senate at that time. We did not presume that by purchasing this ground and erecting a building thereon a building would be erected such as the Government would erect south of the Avenue. The records of the last census and of preceding censuses, which are very valuable, of great importance to the Government, are not now kept in a secure place.

The $250,000 building that we contemplate erecting on this ground will be fireproof. It will not be so handsome a building as would be erected south of the Avenue; possibly it may not be considered a permanent building, but it will be a building where the records of the Census Office can be safely kept. In view of that fact and the further fact that two buildings are already located on this property, on which the Government does not need to spend any additional money, the erection of the $250,000 building will not be wasting the public money. This land, the Senate will remember, is included in what is called the "Park Commission scheme," to which the Senator from West Virginia, I understand, is so much devoted.

Mr. SCOTT. I beg the Senator's pardon; I am not committed to any scheme.

Mr. LONG. At least so far as relates to the land south of the Avenue. According to that report the Government should own the ground occupied by these buildings and on which it is contemplated to erect the third building. Of course I take it that the observation of the Senator from West Virginia as to using the third floor of the Senate Office Building for the next census was not intended seriously, for of course we could not house a part of the next census force in that building.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment as a substitute for section 33.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In place of the committee amendment known as section 33 it is proposed to insert:

SEC. 33. That the Director of the Census, under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and with the approval of a commission consisting of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, the Director of the Census, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, the Superintendent of the Capitol, and the Superintendent of the Congressional Library, be authorized to purchase or condemn real estate in the District of Columbia for the use of the Census Office at a cost not exceeding $300,000, and to construct a building thereon costing not to exceed $700,000.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, my suggestion provides for a competent commission to look into the question of site and into the question of construction and determine both, that commission to consist of three experienced builders, men who have had the confidence of Congress—the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, the Superintendent of the Capitol, and the Superintendent of the Congressional Library—these three acting in conjunction with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and the Director of the Census. I do not believe we should restrict the location of this structure to the south side of Pennsylvania avenue. We are not prepared now to locate it anywhere. What we do want is a suitable and a healthful site, and it seems to me the commission named in the amendment will be entirely competent to select such a site.

Now, second, as to the area of ground which ought to be taken for this purpose. The chairman of the committee states that it is desired to have a building which will contain 200,000 square feet of floor space.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. I stated that the three buildings, the two now in existence and the third to be erected, would have that floor space.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is what I understood from the Senator.

Mr. LONG. It is not the purpose to erect one building with that floor space.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will amend my statement by saying that I understand from the chairman of the committee that it is desired to have 200,000 square feet of floor space, and his proposition seeks to provide for that by putting up two buildings and utilizing the present building.

Mr. LONG. By erecting one building, which, in addition to the two buildings now in existence on this property, will make three.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will make three. At all events, I am correct, am I not, in stating that the floor space desired is 200,000 square feet? Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. LONG. The Senator is correct in the statement that these three buildings will have 200,000 square feet.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Two hundred thousand square feet; and these three buildings are deemed by the committee adequate to the work of the Census Office. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. LONG. I believe the Senator is correct in that statement.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Very well. I am glad to have arrived at an understanding with the chairman of the committee, for all I wanted to ascertain was the number of square feet required.

Now, it requires only 40,000 square feet for a building that will contain 200,000 square feet of floor space. A lot of 40,000 square feet will sustain a building five stories high, each story of which will have a floor space of 40,000 feet, and multiplying 40,000 by 5 you have the 200,000 square feet required.

In purchasing a lot it is not desirable, of course, to build upon more than two-thirds of the lot. So that you will require a lot of 60,000 square feet in order to obtain a building area of 40,000 square feet.

The committee proposes to buy over 100,000 square feet, which would necessitate, if you had one building over all, a building of two stories only in order to secure a floor area of 200,000 square feet. It is therefore clear that by the purchase of 60,000 instead of 115,000 square feet we can obtain ample ground to put up this building and leave one-third of the lot for air and light space.

The next question is, what will a building covering 40,000 square feet and five stories in height, an average for each story of about 13 feet, 70 feet in all, cost? Multiply 40,000 by 70, and you have 2,800,000 cubic feet as the cubic contents of the building. The very expensive buildings which the Government puts up in this city, such a building as the municipal building, will cost from 75 cents to a dollar a cubic foot. So if you propose to put up a building of that standard, your building will cost approximately $2,000,000. But, as I understand, the structure need not be of that monumental character. It is simply to be a useful structure, as attractive as possible in form and in appearance, but not having the expensive construction employed in a building like the municipal building. In the first place, the areas are large, the rooms are large, and you must recollect that the finishing of the interior of a building costs more than the exterior shell. For the purpose of putting up a Census Office building you require simply a shell, for the rooms will be very large in space, just such rooms as are employed in the present Census Office.

Now, that character of building can be put up, fireproof in construction, at from 20 cents a cubic foot to 30 or 40 cents a cubic foot, according to the number of partitions and the perfection of finish. It was stated to me by Mr. Walcott, lately Director of the Geological Survey, and now Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, a gentleman who has had large experience in construction, that Stoneleigh Court, constructed under his supervision for Secretary Hay, cost, per cubic foot, not more than 22 cents, and that was a comparatively costly form of construction, for it involved innumerable subdivisions in the shape of apartments, and expensive plumbing, such as will not be required in the Census Office.

I shall assume, then, that if you have a building of 2,800,000 cubic feet, you can put it up for 20 cents a cubic foot and have it entirely fireproof in construction, provided you have these large rooms, with large spaces, and do not create the numerous subdivisions that would be required in an office building or a hotel or an apartment building. At 20 cents a cubic foot, 2,800,000 cubic feet will cost $560,000. It will require 60,000 square feet of ground, which ought to be secured in a healthful location—not necessarily in a central business location, but in a convenient and healthful location—at from $2 to $4 a square foot. At $2 a square foot you could get 60,000 feet for $120,000. At $4 you would pay $240,000. Assuming that you have to pay $240,000 or even $300,000 for your lot, and you add to that the cost of the building—$560,000—you have a total of $860,000.

Now, under this bill it is proposed to make a total expenditure for the land with the buildings of $430,000, and to add $250,000 for a building, making $680,000 in all, and for a sum very little greater you can get a convenient and healthful locality, you can get high ground, you can get new construction throughout, and you will have the location and construction comprehensively planned by a commission consisting of three experts, acting in conjunction with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and the Director of the Census. Certainly such a commission of executive officials and experts can form a better judgment regarding this matter than Congress.

That is our difficulty in proceeding with reference to the location and construction of public buildings. We have not as yet organized, as they have in almost every civilized government, a bureau of art or of architecture or a ministry of arts, to which is confided this special work. We are now engaging extensively in the construction of public buildings all over the country; the appropriations for the public buildings are likely to rival our appropriations for rivers and harbors; and we have not yet organized a comprehensive plan for their location and construction under the direction of trained men.

I suggest that here is an opportunity to start. We put upon this commission executive officials, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, the Director of the Census, and we ally with them three well-known constructors and builders, who have had in the past, and have now, the confidence of Congress, as evidenced by numerous appropriations made by Congress to be expended under their direction. There is no better constructor in the country than Bernard Green, of the Congressional Library, who acted so long under the direction of General Casey. We all have confidence in the Superintendent of the Capitol, Mr. Woods, who, for so many years, acted under the old Architect of the Capitol, Mr. Clark, and who has been trained in this building. The Supervising Architect has the confidence of Congress and the confidence of all his associates in architecture and art.

These three men have been intent upon study for years relating to the architectural and landscape development of Washington. They are familiar with L'Enfant's plans and with all the modifications and extensions of those plans recently recommended by the commission appointed by Congress some years ago. We certainly could not secure a better-informed or a more capable commission than the one provided for by this amendment.

The amendment calls for an appropriation of $300,000 for the lot and not exceeding $700,000 for the building. I think we can safely go to the extent of a million dollars in this matter. I should hope that this commission would so locate the property as to fit in with the future plans of the Government relating to the architectural development of the city so far as public buildings are concerned.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I want to say just one word, and I am sorry to detain the Senate for even a moment.

I fully agree with the Senator from Massachusetts in regard to the matter of paying rent, and I think my record in the Senate shows that I have always advocated that it was better for the Government to own buildings than to rent them.

The only reason why I object to the amendment is the contemplated building for the Commerce and Labor Department under an appropriation of $2,500,000.

I believe the appropriation of this amount of money, unless it is, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, cheaper to own it than to rent it, would perhaps hinder the future appropriation we hope to get to put up buildings. I know from personal investigation I made a year ago that the Government of the United States is paying for rent anywhere from 9 to 17 per cent on the money invested in buildings the Government is occupying in the city of Washington. The only objection I have is that I believe it will interfere in future with the appropriation for a building for the Department of Commerce and Labor. Then, without being thin skinned at all, I want to say to the chairman of the committee that this portion of the bill should have gone to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I was not in the Chamber during the first remarks of the Senator from West Virginia, but I think I know what his feeling is in the matter. I want to say to the Senator from West Virginia and to the Senate that as far as I am concerned I do not propose that this purchase of land or the erection of this building shall hinder us in going on with future improvements in providing for the departments at the proper time.

Mr. HALE. Not in the least.

Mr. WARREN. Not in the least. But here we are with a lease nearly expired. We should have bought the building when the Senate passed a bill for that purpose some years ago. In that case we would have had it paid for in the rent we have since paid. We have now come to a time when we must have three years' use of a building in which to take the census. That three years will have expired before we could get into operation with a large commission and in dealing with the public in buying a proper site.

I think this provision should be left in the bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Wyoming if he doubts that a building of the character I have described, with very large spaces, large rooms, such as are now in the present Census Office, with steel construction, could be put up within nine months? If he has any doubt upon the subject, I can present indubitable proofs by to-morrow.

Mr. WARREN. I am not going into that question, except to say that my conception of a building for the Department of Commerce and Labor is that such a building can not be constructed in that length of time, or in possibly twice that length of time.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator refers to the Department of Commerce and Labor. I understand that this is a building for the Census Office, and that is what I propose to provide for, a mere shell, fireproof in construction, of large spaces, similar to those in the present census building. I undertake to say that there are half a dozen contractors here who would contract to put up such a building within nine months.

Now, how much time is going to be spent in the purchase of the lot? Appoint a business commission, and can you doubt that such a commission would secure 60,000 feet of ground within thirty days?

Mr. HALE. In two years.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator underrates the business capacity of such a commission. I am aware that action under the inspiration of Congress has usually been very tedious and very dilatory, but it is because of the unbusinesslike methods of Congress. Congress has never yet taken up the constructive work of this country, the question of the development of our waterways, the question of the development of our public buildings throughout the country, in a comprehensive way. The only great constructive work it has taken up in a businesslike way has been the irrigation works and the Panama Canal. No one can contend that in those cases the work has not been conducted with certainty and with dispatch and celerity; and we have succeeded in those instances simply because we have largely emancipated them from the thraldom which Congress and congressional committees have continually imposed upon the constructive work of the country.

I stand for a businesslike method of conducting the public business. Our duty is legislation. We fail to realize that, and we take upon ourselves in many instances the practical work of administration. I trust we will cut ourselves clear from it in the matter of planning the future system of waterways in this country just as we have cut away from it in the Panama Canal and in the irrigation works. It is the large discretion within certain limits that we have given the executive branch of the Government in those cases has enabled us to do the work, and to do the work with dispatch.

The delay in the public work is not due, in my judgment, to the executive branch of the Government, but to the unbusinesslike methods employed by Congress itself. And what can be more unbusinesslike than the selection of a lot which, according to the confession of everyone who has spoken upon this floor, is one of the poorest in location in the District of Columbia, and the construction, in addition to one building now inadequate for the purpose, of two other buildings temporary in character.

It is proposed to increase in that undesirable location the investment of the Government. Yet it would be very easy within a period of thirty days to acquire 60,000 feet of ground, which is all that is required, instead of 115,000 feet of ground, as is contemplated. I ask what business corporation or what business man would buy 115,000 square feet of ground in order to put upon it a building of 200,000 square feet of floor space? A building two stories high on such a lot would contain all the floor space that would be required.

Would a corporation do that? Would a business man do that? Would any corporation or business man having a location confessedly improper for the purpose required increase his investment in such a location?

There is no doubt about this matter. There is not anyone here who does not admit that this is a crowded space, that it has not sufficient light and air about it, that it is in a low quarter of the city, unattractive in appearance and hot and uncomfortable during the summer season, not a proper place in which to collect a thousand, or perhaps 2,000, employees of whom hard work is expected. And yet Congress fails to take hold of this matter in any broad way by giving authority to a competent commission composed of executive officials and experts to exercise their judgment and discretion, within certain limits of appropriation, but puts the whole enterprise in a strait-jacket and dooms thousands of government employees to discomfort and inconvenience in this very undesirable location.

The suggestion is made that we will be delayed. The delay thus far has been that of Congress in not sooner making provision for a work clearly needed. That mistake should be remedied, not by compelling improper location and construction ill suited to the service required, but by putting this question into the hands of a competent executive commission. Having put the responsibility on them, we can hold them to a rigid accountability.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada proposes an amendment in the nature of a substitute to the amendment of the committee. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. LONG. One amendment on page 24 was passed over.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. BACON] has been necessarily called from the Senate.

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator withhold his proposed amendment until after the remaining committee amendment is disposed of?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas proposes an amendment to the committee amendment passed over, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 24, in the committee amendment, line 24, after the word "authorized," insert the words "with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor;" so as to make the amendment read:

Provided, That whenever, in the opinion of the Director of the Census, the Public Printer does not produce the printing and binding required under the provisions of this act with sufficient promptness, or whenever said printing and binding are not produced by the Public Printer in a manner satisfactory to the Director of the Census in quality or price, said director is hereby authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, to contract with private parties for printing and binding, after due competition.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to state, Mr. President, that in committee I voted against that amendment. It is a question that was thoroughly thrashed out by the Committee on the Census of the House and on the floor of the House ten years ago, when we were preparing the census bill for the taking of the Twelfth Census. At that time the vote of the House was overwhelmingly against it.

The question is as to whether the printing of the work that will be done under the bill shall be done at the Government Printing Office or whether it shall be done under private contract.

The Government of the United States has one of the largest and best equipped printing establishments in the world, and an establishment that has been provided with every kind of machinery for doing the work here with dispatch and with excellency as well.

This amendment provides that if, in the judgment of the "Director of the Census, the Public Printer does not produce the printing and binding required under the provisions of this act with sufficient promptness," he shall have the privilege and the right to go to private printing establishments for the purpose of securing the work to be done.

It seems to me that this is placing a good deal of power in the hands of the Director of the Census. The amendment which has just been adopted on the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado improves that but little, in my judgment, because the Director of the Census will ultimately have control of the matter, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor must necessarily follow the suggestions of the Director of the Census.

I think the present Director of the Census is one of the ablest men in the country as a statistician and the best equipped man in the country for this work. I have perfect confidence in his ability and his integrity, but it is placing a great authority in the hands of one man and putting it in his power to take the work away from the Government Printing Office if there is a division of sentiment between him and the Public Printer as to the promptness with which the work is being done.

The second objection to this amendment relates to the quality of the work and the price. If they disagree upon that, then it is left under the amendment for the Director of the Census to take the work away from this great printing establishment that is conducted by the Government and let private parties do it.

It is not my purpose, Mr. President, to make any lengthy argument upon this question. I simply desire to challenge the attention of Senators to the amendment, and I shall content myself by voting against it. It seems to me that it ought not to be adopted without every Senator understanding the scope and character of the amendment itself. And I believe if Senators do understand it it will not be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CLAY. As I stated, my colleague [Mr. BACON] has been necessarily called away from the Senate, and he has sent to me an amendment. In his behalf I submit it, and ask for its adoption.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia proposes on behalf of his colleague an amendment, which will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 8, after the semicolon following the word "Navy," insert:

Also each case of intermarriage between a white person and a person of either whole or partial negro blood, specifying whether the husband or the wife in such marriage is of negro blood.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I offer an amendment to section 7.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 7, page 4, line 19, after the word "employees," the last word in the line, insert:

Except messengers, assistant messengers, messenger boys, watchmen, unskilled laborers, and charwomen.

In line 20 strike out "non" in the word "noncompetitive."

Mr. LODGE. The two portions of the amendment, I will say, Mr. President, go together.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this amendment puts the 4,000 clerks or thereabouts (I think the estimate is 4,000, that part of the force which is clerical) under competitive examination, and I suppose in that way opens them to the eligible lists of the civil service.

I call attention to the care with which the amendment has been drawn. The selection of 65,000 enumerators by Congress is not interfered with. The high privilege of appointing messengers, assistant messengers, messenger boys, watchmen, unskilled laborers, and charwomen is carefully reserved to Congress. This simply applies to the clerical force. It is to put them in substantially what is the classified service, and it is on that that I desire to say a few words.

I have seen the growth of the classified service during the comparatively short period I have served in the two Houses of Congress until practically all the routine officers of the Government have been placed under competitive examination and have been removed from the danger of political changes.

I think the establishment of that system is now beyond dispute. I do not think anyone would propose to go back to the system which existed before 1883. I do not think the country would endure it for a moment. I doubt if, with our enormously increased government service, it would be possible.

I think, Mr. President, it has been demonstrated that this disposition of the public service has, on the whole, worked extremely well. I think the work of the Government has been well done. I think it has been less expensive, and I think that, despite certain absurdities which have occasionally emanated from the rulings of the commission, it has been justly operated.

My own observation is that, with few exceptions, the clerks who do well are never heard of by Senators and Representatives and never trouble them. They secure their own promotions by merit, and they have no occasion to come to us. Those who do come to us for support—not in all cases, but in most cases—are those least deserving.

The old system, as is well known, was that of political appointment. It has been given to very few American statesmen with the exception of Webster, who is an exception to all rules in that respect—it has been given, I say, to very few American statesmen, indeed to a statesman anywhere, to utter a phrase which will come down the current of the years and become so generally accepted that even the author of it is often forgotten. Mr. Marcy declared that "to the victor belongs the spoils." The idea was not a particularly new one, but it was tersely expressed. He used the imagery of war to cover the results of the political battles. He meant by it that to the party victorious in the political battle the spoils belonged, and that offices were spoils.

Mr. Marcy's proposition, however unsound, as has been pointed out in the House, at least rested on the theory that the offices should go to the party which had won at the polls. We have gone a little beyond that in the arrangement that is in this bill. We have left behind us Mr. Marcy's theory of spoils going to the victorious party. We propose to treat the offices as personal perquisites. We on both sides are to have an equal share. I do not know whether it was the fact that if all did not have an equal share it might be feared that this excellent arrangement would fail; but at all events, they are to be divided among members of all parties, and therefore they are to become ours, not in the capacity of victors but in the capacity of Senators and Representatives, because, Mr. President, whatever fine words are used in the bill about examinations and all that, everybody knows that when you make the examination noncompetitive it becomes practically worthless. It amounts to a "pass" examination, and the people who are recommended are sure to pass.

Mr. President, let me anticipate an argument which I foresee, having had a good deal of experience in discussing this somewhat unpopular subject, at least discussing it from the unpopular side. I do not mean the unpopular side in the country particularly, but the unpopular side in Congress. I am aware that it will be said to me, and to any others who take the same view of this question that I do here to-day, "Why, you seek offices, and you will seek positions under this act." That is perfectly true, Mr. President. Of course I shall. Every Senator and Representative will be obliged to do so, because otherwise he would be put in the position of having his constituents shut out from any opportunity of obtaining this class of government employment because the Senator or the Representative in the other House is constituted the only channel of approach. I am now approaching the subject, not from a view of general principle, but from an entirely selfish point of view. I remember a good many years ago, when this subject was under debate in the other House, and when the establishment of the civil service on its present basis was very far from being certain, that Mr. Speaker Reed, who very much disbelieved in what was called "civil-service reform," and frequently made it the mark of his wit, said to me, after the debate had taken place in the House:

If you will put it squarely on the ground of its usefulness to us and its good sense from the selfish point of view I am ready to go with you.

I want to put it for a moment on that ground.

We throw open these 4,000 clerkships for appointment by Senators and Representatives. I am putting it in a brief form. There is no use taking the phrases of the bill about that. That is what it means. Those clerks are to be appointed by Senators and Representatives. We shall, all of us, every one of us on both sides, be harried to death by applications for those places. I do not want to rate my function and calling too highly, but I do feel, Mr. President, that a Senator of the United States and a Representative of the people in the other House has something better to do than to haunt anterooms and persuade directors of censuses to give him employment for clerks, messengers, and charwomen. It is a burden from which I, for one, want to be relieved, and I think many other Senators and Representatives dislike it as much as I do.

It is not as though the question of system was at stake here. We are clinging to the remnants of a system that is dead and gone and buried and trying to pick out from the remains of the dead system a few appointments as personal perquisites. We shall all do it. I shall do it like everybody else. I claim no virtue whatever in that respect, but I am trying to put the case as it appears to me.

I have just had an experience in that very direction. The Immigration Commission, of which I happen to be a member, was obliged to employ a few clerks, thirty or forty, in order to make certain tabulations—temporary employments for a few months. Fortunately we were able, having the Chief of the Bureau of Labor among our membership, to get some men detailed from the department who were thoroughly competent. We were able to get a few others that were good. We have been flooded with applications for those few temporary places. One case I recall of a woman recommended by a gentleman very distinguished in the public service. She came to the office and stayed half an hour. She was shown to her desk and given some work to do. She said she did not understand that she had to write and to make figures, and she went out and did not return. That is an extreme case, but it illustrates exactly the point that I am going to make. Most of the people who will in the end get these places will not be our constituents. They will be drawn from the body of professional office seekers who live in this city and who haunt this Capitol; people who, as a rule, have failed in private business and have been utterly unable to get or retain employment; who can not pass an ordinary examination to get into the public service, but who by importunity succeed, with the aid of friends, in getting appointments where no proper examination is required to test their fitness.

We are to take up in the spring the great business of revising the tariff. I have taken part in three revisions of the tariff and in one attempted revision. It was the hardest work I have ever seen Congress called upon to do, but I will venture to say that there will be a greater expenditure of time and temper for every man in either House of Congress caused by trying to distribute these 4,000 clerkships than will be caused by all the great schedules of the tariff, heavy as that burden is.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LODGE. With great pleasure.

Mr. CLAPP. Being in hearty sympathy with the Senator, I want to ask him why it would not be well enough to strike out the word "non" without inserting the exceptions?

Mr. LODGE. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that, if I had my way, I would have the other classes selected in just the same way. I would confine it to striking out the "non," but I do not wish to be too drastic; I do not wish to seem unreasonable in denying to Congress the opportunity to select charwomen.

I now want to come to the matter of expense, Mr. President. The facts are all stated here in the report of the committee and in the evidence which they took. There are only one or two statements to which I desire to call attention. Col. Carroll D. Wright, who had charge of the Census Bureau for some years after the census of 1890, estimated that leaving those appointments as it is now proposed to leave them cost the Government $2,000,000 and more than a year's time; that if they could have been taken in the ordinary way, there would have been a saving of two years' time in the production of the census and of $2,000,000 to the Government. Colonel Wright says:

> I do not hesitate to say one-third of the amount expended under my own administration was absolutely wasted, and wasted principally on account of the fact that the office was not under civil-service rules. * * * In October, 1893, when I took charge of the Census Office, there was an office force of 1,092. There had been a constant reduction for many months and this was kept up without cessation till the close of the census. There was never a month after October, 1893, that the clerical force reached the number then in office; nevertheless, while these general reductions were being made, and in the absence of any necessity for the increase of the force, 389 new appointments were made.

When that force was being reduced day by day and month by month, there were forced in 389 new appointments, compelling the Director of the Census to get rid of that number of clerks who had had the experience of that census, and who had originally been appointed on the same system. They could not even hold their wretched places through one census, but they had to be turned out to gratify some other persons.

Mr. Robert P. Porter, who was the Director of the Census for 1890, wrote on February 19, 1908, as follows:

> The efficiency of the decennial census would be greatly improved and its cost materially lessened if it were provided that the employees should be selected in accordance with the terms of the civil-service law.

There is the evidence of two Directors of the Census.

Doctor Billings, one of the most eminent physicians, statisticians, and writers on medical topics and on public hygiene in the country, who was in charge of the division of vital statistics of the Eleventh Census, says:

> The whole of my work in the census has been done in the face of great obstacles, owing to repeated changes of clerks for political reasons, etc., and I am tired of struggling with the most unpropitious circumstances that have surrounded the work.

And the present director begs to be relieved from what it is proposed to put upon him.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. RAYNER. He says he is tired of struggling with it. I beg the Senator's pardon, but I think he will find that Doctor Billings says:

> I am tired of struggling with the most unpropitious circumstances.

Mr. LODGE. Is that what Doctor Billings said?

Mr. RAYNER. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. I see. He says:

> I am tired of struggling with the most unpropitious circumstances that have surrounded the work.

The testimony is overwhelming from everybody who is best fitted to express an opinion that selecting clerks in this way adds enormously to the expense of taking the census. There is evidence here from Henry T. Newcomb, chief of the division of agriculture in the Census Office, who said:

> It was far easier, in my own experience, to obtain a score of additional clerks at an annual cost of from $14,000 to $24,000 than to secure an expenditure of $1,000 for supplies which would save the labor of 20 clerks.

There is no question, Mr. President, that if appointments are made as provided in this bill, it will add enormously to the expense. The work will be delayed, but it will be done well in the end, because most of it will be done over by competent persons and by the permanent force.

It is poor administrative policy to put appointments in the hands of Members of the House and of Senators, to give them the power to make appointments with no responsibility, and place upon the men whom we charge with the work all the responsibility with no power over the instruments which they are forced to take into their hands, because, if they undertake to remove for inefficiency a clerk who has come in there by personal influence of a Senator or a Member of the House, they will be forced, out of mere weariness if nothing else, to retain the inefficient clerk, so much pressure will be put upon them to do it. They have the responsibility and we have the power.

Mr. President, that is not a good principle of administration. Under the classified service, if a clerk is inefficient he can be removed. Under this bill, if it shall become a law, he can be removed theoretically, but as his appointment rests not on his efficiency but on his influence, practically the power of removal is taken from the director, or is so diminished as to be of little avail in maintaining discipline.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator let me ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. Would not the members of the House and of the Senate be importuned by clerks selected under the rules of the Civil Service Commission who were dismissed for incompetency on charges being preferred against them the same as if they were chosen by noncompetitive examination?

Mr. LODGE. By no means, Mr. President. The whole departmental service now, and all the time, is under the civil service. Occasionally there is a case where a man or a woman who has been a clerk and been dismissed comes and asks our interference. They are very few indeed, comparatively speaking. But when the position of the clerks rests wholly on influence and not in the least on efficiency, they are bound to rest their case for retention on the thing which has put them there. In the one case it is their efficiency that puts them there and holds them there, while in the other case it is their influence that puts them there and holds them there. In the one case they will make an effort, at least, that the efficiency which has brought them there shall maintain them there; in the other case, they will do the same thing—they will use the influence that has brought them there to keep them in the place.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LODGE. I do, with pleasure.

Mr. BURKETT. I am not combating the Senator's suggestion as to the advisability of having examinations to originate appointments, but I want to ask him as to the practicability of the proposition he has suggested of clerks under the civil service being dismissed for incompetency?

Mr. LODGE. That can be done.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the Senator if he knows of any instance where any clerk in the service anywhere ever has been dismissed for incompetency?

Mr. LODGE. I have known of some, because they came to me and asked to be restored, but I think that I have known of comparatively few in my own experience.

Mr. BURKETT. Perhaps those who come from the State I represent in part have not been incompetent——

Mr. LODGE. The chances are that most of them are competent.

Mr. BURKETT. But I heard the head of a department, in a hearing before the Committee on Appropriations, say that 20 per cent of the clerks in his department were incompetent, and yet he had not removed them.

Mr. LODGE. There is nothing to prevent him doing so. I should like to know whether the incompetent ones came in under the present system or whether they are the ones left over from the old system who are superannuated.

Mr. BURKETT. They are all in the civil service, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. But there are a great many in the civil service who were covered in by law who never came in under civil-service regulations. Also it is to be remembered that under our system men and women are kept there after they have become pretty old and pretty infirm. We have had investigations as to that, as the Senator knows.

Mr. BURKETT. The only point I was directing my interrogatory to was as to the practicability of the suggestion the Senator made that incompetent people could be removed.

Mr. LODGE. There is not any doubt of that.

Mr. BURKETT. My experience, not only in Washington, but elsewhere, is that under the system as it exists it is impossible to remove an incompetent clerk. If the Senator can find any way to do it, I should be glad to have him inform some of the departments of it.

Mr. LODGE. There is a letter here from the Civil Service Commission which covers that precise point.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator allow me a moment while he is looking for the letter?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. LODGE. I will if the Senator wants to ask me a question.

Mr. SCOTT. I wanted to say, in line with what was stated by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT], that when I was Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Dingley law was passed it put upon me the duty of appointing hundreds of clerks. Those clerks were, at my request, recommended by Members of the House of Representatives and members of the Senate. I have been told only recently that those clerks, since they have been put under the classified service, have been a model lot of clerks; have done their work splendidly, much better than the clerks who came in after examination and certification by the Civil Service Commission. I believe that if a Senator or a Member of the House is put upon his honor to name the proper persons for these census appointments the Director of the Census will be likely to get a better class of clerks than he will get by making application to the Civil Service Commission or even by examination.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, my experience in the matter of appointments has been slight, and that of the Senator from West Virginia, who was at the head of a large executive bureau, has been great; but I have seen the process in the employment of clerks of the immigration commission, who were appointed by recommendation. I am sure we could have gotten a better force from the eligible list, and I am perfectly certain, from the instances that I have seen, that clerks were recommended for employment under that commission without any fitness at all for the place, but from importunity or from personal interest. There was no improper motive whatever, but it was done because the men who urged the appointments had no responsibility. That is the trouble. A Member of the House or a Senator recommends a poor clerk, and the work is bad. The responsibility does not fall upon him. The responsibility falls upon the head of the office and is paid for by the people of the United States. That is the general expression of opinion. We have got to rest on that.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is it not a fact that at the last census examination was had, and, while it was a noncompetitive examination, were not the questions such as to elicit information as to the capability of any person taking that examination? Was there not another requirement in that examination that such persons should have a certain standing in order to pass? If such standard was sufficient, what objection, then, could there be to that system of having a noncompetitive examination, providing the examination brought out only efficient persons?

Mr. LODGE. Because the examination provided under the last census was like the examination to be provided by this bill. It was totally worthless. It did not produce any effect. I will read what Mr. Wines says.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know what effect it did produce, but I have gone over the questions that were propounded and the character of examination, and I am absolutely certain that anyone who passed that examination was capable and able to fulfill the duties of the office.

Mr. LODGE. If they passed on the examination papers the Senator has seen, I have no doubt they were capable; but I will reply to that. I am very glad the Senator brought it out.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. LODGE. I should like first to answer the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I could hardly assume that the officer examining would report improperly.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I will tell him just what was done. I read from the letter of Mr. Wines, who is a well-known statistician, and who was at one time Assistant Director of the Census. He says:

> The bureau conducted its own examinations.

That is what is proposed here—

> I am free to admit that the result was unsatisfactory, for the following among other reasons:

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will excuse me, I desire to get this in:

> (1) The examinations held were not free to the public. The permission of the director was an essential prerequisite to admission to them, and the obtaining of such permission was a matter of personal favor, depending upon "influence."
>
> (2) In making selections from the list of those who passed the examination, no attention whatever was paid to their comparative rating. It was a "pass" examination pure and simple, and a rating of 75, with proper political or other indorsement, was sufficient to secure an appointment, where a rating of 100 would count for nothing without it.
>
> (3) There were numerous instances in which an unsuccessful applicant was granted a second, third, or fourth trial, at the request of some Senator or Representative; and, to the best of my knowledge and belief, it occasionally happened that the rating made by the examiner upon the papers filed was arbitrarily changed after they left his custody.
>
> (4) The general method of appointment may be described as follows: A mathematical scale was worked out by which the number of "assignments" to each Senator and Representative was determined in advance, so many appointments to a Senator, a smaller number to a Representative, half as many to a Democrat as a Republican, and in Democratic States and congressional districts the assignments were made to the Republican state and district committees.

That is no matter. But if the Senator did me the honor to listen to the first three statements read, he will see why the examination paper, no matter what it was like, amounted to nothing.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. LONG. The Senator is referring to the last census. I call his attention to the fact that under the bill reported by the committee the examination will be conducted by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, so long as the power rests with the director; so long as the examination is noncompetitive; so long as all that is needed is a "pass," we shall have the ratings of the Civil Service Commission changed just as the ratings of the Census Bureau's own board were changed.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. LODGE. I do, with pleasure.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand that ten years ago Members of Congress were notified that they had so many men to appoint; that they might send in so many names, and of the number that passed so many would be appointed, those who passed highest being given the preference.

Mr. LODGE. That was not the case. Excuse me; I did not mean to contradict abruptly. That is not the way it worked in practice.

Mr. CURTIS. That is the plan that was followed or that is what was done in our State. I want to say that the appointees from the district I then had the honor to represent in the other House were men of the highest character, many of them school-teachers, who filled their places well. I think the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts does the men and women appointed from Kansas very great injustice.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am making no accusations, for I know nothing whatever about what was done. I am not the head of the census. I am merely quoting heads of the census who were responsible for the work.

Mr. CURTIS. Let me ask the Senator if he believes that there is a Senator on this floor who would ask a department to hold in office an incompetent clerk?

Mr. LODGE. I am afraid, Mr. President, since the Senator asks me that question, that we have all of us in both Houses done it a great many times. [Laughter.]

Mr. CURTIS. I would like to have it stated in the RECORD that, so far as I am concerned, I have said to the Director of the Census and to other executive officers that if I recommended any person who proved to be incompetent I wanted him discharged. I would not ask to have such a person retained in the service. I think that is the principle that should be followed by every Senator upon this floor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas has been extremely fortunate if he has never recommended in good faith or urged in good faith the retention of a clerk appointed in that way whose superior officer thought incompetent. I think it is a good fortune that has not befallen many of us in our experience. My experience is that the clerks who seek influence are more or less incompetent. I think it is very seldom that the good clerks—the many who rise steadily through the grades—trouble a Representative or a Senator at all.

Mr. President, I have occupied the floor much longer than I intended. I make no charges against the work of the clerks, for personally I know nothing about it. I was not charged with the direction of the census; but all the men connected with that census—I mean men in authority, such as Mr. Porter, Colonel Wright, Mr. Wines, Mr. Newcomb, and Doctor Billings, all men of the highest standing—claim that it was expensive; that it was wasteful; that the work was bad; that the work was delayed; and that it was owing to the fact that they were obliged to take clerks who were not picked out by a proper system, but who were picked out on the personal recommendation, no doubt, in almost all cases sincere, of gentlemen who are not responsible for the work.

The number of banking houses or railroad companies or any other great businesses who take men simply because a Representative or a Senator recommends them is few. They demand in the first place the best of recommendations; they examine the man's record; and then they require him to come up to the standard. But they can defy a man who makes a recommendation or whose favorite or friend is removed. The Director of the Census and these other officers who are dependent on Congress for their appropriations and dependent upon Congress for being able to carry along their work at all are unable to do that.

Mr. President, I think it is a burden we ought not to put on the Director of the Census. I take him merely because this is the case in hand. I do not think we ought to put on any public officer a burden of this kind. His desire is to make the best possible census, and his time will be largely consumed in the endless questions of disposing of this patronage—persons begging him to appoint an applicant, trying to get another examination for somebody who has failed, pressure of all kinds. We are all familiar with it; we all know what it is; and it consumes his time and will consume his time for months and weeks—that and the correspondence—time which he ought to be enabled to give to the duties of his important place.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I am decidedly in favor of this amendment, and I hope it will be adopted. It is a step forward in the line of good government, in my judgment. The bill is a retreat. This is an advance. It takes a list of important places out of the arena of politics and puts them where they ought to be—upon the level of merit.

I want to add one or two extracts, and perhaps I will repeat something to which the Senator from Massachusetts referred. I want to take this statement of Mr. Wines. The Senator from Massachusetts, I think, has already quoted it.

Mr. LODGE. I quoted a portion of it.

Mr. RAYNER. He says:

> In making selections from the list of those who passed the examinations, no attention whatever was paid to their comparative rating. It was a "pass" examination pure and simple.

Take that in connection with his other statement:

> A rating of 75, with proper political or other indorsement, was sufficient to secure an appointment, where a rating of 100 would count for nothing without it.

I want to add a statement made by Mr. Robert P. Porter, superintendent of the Eleventh Census:

> Why transfer the census office at the busiest season into an examination department for clerks and a director of a vast scientific investigation into a dispenser of political patronage?

What does this noncompetitive examination mean? It simply means, when analyzed, that there are 483 Senators and Representatives in Congress, and that these 3,000 offices, or whatever the number may be, are to be substantially distributed among them. If they were equally distributed, each member would get about six places; but as the dominant party will control the appointments, the minority may be well satisfied if each member gets one place or less than that for his constituents.

Let us look at it practically. There will be any number of applicants for these places. What is the result? The overwhelming portion of them will be disappointed. You can not tell me that we will look around and procure the best-qualified persons for these places. The chances are that the best-qualified persons may not, as is often the case, possess the political influence that will enable them to secure the help of their Representatives.

We might as well tell the truth about the situation. If every member of Congress would conduct an examination, as is often the case with the cadetships at the Military or Naval Academy, the result might be different. But you know, and I know, that with the urgent demands that will be made upon us we will hasten the appointment of the few that we have selected, in order to escape the importunities of those equally deserving and perhaps of greater merit who will stand no chance whatever in the lottery of distribution. This is not right, and we can not make it right. A competitive examination is fair to everyone. Honestly conducted, as it should be, no one will have ground for complaint or criticism.

Mr. President, I have not extreme views upon this subject. I do not think that the civil-service system is of divine origin, nor do I believe that every civil-service reformer is necessarily inspired. Most of them are men of the highest standing and character in the various communities in which they reside, but I know some of them, quite eminent in their calling, who are only human. In fact, upon a close and critical examination, I have come to the conclusion that civil-service reformers were created in just the same way that other people were created, notwithstanding any protestations to the contrary. I am inclined to think that they came into existence with other mortals in the last period of the earth's development, and that in the plan of the universe there was no special day set apart for their isolation from the rest of mankind. You take the Civil Service Commissioners, a body of highly respectable and estimable gentlemen. I find upon a close analysis that they have traits and even peculiarities in common with the balance of humanity. For instance, they walk and talk and sleep and absorb the ordinary sustenance and nourishment that are necessary to keep animal life from being in a state of absolute suspension. Even the President of the United States, who was once upon a time the most eminent civil-service reformer of his generation, has never permitted that great system to stand between himself and his friends; and I believe to-day that, with all the sublime and exalted virtues that the President possesses, if this amendment were to pass and the editor of the New York Sun or the New York World or the Indianapolis News was to apply for a place in the Census Bureau, they would not, if left to their choice, select the President to pass upon their examination papers.

In citing these instances I merely want to emphasize the fact that in supporting this amendment I am not led away by any fantastic views in regard to the entire purification of our political surroundings through civil-service channels. On the other hand, I admire the men who, like the senior Senator from Massachusetts, have at all times advocated this system from patriotic motives, because they have conceived it to be in the interest of public progress and political morality and good government. But I have never reached the height that I could look down with lofty disdain and contempt upon the men who think otherwise, and charge them upon every occasion when they are opposing a movement of this sort with an attempt to lower and degrade the public service of the country. There are plenty of high-minded and honorable men in Congress who believe that they can furnish occupants for every vacant office in the United States just as well qualified as any that can be selected under the strictest examinations that can be had for that purpose, and who really consider that an entire change of office, with a change of political parties, would inure to the benefit of the country. I do not agree with them, but I am entirely tolerant of their convictions upon the subject.

While, therefore, I am not a fanatic upon this subject and believe that the system in its construction, and especially in its execution, is full of defects and imperfections, I will nevertheless take it in preference to any plan that will keep the public service of the country in a continual state of commotion and turbulence and absolutely unfit it to perform the functions for which it was designed.

I am, therefore, in favor of this amendment, because I believe in the civil-service system. It would amount to political anarchy to again hang up in the departments the motto, "To the victors belong the spoils." In my opinion, we will never return to this condition of barbarism. I can conceive, with great respect for the opinion of those who differ with me, of no greater calamity that could befall our institutions than this. Such a system now, with the vast amount of offices that exist, would turn our cabinet officers and the heads of our departments into dispensers of public patronage; would seriously interfere with them in the performance of their public duties; would turn Members of Congress into a clan of political barons, each with a retinue of attendants who would hold under him by tenure of political service; would divert us from the performance of duties assigned to us by the Constitution and the laws; would virtually disfranchise from holding office every intelligent and honorable citizen who has not the advantage of political influence; and would degrade the public service of the country and convert its departments into a battlefield, with their offices, not as trusts to be administered in the interest of the people, but as trophies to be captured from a vanquished enemy.

With a full perception, therefore, of the imperfections of the civil-service system, both as constituted and executed, it has so far the advantage of the system embodied in this bill that I shall, whenever and wherever the contest occurs, vote in favor of giving every honest and well-qualified citizen of this Republic the right to enter the lists and, without fear or favoritism or political influence, submit his qualifications to the test, so that his qualifications alone shall be his only credentials and the only legitimate passport to public office in this country.

Mr. CLAPP. I offer a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, and ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota proposes a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. The substitute will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 20, page 4, section 7, it is proposed to strike out "non."

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate. I simply wish to call attention to the fact that every argument which was made in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, it seems to me, is in favor of the substitute. The effect of the substitute would be to put the appointments in the classified service, whereas the amendment would except a very large number.

I do not myself believe that the civil service has reached perfection, or anything near it. It may be improved in many ways; it has its weak spots; but we have started along that line and I do believe we ought not now to take any backward step.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the Senator from Minnesota for the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The substitute was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire to say a word before we have a vote on the amendment.

I am not at all particular how this question goes, so far as I am personally concerned. I would rather escape having any appointments thrown on my hands. I have no desire whatever to make appointments from my State, but when the Senator from Massachusetts indicates that under the bill, as it now reads, we will make most of our appointments from the city of Washington, whereas under the civil service they would be made from our homes, he makes a statement that I hardly believe comports with the facts in the case and with our experience of the civil service. I believe that under the system very few appointments would really come from the States. I believe, under the system which the Senator desires, three-fourths of them would not come from the States which would be entitled to have recognition with respect to those appointments.

As the appointments were made ten years ago, if I had 4 persons to recommend, those persons had to take an examination, and they had to be examined thoroughly, and if their examination was not correct or thorough it was the fault of the office and not of the system. Under the present bill the examinations will be made by the Civil Service Commission. I have no reason to believe that that examination will not be honestly conducted, and if it is honestly conducted then no one who is recommended will be incompetent for that particular place.

There is another weakness in the civil service which I may mention, and that is that it does not reach the worthy person as often possibly as some other system would. For instance, here is a young boy who may have a sick mother or a widowed mother to look after. One's heart naturally goes out to him. He may pass an examination and attain a percentage of 83½, and somebody whose grandfather lived in your State, but who himself is living in the city of Washington, while claiming he is still a resident of your State, may take the examinaton and stand one-quarter better and get appointed; and there may be 4 or 5 or 6 members of that family in government employ at the present time. I would recommend the boy most worthy of the place, and if he stood the examination he would get it. I believe that is superior to the civil service in the way it works to-day.

I want any Senator to look over the people who are charged to his State to-day under this beautiful civil-service system and see how many are actual residents of that State. I remember when I first came here I was shown a list of those who had been certified from my own State. I found among those a gentleman with whom I talked. He said that his son-in-law at one time took up a claim in my State, but had left it many years ago, and he had passed through there, but had never lived there again in his life. And yet he was certified as from my State, because a man can have his residence in his own mind rather than where he actually resides. Take a man who came from Maine thirty years ago. He calls Maine his residence, and his children and grandchildren and great-grandchildren, although they may only have visited Maine once or twice, still claim to be residents of the State of Maine, and they take the examination, and although four-fifths of such persons are residents of the city of Washington, they are appointed, while you have plenty of worthy persons in that State who can not get certified because there are ten to one right here in the city of Washington who are being certified day after day.

Under this system, while one actual resident of my State may take the examination, it will be taken by ten residents of the city of Washington, claiming to be residents of that State. I would have one as against the ten to secure a position. The weakness of the whole system is that we are building an official aristocracy here in the city, a great organization of people who simply hold official positions and are absolutely unfit for any other purpose, and we are paying them from twice to three times as much as for the same service they would receive in our own States; and when we ask for any other position for the State the Civil Service Commission says the State has all it is entitled to, although not one out of ten who are certified as belonging to that State are actual residents of it.

I believe in the civil service; I believe in the examination of people for every official position and departmental place, but I do not believe in this system of selecting them all from the city, as is proposed in this bill after you knock out the noncompetitive examination, because it will then provide that anyone having had any service may be selected by the director, and as at a time when there was great pressure for employees we got some two or three thousand from the city, those would have the first opportunity to make application and say they have had the experience, and they would be selected under your bill and under your civil-service provisions.

I believe we ought to modify our civil-service law so as to require every person who is certified from a State to take his or her examination in that State and to show that he or she has had an actual domicile in that State for at least one year. Then the civil service at least would be more respectable in the eyes of most persons. Everyone knows as well as the Senate knows that we are not getting a just distribution among the several States, and I believe, with the provisions that are in this bill for a proper examination by the Civil Service Commission, that no one can say that the office will be under the spoils-of-office system.

Mr. LONG obtained the floor.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I should like to ask a question or two of the chairman of the committee. Is the committee informed as to the number of employees now on the permanent roll of the Census Bureau?

Mr. LONG. I do not know as to the exact number now. There will be about thirty-five hundred necessary for clerical positions for the taking of the next census.

Mr. DOLLIVER. How long will it be necessary to employ this extra force?

Mr. LONG. Not longer than two years.

Mr. DOLLIVER. What will become of those who are appointed?

Mr. LONG. They will retire to private life at the end of their employment if not eligible by reason of their service for appointment in the permanent service.

Mr. DOLLIVER. If they are selected from the civil-service lists of eligible candidates, what will become of them when the work ceases?

Mr. LONG. I presume they would desire to be retained in the service.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Would the service be called on to absorb the extra 3,500 persons, regardless of whether the Government had anything for them to do or not?

Mr. LONG. I do not know what the service would be called upon to do. Undoubtedly there would be a great desire on the part of those employees to be retained in the service.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Is the chairman sufficiently familiar with the way those things are done to be able to state whether there is any record of anybody who went into the service through the regular civil-service examination ever having disappeared from it on account of the want of something for him to do?

Mr. LONG. If there is such a record, I do not know of it.

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to what is probably an inadvertence. In line 17, page 5, there is a provision with respect to the expiration of employment. That provision takes out of the civil service not only those who may have been appointed from outside the service for this work, but, as I read it, it takes out of the civil service those who are in the civil service and are transferred to this work. Am I correct about that?

Mr. LONG. Those from the permanent census will be returned at the end of the decennial census period.

Mr. CLAPP. It says:

That at the expiration of the decennial census period the term of service of all employees so transferred and of all other temporary officers and employees appointed under the provisions of this act shall terminate.

Mr. LONG. In line 8, if the Senator will notice, it says:

And at the end of such service the employees so transferred shall be eligible to appointment to positions of similar grade in any department without examination.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator is correct. I overlooked that clause.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I do not desire to protract the debate, because it is my desire to secure the passage of the bill before adjournment this evening, if possible; but I wish to say in addition to what has been said by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], a member of the committee, that this is a temporary force to perform emergency work. It is so recognized even by those who seek to change the provisions of this bill. The law applicable to the civil service and to general appointments in the departments is inapplicable to this service, as is recognized by the Senator from Massachusetts, who presents this amendment. First, the law of apportionment is abrogated by this bill, and to that no objection is made by the Senator from Massachusetts. Second, the director may, in his discretion, take the records of those who have had service in the Census Office in lieu of any examination, and no objection is made to that provision.

The Senator says that there will be inefficient work; that it will have to be done over by those in the permanent Census Office. If there is work of that kind, if incompetent persons get appointments under the provisions of this bill, it will be the fault of the Civil Service Commission.

It is not necessary in this connection to advert to what has been done in previous censuses, where the examinations were conducted by the Director of the Census. This bill provides that the forthcoming examination is to be conducted under the Civil Service Commission, and an eligible list will be created of those who, under the certificate of the Civil Service Commission, are found by that commission to be competent, and only those whom that commission find to be competent are eligible to appointment by the Director of the Census. So if incompetent persons find their way into the Census Office under this provision, as reported, it will be the fault of the Civil Service Commission, which conducts the examination.

As I understand this provision, the examination will be open to all. The qualifications will be prescribed by the Director of the Census, but the examination will be conducted by the Civil Service Commission, and an eligible list created of competent persons for appointment. Then, if the Director of the Census in selecting persons from that eligible list wishes to call to his assistance the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Maryland, I think he should not be censured for endeavoring to procure information in addition to what might be disclosed by the grade of those who have passed the examination.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator will allow me to say, on the point about the Civil Service Commission conducting the examination, no fault has been found with the examination papers furnished. Their conducting the examination amounts to nothing, because their grading is wholly disregarded. Their grading counts for nothing. If a man passes it at a hundred, it does not do any good.

Mr. LONG. I understand, and it was the understanding of the committee and the understanding of the Director of the Census, that only persons who have passed a certain required examination and who possess the qualifications prescribed by the Director of the Census shall be appointed.

Mr. LODGE. Who is going to fix what shall constitute the qualifications?

Mr. LONG. The Director of the Census prescribes the examination, but the Civil Service Commission says whether or not persons have passed that examination, and if they have not passed it they can not be appointed. If they have passed it, they are qualified under the judgment and intent of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. du PONT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. du PONT. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas if there is any provision in the bill by which those who pass to the highest places on the eligible list shall have the preference of appointment.

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. LONG. There is no such provision. Those who have passed the examination are eligible to appointment.

Mr. LODGE. The man who goes in from the outside and passes at 95 and has no political support does not get the appointment. The man who passes at 70 or 75, whatever grade is fixed, and has a recommendation passes. That is the practical test. We all know it.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from Massachusetts was certainly more successful then, ten years ago, than my colleague and myself. There was a captain who went out in the volunteer service to the Philippine Islands and took the examination at the first opportunity, and they allowed him 5 per cent because of his military service. He passed at 68, and I went to the office repeatedly, and so did my colleague, and we could not get the man in because he had not come up to 70 per cent. Somebody had better luck than we had.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask for a vote on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question, with the permission of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. It is whether his amendment makes any provision as to the tenure of office under the appointment through a civil-service examination?

Mr. LODGE. The tenure is all carefully provided for, so that no fault is to be found with the arrangement.

Mr. BACON. I am speaking so far as adaptation to being put in the classified service is concerned.

Mr. LODGE. No, Mr. President; I do not confer anything on them at all. They are left under the same provisions of the bill, which are perfectly good as far as the tenure goes. The provisions of the bill in regard to tenure are entirely good.

Mr. BACON. I will state the point in my mind; I may not have given the matter proper examination. We know of course what are the provisions of the general civil-service law as to tenure of office. In the Census Office the services are irregular. The clerks in the Agricultural Department or in the Post-Office Department are going to have continuous service and consequently they have a certain tenure of office, but in the Census Office it is different. A large force is going to be needed for a short time, a less force for a longer time, and a still less force will be needed permanently.

Mr. LODGE. That is quite true.

Mr. BACON. Now, does the civil-service classification, which the Senator's amendment contemplates, make provision for these differences in terms under the civil-service law?

Mr. LODGE. No, Mr. President; that is all provided for in the bill as it stands. The bill ends the appointment of these persons at a certain time, but I understand it makes them all eligible for transfer.

Mr. BACON. It makes them all eligible for transfer?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Into the regular civil service?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; as I understand it.

Mr. LONG. No; only those who have had service in other departments in the classified service. It applies only to those who have been transferred from other departments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. DIXON. I should like to ask a question for information. Under the proposed bill, as reported by the committee, will the Civil Service Commission hold examinations in the different States, to be thrown open to everyone?

Mr. LONG. That is my undertanding of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. DIXON. Then it depends upon the Representative and Senator to designate from the list of those who have passed?

Mr. LONG. It depends on the director.

Mr. DIXON. In other words, that is side stepping.

Mr. LONG. The Director of the Census makes the appointment from the eligible list.

Mr. DIXON. From those who have passed at 75 and above?

Mr. LONG. On the examination which he has prescribed and which the Civil Service Commission has conducted.

Mr. DIXON. So every person in a State can take the examination held by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Is it dealing in good faith with the public to say that everyone is eligible to take the examination when, in point of fact, only those are to be selected who are agreeable to certain Congressmen?

Mr. LONG. Only those will be selected whom the Director of the Census finds competent and selects.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield further to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LONG. With pleasure.

Mr. DIXON. I should like to remark that while some of us from the Far West have very little in the shape of patronage, if the bill contemplates an invitation to every man and every woman in my State to take the examination and get 100 people on the eligible list and then throw on Representatives and Senators the responsibility of taking four or five from the hundred candidates, I think we would be far better off to put it under the civil service straight.

Mr. LONG. The responsibility is on the Director of the Census.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The chairman of the committee, in answer to a question from the Senator from Montana, said the examinations were to be conducted in the various States. I understood that to be his reply. What portion of the bill does the Senator refer to in making that statement? The portion under consideration simply says the examination shall be conducted under the direction of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. LONG. That is true. It was inserted because the Civil Service Commission has the machinery extending throughout the different States for conducting the examinations and the Director of the Census has no such machinery.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The examination is to be conducted in the various States, if that plan suits the convenience of the Civil Service Commission; otherwise it will be conducted here at the office?

Mr. LONG. Yes; if it is prescribed by the Director of the Census; but there is little doubt that it will be held throughout the country at large.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. There is a question I should like to have answered. I understand that under the provisions of the bill as framed by the committee the tenure of office of those who shall be appointed to this service will cease at a fixed time; how will it be if the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts shall be adopted placing certain persons within the civil service proper? Their tenure of office then would not cease under this act. It would depend entirely upon the general civil-service law. Would they not go on the eligible list, and would they not be entitled to a transfer?

Mr. LONG. The question would be as to whether the general civil-service law would obtain or whether this provision would control.

Mr. FULTON. I understand that where one has entered the civil service and received an assignment and for any reason his service terminates, not because of incompetency, but if the position is abolished, for instance, he is qualified for a transfer to any other place.

Mr. LONG. Eligible to appointment inside of a year.

Mr. FULTON. If we place this under the civil service, as proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, will not that be the position occupied by all those persons so placed under the civil service? Will they not be eligible to appointment and transfer?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. If I understood the Senator's inquiry, striking out the word "non" would not affect the subsequent provision, which terminates the office. The work is to terminate on the taking of the census, and they would go out just the same as though they were selected under the plan provided for in the bill.

Mr. LONG. That is the provision of the bill. The question is whether it would control or whether the general law relating to the civil service would control.

Mr. CLAPP. This does not place them directly under any general law. It simply says that they shall be selected upon a competitive examination.

Mr. FULTON. Suppose the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts be adopted, what will be the difference?

Mr. CLAPP. There will not be any difference.

Mr. FULTON. The men hold their relation to the civil service and get their rating. Will their position be the same then as the others who are provided for under the bill as it is?

Mr. CLAPP. As to striking out the word "non," I think, if the Senator will take the bill and examine it, he will be satisfied that it would not change or affect the tenure of office; and that is what the Senator is getting at.

Mr. FULTON. It is not. I want to understand what would be the effect of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts on the status of the people embraced within the terms of the proposed amendment at the conclusion of this particular service.

Mr. CLAPP. That relates to the tenure. It would terminate at the end of the service, under the provisions of page 5 of the bill.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to understand the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. I understand that if the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is adopted, it is true that the tenure of office will cease at the time mentioned, but would not the parties who had passed the civil-service examination still remain in the classified service?

Mr. LODGE. No; the Senator is entirely mistaken.

Mr. CLAPP. They are not placed in the classified service under the bill.

Mr. WARNER. I know they are not placed there expressly by the terms of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. They go back to the eligible list.

Mr. WARNER. The very fact that they take the civil-service examination under the law makes them eligible for appointment.

Mr. LODGE. If they pass the civil-service examination and go on the eligible list, of course they return to the eligible list.

Mr. WARNER. They can not be appointed unless they are on the eligible list?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly not.

Mr. WARNER. And they are not taken off?

Mr. LODGE. The object of the bill as it stands is to get people appointed who are not on the eligible list.

Mr. WARNER. The object of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is to get men appointed who are on the eligible list.

Mr. LODGE. Who are or will be there.

Mr. WARNER. Who will be there.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know what special eligible list it will be, but it will be a list of men who passed the regular civil-service examination.

Mr. WARNER. The suggestion, to my mind, is that when they are upon the eligible list the tenure of their employment terminates at the end of three years and they will remain on the eligible list for one year thereafter, eligible to appointment. I can see no other construction.

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. LONG. I ask for a vote.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, just a moment. I think the Senator from Massachusetts is mistaken, because here is the express provision at the end of the section:

And such officers and employees shall not thereafter be eligible to appointment or transfer into the classified service of the Government by virtue of their examination or appointment under this act.

Mr. LODGE. I think the Senator is right.

Mr. CLAPP. There can not be any question about that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts. Upon that question the Senator from Massachusetts demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TELLER. Let the amendment be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 19, after the word "employees," at the end of the line, insert "except messengers, assistant messengers, messenger boys, unskilled laborers, and charwomen;" and in lines 20 and 21, strike out the word "noncompetitive" and insert the word "competitive," so that as amended it will read:

That the additional clerks and other employees, except messengers, assistant messengers, messenger boys, watchmen, unskilled laborers, and charwomen, provided for in section 6 shall be subject to such competitive examination as the Director of the Census may prescribe, the said examination to be conducted by the United States Civil Service Commission.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PILES (when Mr. ANKENY's name was called). I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. ANKENY] on account of illness at his home in the State of Washington.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DANIEL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], and for that reason I do not vote. I would vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who is absent. For that reason I withhold my vote.

Mr. FULTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. I transfer my pair to my colleague [Mr. BOURNE], who is also absent, and I vote "nay."

Mr. SCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO]. As he is not in the Senate, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]. I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM] and vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SCOTT. I understand that if the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO] were here, he would vote "nay." As I would vote "nay," I will take the liberty of voting in his absence. I vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], who is absent, and I vote "yea."

Mr. DANIEL. I transfer my pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], and I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—15.

Brown	Crane	Dolliver	Newlands
Burkett	Depew	du Pont	Rayner
Clapp	Dillingham	Kean	Richardson
Clay	Dixon	Lodge

NAYS—32.

Aldrich	Foster	Kittredge	Piles
Bacon	Frye	Long	Scott
Burnham	Fulton	McCumber	Simmons
Clark, Wyo.	Gamble	McEnery	Stephenson
Cullom	Gary	Milton	Sutherland
Cummins	Hale	Nelson	Teller
Curtis	Hemenway	Overman	Warner
Daniel	Hopkins	Perkins	Warren

NOT VOTING—45.

Ankeny	Culberson	Johnston	Platt
Bailey	Davis	Knox	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Dick	La Follette	Smith, Mich.
Beveridge	Elkins	McCreary	Smoot
Borah	Flint	McLaurin	Stone
Bourne	Foraker	Martin	Taliaferro
Brandegee	Frazier	Money	Taylor
Briggs	Gallinger	Nixon	Tillman
Bulkeley	Gore	Owen	Wetmore
Burrows	Guggenheim	Page
Carter	Hansbrough	Paynter
Clarke, Ark.	Heyburn	Penrose

So Mr. LODGE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURKETT. I offer an amendment, on page 6, line 8, after the word "navy," which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 8, page 6, line 8, after the word "navy," it is proposed to insert "and if under 18 years of age, whether ruptured, crippled, or deformed," so as to read:

The schedules relating to population shall include for each inhabitant the name, relationship to head of family, color, sex, age, conjugal condition, place of birth, place of birth of parents, number of years in the United States, citizenship, occupation, whether or not employer or employee, school attendance, literacy, and tenure of home and whether or not a survivor of the Union or Confederate Army or Navy; and if under eighteen years of age, whether ruptured, crippled, or deformed; etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 9, 1909, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 8, 1909.

APPRAISER OF MERCHANDISE.

John D. Pringle, of Pennsylvania, to be appraiser of merchandise in the district of Pittsburg, in the State of Pennsylvania, in place of Fred W. Edwards, resigned.

RECEIVERS OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Robert H. Sims, of New Mexico, to be receiver of public moneys at Las Cruces, N. Mex., vice Henry D. Bowman, resigned.

William M. Enright, of Billings, Mont., to be receiver of public moneys at Billings, Mont., vice Chauncey C. Bever, resigned.

CONSUL-GENERAL.

William H. Robertson, of Virginia, now consul of class 8 at Gothenburg, to be consul-general of the United States of class 6 at Tangier, Morocco, vice Hoffman Philip, promoted to be minister resident and consul-general to Abyssinia.

CONSULS.

James W. Johnson, of New York, now consul of class 9 at Puerto Cabello, to be consul of the United States of class 7 at Corinto, Nicaragua, to fill an original vacancy.

Herbert R. Wright, of Iowa, lately consul of class 9 at Utila, to be consul of the United States of class 9 at Puerto Cabello, Venezuela, vice James W. Johnson, nominated to be consul of class 7 at Corinto.

SECRETARY OF LEGATION.

Fred Morris Dearing, of Missouri, now second secretary of the legation at Peking, to be secretary of the legation of the United States at Habana, Cuba, vice Charles S. Wilson, promoted to be secretary of the legation at Buenos Aires.

SECRETARIES OF EMBASSIES.

William K. Wallace, of Colorado, to be third secretary of the embassy of the United States at Tokyo, Japan, vice Leland Harrison, nominated to be second secretary of the legation at Peking.

Leland Harrison, of Illinois, now third secretary of the embassy at Tokyo, to be second secretary of the legation of the United States at Peking, China, vice Fred Morris Dearing, nominated to be secretary of the legation at Habana.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Commander James C. Gilmore to be a captain in the navy from the 7th day of January, 1909, vice Capt. Uriah R. Harris, promoted.

The following-named citizens to be second lieutenants in the United States Marine Corps from the 6th day of January, 1909, to fill vacancies existing in that grade on that date:

Wilbur Thing, a citizen of Maine;
Edwin H. Brainard, a citizen of Connecticut;
Alfred A. Cunningham, a citizen of Georgia;
Alley D. Rorex, a citizen of Alabama;
Samuel M. Harrington, a citizen of the District of Columbia;
Harold L. Parsons, a citizen of New York;
Chester L. Gawne, a citizen of New York;
Dwight F. Smith, a citizen of Vermont;
Thomas E. Thrasher, jr., a citizen of Texas;
Ernest A. Perkins, a citizen of Michigan;
Randolph T. Zane, a citizen of Pennsylvania;
Clarence C. Riner, a citizen of Wyoming;
Leon W. Hoyt, a citizen of Ohio;
David S. Combes, a citizen of the District of Columbia;
Julian C. Smith, a citizen of Maryland;
Alfred McC. Robbins, a citizen of the District of Columbia;
Charles J. Miller, a citizen of Wisconsin;
Otto Becker, jr., a citizen of Missouri;
Leander A. Clapp, a citizen of Massachusetts;
William S. Harrison, U. S. Marine Corps;
Robert W. Voeth, a citizen of Kansas;
Thomas S. Clark, a citizen of New York;
Clarence E. Nutting, a citizen of Massachusetts;
Bernard L. Smith, a citizen of Virginia;
Edward A. Blair, a citizen of Maryland;
Edward M. Reno, a citizen of Pennsylvania;
Joseph C. Fegan, a citizen of Texas;
Adolph B. Miller, a citizen of the District of Columbia;
Armor S. Heffley, a citizen of Indiana;
Joseph D. Murray, U. S. Marine Corps;
Woolman G. Emory, a citizen of Maryland;
George H. Osterhout, jr., a citizen of Maine;
William J. Platten, a citizen of Wisconsin;
John Q. Adams, a citizen of Maryland;
Francis T. Evans, a citizen of Ohio;
Charles G. Sinclair, a citizen of Virginia;
Allen E. Simon, a citizen of Pennsylvania:
Samuel P. Budd, a citizen of Pennsylvania;
Donald F. Duncan, a citizen of Missouri;
Alexander A. Vandegrift, a citizen of Virginia;
Ralph E. Davis, a citizen of Illinois;
Harry W. Weitzel, a citizen of Kentucky;
Clarence W. Alger, a citizen of South Dakota;
Sidney N. Raynor, a citizen of New York;
Frederick R. Hoyt, a citizen of New Hampshire;
James T. Reid, a citizen of South Carolina; and
Fred S. N. Erskine, a citizen of Massachusetts.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

Lemuel A. Carroll to be postmaster at Slocomb, Ala. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

ALASKA.

Lulu J. Maddocks to be postmaster at Fairbanks, Alaska, in place of John P. Clum, resigned.

CALIFORNIA.

William S. Collins to be postmaster at Loyalton, Cal., in place of William S. Collins. Incumbent's commission expires January 9, 1909.

George A. Griffin to be postmaster at Tuolumne, Cal., in place of George A. Griffin. Incumbent's commission expired December 12, 1908.

FLORIDA.

Louis Wiselogel to be postmaster at Marianna, Fla., in place of Louis Wiselogel. Incumbent's commission expired December 15, 1908.

GEORGIA.

Pearl Williams to be postmaster at Greenville, Ga., in place of Cebron D. Williams, removed.

IDAHO.

Joseph R. Collins to be postmaster at Moscow, Idaho, in place of Joseph R. Collins. Incumbent's commission expires February 27, 1909.

ILLINOIS.

Oscar H. Harpham to be postmaster at Havana, Ill., in place of Oscar H. Harpham. Incumbent's commission expired December 16, 1908.

William M. McDonald to be postmaster at Chandlerville, Ill., in place of William M. McDonald. Incumbent's commission expires January 9, 1909.

Leander W. Niles to be postmaster at Bethany, Ill., in place of Leander W. Niles. Incumbent's commission expires January 9, 1909.

KANSAS.

James W. Crawford to be postmaster at Little River, Kans. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

Ulysses S. Davis to be postmaster at Morrill, Kans. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

Bert Fancher to be postmaster at Claflin, Kans. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

James Hall, jr., to be postmaster at Miltonvale, Kans. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

KENTUCKY.

John H. Meyer to be postmaster at Newport, Ky., in place of John H. Meyer. Incumbent's commission expired January 13, 1906.

James M. Wilson to be postmaster at Falmouth, Ky., in place of James M. Wilson. Incumbent's commission expired May 7, 1906.

MAINE.

Roy M. Hescock to be postmaster at Monson, Me. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

John C. Nichols to be postmaster at South Windham, Me. Office became presidential January 1, 1908.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Charles M. Hoyt to be postmaster at Haverhill, Mass., in place of Horace I. Pinkham. Incumbent's commission expires February 23, 1909.

Frederic Robbins to be postmaster at Watertown, Mass., in place of Frederic Robbins. Incumbent's commission expires February 14, 1909.

MICHIGAN.

Maynard Palmer to be postmaster at River Rouge, Mich., in place of Maynard Palmer. Incumbent's commission expired December 12, 1908.

MINNESOTA.

Charles H. Hamilton to be postmaster at St. Louis Park, Minn. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

Charles A. Lee to be postmaster at Morris, Minn., in place of Justin Berkin. Incumbent's commission expired December 14, 1907.

John P. Lundin to be postmaster at Stephen, Minn., in place of John P. Lundin. Incumbent's commission expires January 18, 1909.

MISSOURI.

Edwin S. Brown to be postmaster at Edina, Mo., in place of Edwin S. Brown. Incumbent's commission expires February 27, 1909.

Otis M. Gary to be postmaster at Doniphan, Mo., in place of Otis M. Gary. Incumbent's commission expires February 23, 1909.

Bayless L. Guffy to be postmaster at Hayti, Mo., in place of Robert N. Hillard, removed.

NEBRASKA.

Charles W. Gibson to be postmaster at Litchfield, Nebr. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

NEW JERSEY.

Isaiah Apgar to be postmaster at Califon, N. J. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

Alfred B. Gibb to be postmaster at Bernardsville, N. J., in place of Reuben Abel. Incumbent's commission expires January 9, 1909.

Uzal S. Hancy to be postmaster at Franklin Furnace, N. J. Office became presidential April 1, 1905.

Howard V. Locke to be postmaster at Swedesboro, N. J., in place of Howard V. Locke. Incumbent's commission expires January 20, 1909.

Charles W. Russell to be postmaster at New Brunswick, N. J., in place of Charles W. Russell. Incumbent's commission expired March 24, 1908.

NEW YORK.

William Hutton, jr., to be postmaster at Nanuet, N. Y. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

Harry R. Porter to be postmaster at Sonyea, N. Y. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

Daniel Smiley to be postmaster at Mohonk Lake, N. Y., in place of Daniel Smiley. Incumbent's commission expired December 13, 1908.

John Smythe to be postmaster at Cold Spring, N. Y., in place of John Smythe. Incumbent's commission expired December 15, 1908.

Wallace H. Wells to be postmaster at Brasher Falls, N. Y. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Robert W. Davis to be postmaster at Southport, N. C. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

OHIO.

James R. Hicks to be postmaster at Amelia, Ohio. Office became presidential July 1, 1908.

Percy May to be postmaster at New Holland, Ohio. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

OKLAHOMA.

Daniel Strawn to be postmaster at Idabel, Okla. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

PENNSYLVANIA.

William M. Toy to be postmaster at Austin, Pa., in place of Frank E. Baldwin, resigned.

PORTO RICO.

Walter K. Landis to be postmaster at San Juan, P. R., in place of Walter K. Landis. Incumbent's commission expires January 14, 1909.

WASHINGTON.

Jacob T. Grove to be postmaster at Deer Park, Wash. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Lynn Kirtland to be postmaster at Sistersville, W. Va., in place of George E. Work, resigned.

WISCONSIN.

Matthew O'Regan to be postmaster at National Home, Wis. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate January 8, 1909.

Daniel R. Randall to be postmaster at Annapolis, Md.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 8, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Tuesday next be substituted for to-day for the consideration of pension bills on the Private Calendar that are in order to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that Tuesday next may be substituted for to-day for the consideration of pension bills in order to-day. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 22306. An act to authorize the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company and the Lackawanna Railroad Company of New Jersey to construct and maintain a bridge across the Delaware River from a point near the village of Columbia, Knowlton Township, Warren County, N. J., to the village of Slateford, Northampton County, Pa.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 653) to authorize commissions to issue in the cases of officers of the army retired with increased rank.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed resolutions in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 59.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause preliminary examination or survey to be made of the Colorado River in the vicinity of the city of Needles, Cal., with a view to protecting the said city from encroachment of the said river.

Senate concurrent resolution 58.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimates to be made for a project of improvement of the Columbia River, in the State of Oregon, in front of the town of Hood River, and report the same to the Congress.

Senate concurrent resolution 56.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause such survey and examination to be made at the mouth of the Siuslaw River, in Oregon, as may be necessary in order to determine what project for its improvement can be completed by the expenditure of $100,000 in addition to a like amount to be provided by the residents of that locality.

Senate concurrent resolution 54.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made of the channel from the sea to the Norfolk Navy-Yard, with a view to widening and straightening the same and increasing the depth thereof to 35 feet at mean low water, with width of present project, and to submit estimates for such improvement to that depth.

SEC. 2. That an examination and survey be made and estimates submitted for a channel 22 feet deep at mean low water from the Norfolk Navy-Yard to a point about 1 mile above Gilmerton.

SEC. 3. That an examination and survey be made and estimates submitted with a view to providing ample anchorage room abreast of and above Lamberts Point, between Lamberts Point and Pinners Point.

Senate concurrent resolution 53.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made of the channel from Fortress Monroe to Newport News, with a view to providing for a depth of 35 feet at mean low water and a width of 800 feet, and to submit estimates for such improvement.

The message also announced that the Vice-President had appointed Mr. BAILEY and Mr. FRAZIER members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Post-Office Department.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, the following Senate concurrent resolutions were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

Senate concurrent resolution 53.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made of the channel from Fortress Monroe to Newport News, with a view to providing for a depth of 35 feet at mean low water and a width of 800 feet, and to submit estimates for such improvement—

to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Senate concurrent resolution 54.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made of the channel from the sea to the Norfolk Navy-Yard, with a view to widening and straightening the same and increasing the depth thereof to 35 feet at mean low water, with width of present project, and to submit estimates for such improvement to that depth.

SEC. 2. That an examination and survey be made and estimates submitted for a channel 22 feet deep at mean low water from the Norfolk Navy-Yard to a point about 1 mile above Gilmerton.

SEC. 3. That an examination and survey be made and estimates submitted with a view to providing ample anchorage room abreast of and above Lamberts Point, between Lamberts Point and Pinners Point—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Senate concurrent resolution 56.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause such survey and examination to be made at the mouth of the Siuslaw River in Oregon as may be necessary in order to determine what project for its improvement can be completed by the expenditure of $100,000 in addition to a like amount to be provided by the residents of that locality—

to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Senate concurrent resolution 58.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimates to be made for a project of improvement of the Columbia River, in the State of Oregon, in front of the town of Hood River, and report the same to the Congress—

to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Senate concurrent resolution 59.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause preliminary examination or survey to be made of the Colorado River in the vicinity of the city of Needles, Cal., with a view to protecting the said city from encroachment of the said river—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

ANNUAL MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT—SECRET SERVICE.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution, and ask that it be reported by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers a privileged resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the annual message of the President contained the following paragraph:

"Last year an amendment was incorporated in the measure provided for the Secret Service, which provided that there should be no detail from the Secret Service and no transfer therefrom. It is not too much to say that this amendment has been of benefit only, and could be of benefit only, to the criminal classes. If deliberately introduced for the purpose of diminishing the effectiveness of war against crime it could not have been better devised to this end. It forbade the practices that had been followed to a greater or less extent by the executive heads of various departments for twenty years. To these practices we owe the securing of the evidence which enabled us to drive great lotteries out of business and secure a quarter of a million of dollars in fines from their promoters. These practices have enabled us to discover some of the most outrageous frauds in connection with the theft of government land and government timber by great corporations and by individuals. These practices have enabled us to get some of the evidence indispensable in order to secure the conviction of the wealthiest and most formidable criminals with whom the Government has to deal, both those operating in violation of the antitrust law and others. The amendment in question was of benefit to no one excepting to these criminals, and it seriously hampers the Government in the detection of crime and the securing of justice. Moreover, it not only affects departments outside of the Treasury, but it tends to hamper the Secretary of the Treasury himself in the effort to utilize the employees of his department so as to best meet the requirements of the public service. It forbids him from preventing frauds upon the customs service, from investigating irregularities in branch mints and assay offices, and has seriously crippled him. It prevents the promotion of employees in the Secret Service, and this further discourages good effort. In its present form the restriction operates only to the advantage of the criminal, of the wrongdoer. The chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret-service men. Very little of such investigation has been done in the past; but it is true that the work of the secret-service agents was partly responsible for the indictment and conviction of a Senator and a Congressman for land frauds in Oregon. I do not believe that it is in the public interest to protect criminals in any branch of the public service, and exactly as we have again and again during the past seven years prosecuted and convicted such criminals who were in the executive branch of the Government, so in my belief we should be given ample means to prosecute them if found in the legislative branch. But if this is not considered desirable a special exception could be made in the law prohibiting the use of the secret-service force in investigating members of the Congress. It would be far better to do this than to do what actually was done, and strive to prevent or at least to hamper effective action against criminals by the executive branch of the Government."

Understanding this language to be a reflection on the integrity of its membership, and aware of its own constitutional duty as to its membership, the House in respectful terms called on the President for any information that would justify the language of the message or assist it in its constitutional duty to purge itself of corruption.

The President in his message of January 4 denies that the paragraph of the annual message casts reflections on the integrity of the House; attributes to the House "an entire failure to understand my message;" declares that he has made no charge of corruption against any Member of this House, and by implication states that he has no proof of corruption on the part of any Member of this House.

Whether the House in its resolution of December 17, 1908, correctly interpreted the meaning of the words used by the President in his annual message, or whether it misunderstood that language, as the President implies, will be judged now and in the future according to the accepted interpretations of the English language. This House, charged only with its responsibility to the people of the United States and its obligation to transmit unimpaired to the future the representative institutions inherited from the past, and to preserve its own dignity, must insist on its own capacity to understand the import of the President's language. We consider the language of the President in his message of December 8, 1908, unjustified and without basis of fact and that it constitutes a breach of the privileges of the House: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the House, in the exercise of its constitutional prerogatives, declines to consider any communication from any source which is not in its own judgment respectful; and be it further

Resolved, That the special committee and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from any consideration of so much of the President's annual message as relates to the Secret Service, and is above set forth, and that the said portion of the message be laid on the table; and be it further

Resolved, That the message of the President sent to the House on January 4, 1909, being unresponsive to the inquiry of the House and constituting an invasion of the privileges of this House by questioning the motives and intelligence of Members in the exercise of their constitutional rights and functions, be laid on the table.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, to your committee were referred certain portions of the annual message of the President of the United States. We were to consider whether those were couched in such form that this Congress could consider them with a due regard for the dignity of a great legislative body. Your committee has examined that question with the care that its importance demands, with due regard for the rights of the Chief Executive, with due regard for the rights of the Congress, and we are unanimously of the opinion that the portions of the message objected to do constitute a breach of the privileges of this House. [Applause.] We have submitted the resolution which has just been read by the Clerk, and which embodies the opinion and constitutes the report of the committee to which this question was referred.

Mr. Speaker, with the question of the use of the secret-service men, your committee has nothing to do. We fully recognize the right of the President to criticise legislation adopted by Congress, to point out its defects, and to ask that they be remedied. The Congress will consider that question and take such action as in its judgment the interests of the public may require. And yet, in passing that, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say one word, in which I know I state the opinions of the special committee and in which I believe I utter the opinion of the entire membership of this House, and that is, that in the integrity, in the honest judgment of every member of the Appropriations Committee, this House has had and still has the utmost confidence. [Applause.]

We are to consider certain statements in the message in reference to the motives which controlled the vote of Members and certain suggestions in reference to legislation which are submitted to us. The President in his message said, criticising the provision in reference to the use of secret-service men, which was adopted by the Congress, that—

The chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret-service men.

If that was the chief argument, it meant that by that argument were the votes of the majority of Congress controlled in favor of that provision. In that opinion your committee is unable to coincide. Let us consider for a moment what was said in reference to this question in the debate in the House. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] asked this question: "If it was intended that if a Member of Congress was guilty of unbecoming conduct the department would be warranted in investigating his conduct by secret service men?" The gentleman from Kentucky spoke in favor of the proposition before the House, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], opposing the proposition, replied that we all knew, as lawyers, that we were not federal officeholders; that we were component members of the Government, and there was no one over us. Then the gentleman from Kentucky further said that, notwithstanding the opinion of the gentleman from New York, he had understood that in one instance the private conduct of a Member of Congress had been investigated by secret-service men, and the gentleman from New York denied that one lone and solitary instance, and said that in that case the investigation was not by secret-service men, but by a police officer of the city of Washington, and, if I remember right, he said that the police officer of the city of Washington was dismissed from the service as a reward for his pains. And that is all contained in the RECORD. Your committee do not believe that the most timorous of Congressmen would be affected by those arguments to cast his vote in favor of the proposition from any fear that if he voted "no" the Secret Service might ferret out his secret sins. But we are told that there is another piece of evidence that leads to the conclusion that it was by that argument that the votes of the Members were controlled. What is that evidence? Is it found in the records of the House? No. Is it found in the reports of speeches made upon the floor of this House? No. It is exhumed from the columns of a newspaper published years before the Members of the Sixtieth Congress had even been elected. Your committee does not believe that a statement made in 1904, even by a newspaper reporter, is conclusive evidence of the motives which governed the votes of Congressmen in 1908. [Applause.] And, Mr. Speaker, if we should turn back to the consideration of a message transmitted but a few days ago to us on the subject of the Panama Canal, it would appear that statements made in newspapers are sometimes questioned even at the White House. [Laughter and applause.]

The statement made that the chief argument was that Congressmen themselves were unwilling to be investigated by secret-service men can have but one meaning. It means that the Members of the House voting for this proposition were controlled by an improper motive. If the vote of any Congressman is controlled by fear of investigation of his conduct by secret-service men or by any other men, then that Congressman surely stands in dread of the law. [Applause.] If the majority of this House were controlled in their vote by fear that their actions may be investigated and their crimes discovered, then any respect for this House would not only be impaired, but it would be destroyed. It is dangerous for the Republic—how dangerous perhaps only the future can disclose—that the confidence of any large part of the people should be shaken in the judges who interpret the law, and it is equally dangerous that their confidence should be shaken in the legislators who enact the law [applause]; and it is for this reason that the duty rests upon a great legislative body to see that the integrity of its motive is not lightly questioned. If we do not respect ourselves, certainly no one will respect us. We are tenacious for the honor of the nation. Shall we not be equally tenacious for the honor of our institutions? Mr. Speaker, if the day ever comes when the majority of this House will be controlled in its action by the craven fear of the exposure of their conduct, then, indeed, the Republic will have come to an evil day and the failure of popular government will be demonstrated. That day is not come. Doubtless in the Congress of the United States are sometimes found unfit and dishonest men, but with rare exceptions the members of the Congress are men of integrity, whose votes are determined, not by fear of the police, but by an honest regard for the public service. We are the chosen representatives of the people of the United States. Many of us have been continued for long years, either at the polls or by the votes of the legislatures.

I am unwilling to believe that popular government, that universal suffrage are such lamentable failures, that dishonest or unfit or cowardly men are continued in office. In this matter we stand not only for ourselves, but for those who sent us here. The impeachment of those who are chosen is the impeachment of those who choose. [Applause.] The President says that no one holds the dignity of the Congress in higher respect than he. How much it would be deplored, how much I am sure the President himself would regret, if expressions in his message should remain unanswered, which by any unfortunate inadvertence of phrase, any untoward combination of words, would be interpreted by the public as reflecting upon the dignity and lessening the influence of this House. Mr. Speaker, the President says in his message:

> I do not believe that it is in the public interest to protect criminals in any branch of the public service, and exactly as we have again and again during the past seven years prosecuted and convicted such criminals who were in the executive branch of the Government, so, in my belief, we should be given ample means to prosecute them if found in the legislative branch.

And with that sentiment of the President this committee and this Congress is in fullest accord.

But—

Adds the President—

> if this is not considered desirable—

What is not considered desirable? What he has just said—that criminals should not be protected in any branch of the service; that he should be given ample means to prosecute them if found in the legislative branch.

Says the President:

> But if this is not considered desirable, a special exception could be made in the law prohibiting the use of the secret-service force in investigating Members of the Congress.

In other words, it is suggested that we pass legislation which shall protect ourselves and let the other criminals be caught. [Applause.] If a majority of this body were indeed controlled by fear of detection of their crimes, that would be just the legislation they would be glad to support. As such is not the character of the body, such legislation can not be considered. Is there any member of the Congress who is willing to say that the suggestion of such legislation should be meekly received and mildly considered? [Applause.] If the Congress listens tamely and timidly to reflections upon the character of its members and the integrity of its own motives, it will deserve, and certainly it will receive, the contempt of the community. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, for centuries English-speaking men fought and bled that representative government should be the government of the English people. Our revolutionary ancestors more than a century ago fought and bled that representative government should be the government of this land, that the laws of the American people should be enacted by representatives chosen by the American people. The Congress of the United States to-day, with its great power and its great responsibility, is the result of centuries of struggle. Let every man who is a member of it this day vote on the question that is presented in the manner that seems to him worthy of the traditions of which we are the heirs, of the institutions of which we are the protectors, and of the people of whom we are the representatives.

I reserve the balance of my time. [Great applause.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; surely.

Mr. BENNET of New York. At what time does the gentleman intend to move the previous question on his resolution?

Mr. PERKINS. It is the intention of the committee that there should be full debate on this question. I have no thought of moving the previous question until there has been every reasonable opportunity for debate.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I wish my colleague would yield for a question.

Mr. PERKINS. I will yield for a question.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I requested yesterday a copy of these resolutions, but did not get it. It is really one of my objections, and about the only objection I have, to the rules of this House, that we can not have the day before some notice of bills and resolutions coming before the House. If we had had this resolution yesterday we would have had time to consider it, and perhaps act and vote more dispassionately than we can now. Now, I ask my colleague from New York whether it would not be wise, in view of the fact that these resolutions are just presented, and in view of the fact that there is considerable excitement here to-day [laughter], and the galleries full of interested people, having submitted this resolution, to let it stand for a week and have consideration at that time?

Mr. PERKINS. I will answer the question of the gentleman by saying that I do not think it would be wise at all. [Applause.]

Mr. DRISCOLL. I think we might all cool down and act with more fairness and better judgment in the matter than we can now.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is the only excited man in the House. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] yield to his colleague [Mr. DRISCOLL]?

Mr. PERKINS. I will yield for a question, but I think the question already asked is exhausted. I will say in answer to my colleague from New York that this matter is thoroughly familiar to every Member of this House, and has been since the time of the introduction of the first resolution. I see no evidences here to-day of heat or passion. The resolutions presented by the committee have been drawn with great care and with extreme moderation. I am sure my colleague will agree that nothing in the few remarks I have made has savored of heat or passion, and I see no reason why the House should not proceed with the further consideration of the resolutions. I yield to my colleague from Michigan [Mr. DENBY].

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Speaker, we are confronted this morning with the most painful duty that has fallen to the lot of this House since I have been a Member.

December 8 last the House received the annual message of the President. It contained a discussion of an amendment made at the last session to the sundry civil bill in connection with the Secret Service. In that discussion the President used language which was regarded very generally by the membership of the House as highly offensive.

December 17 the House in respectful terms called upon the President to furnish any justification he might have for the statements he had made. January 4 he replied in a special message, the character of which was unworthy of his great office and unbefitting a state paper. It is greatly to be regretted that the President should have seen fit to mention by name certain members of the Committee on Appropriations, not with a view to expose corruption, but merely to criticise them for their official actions in their legislative capacity. The President does not agree with the committee, but surely he can not claim the right to hold up to public ridicule in a state paper every Member whose views or actions do not exactly accord with his own ideas. As a matter of fact, whether always right or sometimes wrong in their recommendations, I think I voice the general view when I say that the chairman and members of that committee, bearing as they do untainted and undisputed credentials from intelligent and patriotic communities, have won and have fully deserved the respect of the American people. [Loud applause.] No one not associated with the work of this House can well appreciate the multitudinous detail and exceeding difficulty of their work. That they do that work well can not be disputed, and that they are upright, able, and industrious gentlemen, worthy Members of this House, and not deserving the condemnation of the Executive, can not be questioned here and should not be questioned elsewhere. [Applause.]

Furthermore, it is a dangerous precedent to set, that the Members of this House may properly be criticised in a message because they failed to agree with the Executive upon a question of public policy. It is a precedent I feel sure in future will be "more honored in the breach than in the observance."

To-day your special committee offers a resolution intended to make clear the attitude of this House toward the Executive when in the exercise of a constitutional privilege he strays from the path of recommendation and just criticism into the realm of personal abuse, speculation, and innuendo. [Loud applause.]

The purport of the resolution is that the House itself must be the judge of the propriety or impropriety of the language of communications addressed to it, and must act accordingly. So much a branch of the Government, coordinate and coequal with all other branches, must insist upon; and when the House of Representatives receives a communication couched in unfitting terms, and that communication is neither withdrawn nor explained nor atoned for, it becomes the duty of the House to decline to consider such communication, from whatever source it may come. [Applause.] The resolution seems to be as simple and as little offensive in its terms as the English language and the just demands of this occasion will permit. Personally, I have not the slightest desire that this House shall show resentment toward the President for his apparent purpose to arouse in the public mind contempt and suspicion for this body. Still less do I desire that this House shall reply in kind to the language of the message. [Laughter and loud applause.]

Now that the whole painful episode nears its end, I may say that the most distressing feature is that the President of the United States, justly honored and beloved as he is throughout the land, should so little appreciate the effect of his own words and should apparently so little consider his own great fame. It seems scarcely credible that he can have failed to realize, and yet I know he must have failed to realize, that in encouraging in the popular mind distrust of this body he is striking at the very foundation of popular government. [Applause.] I am glad to believe that had another official of high authority and great position ventured to employ the language he has used the President would have been the first to deplore and to rebuke. He has lost a great opportunity—an opportunity to display the possession of one great attribute of true greatness—the capacity to realize when he has done injustice and the willingness to correct that mistake.

I desire now only earnestly to express the hope that this resolution may pass, to the end, in so far as we can compass that end, that the three great branches of the Government—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial—may remain, as they always have been, independent, coequal, self-respecting, and mutually respected. [Loud and long-continued applause.]

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman reserve the remainder of his time?

Mr. PERKINS. I reserve the balance of my time, and suggest if anyone desires to be heard in opposition to the resolutions this would be a fitting opportunity.

The SPEAKER. That would be the rule of recognition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In what order is the debate proceeding? As I understand it, each member of the committee has the right to an hour's time, if he chooses to use it. Is that correct?

The SPEAKER. Upon recognition, each Member who is recognized in his own right is entitled to an hour; but somebody is entitled to recognition now who is opposed to the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But nobody was opposed on the committee. It is a unanimous report.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is therefore nobody on the committee who can represent the opposition to the resolution. It seems to me that somebody ought to be recognized to control the time in opposition.

The SPEAKER. Every Member who is recognized is entitled to one hour, and it being a unanimous report of the committee, the Chair will recognize some Member opposed to the resolution.

Mr. BENNET of New York rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] proceeds, I would like to ask unanimous consent to a proposition. I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] is to represent the opposition to the resolution.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The understanding of the gentleman from Mississippi is not exactly correct. The gentleman from New York is to express his views as a Member of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I should like to find out who will represent the opposition, in order to ask unanimous consent that the time be equally divided between the proponents of the resolution and those opposed to it.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I may add, if I have in any way misled the gentleman from Mississippi, that I intend to speak against the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent, then, that the time in opposition be controlled by the gentleman.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, no; this is an unlimited debate.

Mr. PAYNE. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the perfectly innocent and good-humored attempt of mine to find out who could possibly control time on the other side appears to have failed, I will withdraw the request.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ascertain who opposes the resolution. If no one opposes it, members of the committee would be first entitled to recognition. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] oppose the resolution?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise in the frame of mind recommended to this House by my friend and colleague from New York [Mr. PERKINS] to discuss this matter without heat and without bitterness, and I trust with the dignity that befits an occasion which has had no parallel in forty years.

My colleague has done me the honor and justice to quote with substantial accuracy the words which I used in the debate on the 1st of May to express the high opinion in which I held and still hold both the dignity and the membership of this House. I then stated and now maintain that there is none over us; that we are a component part of the Government of the United States, the legislative branch, our own masters, and not the holders either of a state or of a federal office. Holding those views, then, which none can hold higher of the House and of its membership, I rise to express my regret at the resolution proposed by the committee of which my colleague [Mr. PERKINS] is chairman. The gentleman from Illinois, interrupting rather irregularly the question of my colleague from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL], said that none seemed to be excited in this House except the gentleman from New York.

I might add that so far as my personal communications from my district have gone, none seem to have been excited over this particular portion of the President's annual message except the membership of this House. If it had not been noticed in the way that it was by the membership of this House, in twenty-four hours the country, then having, and still having, the highest confidence in the integrity of the membership of this House, would have forgotten that any such language had ever been used, either by the Chief Executive or by any other person.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DENBY] speaks of the historical character of this proceeding, and in a way he is right. But, unless he has given special study to the question, I should hesitate to ask him to rise in his place and state the reasons which were expressed in the Senate of the United States for taking a similar action in relation to Andrew Jackson, or in this House for taking a somewhat similar action in relation to President Tyler. The trouble is that, though we may so express it, these actions have little of historical significance, and I venture the prophecy that the student of history who, twenty-five years from now, looks up the record of Theodore Roosevelt will find that our action to-day plays no more part in the view held of him historically than the action of our predecessors here plays in the view held in history of President Tyler, or than the action of the predecessors of our colleagues in the Senate detracts from the estimate of the character of Andrew Jackson.

It is, then, to ourselves and to those who sent us here, and of them, that we are to speak mainly to-day. The language by the President has been quoted. I deny that, standing alone, it reflects upon the majority of this House. Does not my colleague, and do not the Members of this House, can they not realize other motives, assuming the worst significance of the President's message, which would actuate a Member of this House in desiring to go upon record as being opposed to the investigation of this House as a body, or as individuals, by members of the Secret Service? It seems to me that standing as we do alone, a dignified body, with the control of our own membership, we have the right to assert at any time that we have not lost confidence in our own integrity and in the judgment of the people who have chosen us; that we can control the actions of those who may be unworthy; and that we need no assistance from the outside, from the Secret Service or any other place, to keep our membership pure.

If it is not correct, how can we explain to the public the action this House took in the Fifty-ninth Congress when we did except ourselves from the operation of a criminal statute. I speak from a slight investigation of the RECORD, and under correction of the gentleman from Texas, Mr. BURLESON, if I speak erroneously, I will state it. In the Fifty-ninth Congress he introduced a bill, following the cotton-leak scandal, which, as he said in picturesque language on the floor, was intended to cover every officer in the public service from the President to the charwoman. At some stage of the procedure of the two Houses the words "Members of Congress" were added to the classes of persons who became criminals by giving out advance information relative to the products of the soil.

This House, by a decisive vote, when that bill came back from conference, laid the bill on the table. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] introduced a new bill in substantially the same form, omitting "Members of Congress" from the list of those who would become criminals by giving out advance information; and in that form it passed both Houses, I believe, without a dissenting vote, and became and now is the law of the land.

We were right in that action; we had a right to have the confidence in our own integrity.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will.

Mr. BURLESON. I think the gentleman from New York voted wrong when the original bill was before the House if he voted to eliminate Members of Congress. He is mistaken though in the statement that the bill was reintroduced and became a law. It subsequently was adopted by the House as an amendment to the penal code and also has passed the Senate as an amendment to the penal code.

Mr. BENNET of New York. It passed both branches of Congress and without a dissenting vote. That is substantially the statement I made, and whether I voted right or voted wrong——

Mr. McCALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will.

Mr. McCALL. The gentleman is mistaken in saying that the amendment relating to Members of Congress was laid on the table.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I said the whole bill was laid on the table.

Mr. McCALL. The provision relating to Members of Congress was defeated, and then the House defeated the whole bill because we believed it was a vicious bill and would make a criminal by giving away government information which the people ought to have from the executive branch of this Government.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I do not see that the statement is materially different from the one I made. The fact remains that after they had taken action, in which the gentleman from Massachusetts and myself participated, we passed the same provision in this House eliminating Members of Congress.

Mr. McCALL. If the gentleman will permit me, it was by no means the same provision, but the two differed very materially. If he will compare the provision in the penal code and the provision that the House defeated, he will see that they differ materially.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I have compared them.

Mr. MANN. And there is no similarity between the two.

Mr. BURLESON. With the gentleman's permission, I will state that the original bill passed the House without "Members of Congress" being included in its provision. It passed the Senate without "Members of Congress" being included in its provision. In conference "Members of Congress" were embodied, and then the bill was laid on the table because "Members of Congress" were embraced within its provision. Subsequently the bill, without material change save the fact that "Members of Congress" were stricken from its terms, was embodied in the penal code by the House and by the Senate, and the gentleman from Massachusetts is mistaken.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I am obliged to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take up the time of the gentleman from New York, but a reading of the bill which the House defeated and of the bill as incorporated in the penal code will settle that question. I wish to bring out this fact, that the House voted by a large majority to defeat the amendment relating to Members of Congress. That was settled, and then after that had been taken out it voted decisively to kill the whole bill without amendment. The gentleman from Texas is completely wrong. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURLESON. The record will disclose the real facts, and will determine whether I am wrong or the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] is mistaken.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Texas, as my friend from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] suggests to me, having eliminated each other, I shall depend upon my own recollection, thanking the gentleman from Texas, the author of the bill, for his very strong support of that recollection. [Laughter.]

Therefore, if in the very last Congress we have taken action—and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] emphasizes and strengthens my statement, for he says that the proposition to eliminate Members of Congress came up as an independent proposition and that it was defeated by an overwhelming majority, a fact which had escaped my recollection for a moment, and I thank the gentleman for calling it to my attention—if we have taken that action so recently as within the last two years, taken it with the consciousness of our own dignity and integrity, which we then had and still have, how can we blame the President of the United States if he suggests that still having that same opinion of our own dignity and worth, and that same belief and pride in our own ability to maintain the purity and integrity of our membership, we allow other avenues of the law to operate on criminals outside our body and depend in the future as in the past upon avenues under our control for the elimination from amongst us of criminals who sometimes do or have in the past unfortunately gained membership here?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has made comparison between the secret-service proposition and the proposition to give out secret information received by the Government in advance of its due publication.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. Oh, that is exactly the proposition the gentleman referred to in the Burleson bill, which was to forbid the giving out of secret information obtained by executive officers of the Government in advance of its proper publication. Now, does the gentleman think that there is any relevancy in comparing the two propositions, when Congress struck "Members of Congress" from the Burleson bill for the very reason that Members of Congress could not know the secret information obtained by executive officers in advance of being given out by the executive officers, and the Members of Congress did not wish to put themselves in the attitude of making themselves criminals for giving out information in the ordinary course of business?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I did not yield to the gentleman for a speech, but for a question.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman's speech is made much better by the interruption. [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. And I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] for his contribution. The gentleman from New York certainly believes that there is an analogy between the case cited in the Fifty-ninth Congress and the supposititious case embraced, possibly, in the language of the President. Nor do I think that my colleague from New York [Mr. PERKINS] does the President of the United States exact justice in stating that the meaning of his words is that the majority of this House are controlled by motives which are or may be corrupt.

My colleague, I think, should at least have done our fellow-citizen the justice of recalling that in his special message, whether rightly or wrongly—and I express no opinion upon that at the moment—the President called our attention and the attention of the country to what he said was a condition which existed in this body and which is, in substance, that, having confidence in our own committees, being busy ourselves upon other committees, there are many of us who, upon matters concerning which we have not had an opportunity of being informed, rely upon the report of the committee and follow it. It is not necessary for me to say that this is always so or to deny that the condition exists. My colleague, I think, sometimes relies upon that particular method of information. For instance, the debate upon the provision which has caused all this trouble commences on page 5750 of the RECORD of May 1, 1908. I notice on the second column of page 5749, the page immediately preceding it, that my colleague interposed a point of order to a provision, and that in accordance with the custom in this House, after he had reserved the point of order and the chairman of the committee had made a slight explanation, the gentleman said:

> Well, I am by no means sure my friends of the committee are right, but I shall not insist on the point of order.
>
> Mr. SHERLEY. Has the gentleman any reason to think the committee is not right?
>
> Mr. PERKINS. A good deal. I withdraw the point of order.

I will say frankly that we all rely upon the fact that committees that have made investigations know more about the subjects than we do or possibly can, and the President in his message, sent in response to our inquiry, calls attention specifically to the existence of this condition and absolves, in words, the House and the majority in the House from any suspicion even of being controlled by any base or unworthy motives. So much for the language itself and for the justification which we ourselves have given the President in the next preceding Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman passes from that, does he mean that the plain inference of the President's language is not what the special committee states, but that the majority of the House, having had confidence in one of its committees, that confidence was betrayed by the Members named by the President in his reply to the House resolution? Is that the inference to be drawn?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman necessarily means nothing of the kind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But from the manner in which he stated the proposition, the only other inference that seemed to me possible would be that the House, having had confidence in this committee, in the opinion of the President, its confidence was betrayed by the committee, and particularly by the persons named in the message as responsible for the action of the House. I wish to know if that inference is the one that the gentleman thinks the House should have drawn instead of the one it does now draw, as set out in the resolution.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, my colleague is illustrating the difficulty of putting a "plain meaning" on the language of others. There is no such necessary inference from the language of the gentleman from New York, and I have utterly failed if I have not drawn to the attention of so astute and able and honest a man as my colleague the two facts—first, that the President might have relied upon our action in the Fifty-ninth Congress; and, second, had the right to rely upon our own confidence in our honor, dignity, and integrity as a body and in our ability to maintain the dignity of this House in its integrity. There is no other inference that could be drawn from my remarks.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will yield for a question.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman cited the case of the gentleman from New York withdrawing the point of order as proof of confidence in the Committee on Appropriations. Does the gentleman mean by that that if he had not withdrawn the point of order that he would have shown a lack of confidence in the Committee on Appropriations, or that the gentleman himself showed a lack of confidence when he made and had sustained a point of order on the identical item we are now considering?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Not in the committee as individuals, but in their conclusions; yes. Why else would the point of order be made if the Member is satisfied?

Mr. MANN. I make points of order so often that I wondered whether I showed a total lack of confidence. It is a new doctrine to me that a man who makes a point of order shows a total lack of confidence in a committee.

Mr. BENNET of New York. So long as the gentleman brought up the question, I will frankly confess that there are many cases in which I have been at a loss to know why the gentleman has made a point of order.

Mr. MANN. That usually happens, I suppose, when a bill comes from the gentleman's committee, when it is generally so full of points of order one can not help making them.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman from Illinois, to my recollection, never made a point of order to a bill reported from any committee of which I am a member.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. ADAIR. The gentleman from New York has stated that had this House taken no notice of the statement of the President in his annual message, the people of the country would have forgotten it in twenty-four hours. Does the gentleman from New York believe that the messages of the President of the United States are of so little importance to the people of this country that they give no consideration to any statement made by the President and forget any statement made by him in twenty-four hours?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Oh, no; and I will come to reply to that statement in due course. Now, behind the question of the language, that I am very glad to see the committee have, with caution, relegated to the plain meaning of the English, and therefore leave each man to his own interpretation, without doing as they did the last time the matter was up in the House, forcing us to put an interpretation upon the language, which each Member had a right to interpret for himself according to its plain English—behind that is the question as to whether the President of the United States, charged with the execution of the law, had a right to bring forcibly to the attention of this House the question of whether our action had retarded the enforcement of the criminal statutes. No one questions the right of the President to recommend legislation. It is important, therefore, and necessary to know to some extent what has been done by these agents of the Secret Service, whom we have taken away from the work of the enforcement of the criminal law. I shall not read the numerous instances, although I shall later ask the indulgence of the House to extend them in my remarks, alluded to by the Secretary of the Treasury in his communication to the chairmen of the Committee on Appropriations of the House and of the Senate, nor shall I rehearse the instances mentioned in the body of the President's special message itself, but as a Representative from the State of New York I desire to bring to the attention of the House some of the prosecutions which have been carried to a successful conclusion in that one judicial district since October, 1906.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Can you state to the House how many men were taken away from the Secret Service as a result of this provision?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I have only the information supplied by the gentleman from Iowa and also the gentleman from Minnesota, who said the action of the House on the 1st of May last would take away 20 men, but I assume that to be accurate. There are only 67 men in the whole Secret Service, and we have 70 policemen to guard this Capitol building; and yet we are afraid of the 67 men scattered all over the United States; and we need—for we must need them—70 men to guard this Capitol building. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] says that 20 men were taken away from the Secret Service. Well, here is what these 20 men——

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will.

Mr. PADGETT. Does the gentleman attribute the necessity for 70 policemen here at the Capitol to the criminal character of the Congress, or to a superfluity of officeholders?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I decline to attribute it to either branch of the gentleman's inquiry, simply contenting myself with stating the facts. Here is what these 20 men have done in the southern district of New York alone:

The American Sugar Refining Company, convicted and fined $18,000; again, $60,000; again, $12,000; again, $10,000; again, $10,000; again, $70,000, making a total of $180,000, concerning which they have been convicted, and which they have paid in the southern district of New York alone.

The New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Company and F. L. Pomeroy, tried and convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of $114,000; another fine of $18,000. The Western Transit Company, $10,000. The Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad Company, $20,000. The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company, $20,000. The Great Northern Railway Company, $5,000. The Central Vermont Railway Company, $1,000. The New York, New Haven & Hartford, $1,000, for penalties under the federal safety-appliance act. McAndrews and Forbes and J. S. Young, for violation of the Sherman anti-trust law, $18,000.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman cites a conviction under the safety-appliance act. Will the gentleman say that that comes through the Secret Service when we maintain a large number of inspectors in another branch of the service for the very purpose of enforcing that law?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I shall cite the district attorney's notation in relation to those three cases before I conclude.

Mr. MANN. We had better stop the other branch of the service and enforce the safety-appliance law——

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman is entitled to his opinion on all subjects, and is competent at all times to express it.

Mr. MANN. Once in a while I would like to get the facts from the gentleman from New York. Was that the case? Was this conviction brought about by the Secret Service?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Those particular three convictions?

Mr. MANN. The convictions which the gentleman refers to, for the violation of the safety-appliance law?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Those three convictions, of $400 and $300, were not.

Mr. MANN. Then, what is the gentleman reading them for? I suspect from the gentleman's statement that most of these others are the same.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will read them, if the gentleman desires some facts, before I get through.

Mr. MANN. It is the first time.

Mr. BENNET of New York. It takes three strikes to get out. Also, there was a prominent New York newspaper indicted and that pleaded guilty for using the United States mails to distribute lewd, obscene, and lascivious matter. It was fined $31,000.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Is it not a fact that the Post-Office Department maintains a large inspection service for the investigation of that very character of offenses?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman, as the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, is better informed in that matter than I am.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Is not that true?

Mr. BENNET of New York. If the gentleman says so, I will admit it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Undoubtedly it is true. Then, was this particular conviction, and the process of law which led up to it, by the Secret Service of the Treasury Department or by post-office inspectors?

Mr. BENNET of New York. By the secret-service officers of the Treasury Department.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Under what conditions? Why could not the Post-Office Department have done the same identical work?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I am not informed why the Post-Office Department did not do it, and very possibly if the gentleman considers it important he can ask the Postmaster-General when he next has him before his committee. I simply make the statement, upon the authority of the United States district attorney for the southern district of New York, that the secret-service men did valuable work in this case.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Is it not true that the number of post-office inspectors has been reduced in recent years without any impairment to the character of the service?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I hope so.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is true, also.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Glad to hear it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, I want to ask him how many cases under the Sherman antitrust law have been investigated by these secret-service men in the State of New York and elsewhere?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will state, in answer to the gentleman from Tennessee, that the United States district attorney for the southern district of New York reports to me that in the thirteen major cases to which I first referred for the taking and giving of rebates in violation of the so-called "Elkins law," the convictions were obtained in those cases through efforts of the secret-service agents as well as the convictions on which fines were paid of $185,000 by the Sugar Refining Company.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is the Elkins law. Now, how many under the Sherman law?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The district attorney does not differentiate.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think he ought to, as there is quite a difference in the two. Has the gentleman any letter or official communication that can explain that?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The communication from which I now read is what may be called an "official communication."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. From whom?

Mr. BENNET of New York. A letter from the United States district attorney of the southern district of New York, in which he refers to cases under the Elkins law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. In the debate on this subject last May—May 1—I in substance asked the gentleman if the Secret Service was employed in securing testimony in the anti-trust cases, and the gentleman in substance stated that was the case. I would like to know what his information is and from what source did the gentleman get that information? I want to say that upon that information I voted against the Tawney amendment. Now, I want your information as to that.

Mr. BENNET of New York. At the request of the gentleman from Tennessee, without stopping to read, I will put into the RECORD certain statements here from the district attorney of the southern district of New York with reference to violations of the Sherman Act, about which he now interrogates me.

In addition to this—

SCHEDULE A.

SCHEDULE OF SUCCESSFUL PROSECUTIONS IN THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK DURING THE TWO YEARS FROM OCTOBER 1, 1906, TO JANUARY 1, 1909.

1. United States v. American Sugar Refining Company, for accepting rebates. Convicted and fined	$18,000
2. United States v. American Sugar Refining Company, C. Goodlow Edgar and Edwin Earle, for accepting rebates. Defendants plead guilty and paid fines aggregating	60,000
3. United States v. American Sugar Refining Company, C. Goodlow Edgar and Edwin Earle, for accepting rebates. Plead guilty and paid fines aggregating	12,000
4. United States v. American Sugar Refining Company. Accepting rebates. Plead guilty and paid a fine of	10,000
5. United States v. American Sugar Refining Company. Accepting rebates. Plead guilty and paid a fine of	10,000
6. United States v. Brooklyn Cooperage Company. Accepting rebates. Plead guilty and paid a fine of	70,000
	180,000

The above total fines, aggregating $180,000, were paid by the defendants after the American Sugar Refining Company had strenuously resisted the Government in the first case and had employed most eminent counsel to represent it, and all of the important questions of law were thrashed out in that case.

7. United States v. The New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company and F. L. Pomeroy. Tried, convicted, and sentenced to pay a fine of	$114,000
8. United States v. The New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company. Tried, convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of	18,000
9. United States v. Western Transit Company. Plead guilty and paid a fine of	10,000
10. United States v. Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company. Plead guilty and paid a fine of	20,000
11. United States v. Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company. Plead guilty and paid a fine of	20,000
12. United States v. Great Northern Railway Company. Tried and convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of	5,000
13. United States v. Central Vermont Railway Company. Plead guilty and paid a fine of	1,000
	188,000

The above fines, aggregating $188,000, were imposed against the respective railroads for having given rebates in respect of property transported in interstate commerce.

14. United States v. Erie Railroad Company. Defendant paid a penalty of	$300
15. United States v. New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company. Defendant paid a penalty of	400
16. United States v. New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company. Defendant paid a penalty of	300
	1,000

The above penalties imposed upon the defendants and paid by them were in prosecutions under the so-called "federal safety appliance act."

17. United States v. MacAndrews & Forbes Company and J. S. Young & Co. Defendants tried and convicted of violations of the Sherman antitrust law, and defendants paid a fine of $18,000.

18. United States v. Allen Brothers Company, Analomink Paper Company, Bayless Pulp and Paper Company, Bedford Pulp and Paper Company, Brownsville Paper Company, Champion Paper Company, Central Paper Company, Continental Paper Bag Company, De Grasse Paper Company, The Dexter Sulphite Pulp and Paper Company, Detroit Sulphite Pulp and Paper Company, Fletcher Paper Company, Gould Paper Company, Hartje Paper Manufacturing Company, The Island Paper Company, Island Paper Company, The Jefferson Paper Company, Newton Falls Paper Company, Orono Pulp and Paper Company, Parsons Pulp and Paper Company, Petoskey Fiber Paper Company, The Racquette River Paper Company, The York Haven Paper Company, Munising Paper Company (Limited), Charles W. Pratt, John W. Moyer, and John H. Parks. Defendants plead guilty to indictment charging them with a conspiracy to monopolize trade and commerce in fiber and manila paper in violation of the Sherman antitrust law, and sentenced to pay a fine aggregating $50,000.

The above two prosecutions under the Sherman antitrust law involved the investigation of corporate books and officers of upward of 30 different corporations, and the time consumed in the investigations covered a period in the first case of over two years, and in the second case upward of six months, and the trial of the first case consumed fifteen days.

19. United States v. A New York Newspaper. The defendants were indicted for using the United States mail to distribute lewd, obscene, and lascivious matter, plead guilty, and were sentenced to pay fines aggregating $31,000.

20. United States v. Hammacher, Schlemmer & Co. Defendant plead guilty to indictment charging it with obtaining transportation of property in interstate commerce by means of false representation at less than the tariff rate, and was fined $1,000.

21. United States v. Charles W. Morse and Alfred H. Curtis. Defendants tried and convicted for violations of the national banking act, and defendant Morse sentenced to serve a term of fifteen years in the federal prison at Atlanta, Ga.

While this is not a prosecution of a corporation, it is a prosecution in many respects similar to the prosecution of a corporation, and involved the examination of the books of account of four banking institutions, and of some 40 or more brokerage firms in New York City, Boston, and Philadelphia.

22. United States v. Box Board Association. This was an investigation before the United States grand jury, which as yet has not resulted in any indictment, but which has accomplished the end of driving the association out of business, this association being a combination of manufacturers of so-called "box board" in violation of the Sherman antitrust act. The investigation of this case covered a period of upward of thirty days, and the principal defendant, who had charge of the documentary evidence in the case, fled the jurisdiction, taking all of the documentary evidence with him.

In addition to the above prosecutions there have been reported to this office and prosecuted a number of cases against corporations and partnerships owning scows for violation of the navigation laws prohibiting the dumping of refuse in New York Harbor.

SCHEDULE B.

SCHEDULE OF PROSECUTIONS AGAINST CORPORATIONS NOW PENDING IN THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

1. United States v. Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company. Indictment charging defendant with giving rebates. This case was tried during the year 1907 and resulted in a disagreement by the jury.

2. United States v. New York, Ontario and Western Railroad Company. Indictment charging defendant with giving rebates.

3. United States v. New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company. Indictment charging defendant with giving rebates.

4. United States v. New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company. Indictment charging defendant with giving rebates.

5. United States v. Herrmann, Aukam & Co. Indictment charging defendant with obtaining transportation in interstate commerce at less than tariff rate by means of false representation.

6. United States v. The Manhattan Brass Company. Indictment charging defendant with obtaining transportation in interstate commerce at less than tariff rate by means of false representation.

7. The American News Company. Indictment charging defendant with obtaining transportation in interstate commerce at less than tariff rate by means of false representation.

9. United States v. Jersey City Dairy Company. Violation of the internal-revenue laws in regard to oleomargarine.

10. United States v. Jersey City Dairy Company. Violation of the internal-revenue laws in regard to oleomargarine.

In addition to the above there are pending investigations which will undoubtedly result in indictments against upward of 10 corporations and partnerships for violation of the statute prohibiting the dumping of refuse in New York Harbor, and also investigations against various corporations and copartnerships for violation of the regulations prohibiting use of Ambrose Channel.

During the foregoing period there have also been conducted in this jurisdiction investigations of all of the express companies in New York City—i. e., the American Express Company, the National Express Company, the Adams Express Company, and Wells-Fargo Express Company, in relation to violations of section 10 of the so-called "Hepburn Act." These investigations have not yet been completed, although they have consumed a great deal of time and involved a great deal of attention.

During the same time this office has investigated upward of 100 alleged violations by different shippers and carriers of the same provision of the Hepburn Act.

SCHEDULE C.

PROSECUTIONS IN WHICH THE SECRET-SERVICE MEN HAVE BEEN USED.

In Schedule A there are 13 cases, numbered 1 to 13, inclusive, in which the Government has successfully prosecuted shippers and carriers, respectively, for the taking and giving of rebates in violation of the so-called "Elkins law," in which prosecutions fines were imposed aggregating $368,000. The original information to the Government in relation to these cases indicated that the documentary proof, on which successful prosecutions would be had, was in the possession of certain persons in New York State, and there was strong reason to believe that if the persons having such documentary evidence were given the opportunity, after it became known that the Government intended to prosecute, they would dispose of such evidence. The aid of the secret-service men was secured, and they covered the places where this evidence was located and did their work so successfully that the custodians were unable to dispose of any of the books or papers, and the Government ultimately succeeded in getting possession thereof, and from such documents succeeded in securing such convictions.

The secret-service men also did valuable work in the case of the United States v. the New York newspaper.

United States v. Charles W. Morse and Alfred H. Curtis. Defendants tried and convicted for violations of national banking act. The Secret Service was used in this case for certain purposes until the passage of the act prohibiting them from performing any services in any other than counterfeiting cases, which necessitated taking the secret-service men off of the work and putting new men from the special agents of the Department of Justice on the work, and, while the latter did their work very well, it was naturally not the same character of service as before, for the reason that the secret-service men were skilled men, while these men were new to the work.

United States v. Austin F. Montanye. Defendant tried and convicted for smuggling merchandise into the United States in violation of the customs laws. This case involved an investigation in the customs-house and appraisers' stores in the effort to connect certain Government officials with the defendant, and the secret-service men were used in such investigation until the passage of the act which necessitated their discontinuing their work before it was completed.

United States v. Jose M. Giordani. Defendant indicted under section 4476, United States Revised Statutes, for shipping dangerous articles, to wit, gunpowder, under a misdescription. This prosecution was the direct result of an investigation by the Secret Service, which resulted in apprehending Giordani in the attempt to ship 1,000 rifles and 75,000 cartridges from New York to Haiti, to be used in the revolution then pending in Haiti, the said rifles and cartridges having been sold to said Giordani by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company in Bridgeport, Conn., and transported to New York City. As a result of this investigation by the Secret Service the Union Metallic Cartridge Company was also indicted in the district of Connecticut and convicted for shipping said articles under a misdescription. Giordani was convicted in this district and sentenced to serve a term of imprisonment.

United States v. Stanley Bagg, Michael Tandlish, and Michael Smith. Defendants indicted for conspiracy to bribe an officer of the United States. This was a prosecution in which the investigations were conducted solely by the Secret Service.

United States v. James T. Walker. Defendant indicted for violation of the food and drugs act, tried, and convicted. In this case the Secret Service made the preliminary investigations and procured the evidence on which the conviction was obtained.

United States v. Charles C. Brown. The defendant Brown was tried and convicted of conspiracy to defraud the Government on revenues on imported merchandise, Brown being an employee of the Government in the appraisers' stores, through whom the firm of Rosenthal & Cohen operated in passing imported Japanese silks at false weights. After Brown's conviction he forfeited his bail and became a fugitive, and the secret-service men located him in Canada and succeeded in obtaining his return to the United States.

United States v. American Sugar Refining Company. This is a case in which the defendant is now being sued by the Government for defrauding the Government of revenues on imported sugars by means of false weights. Prior to the passage of the act forbidding their use the secret-service men were used for certain work of great benefit to the Government.

During this period the secret-service men have investigated and have obtained convictions in several cases where the defendants were charged with impersonating government officials.

United States v. George W. Lederle. Defendant indicted for accepting a bribe to influence his action. This case was investigated by the secret-service men, and on the evidence obtained by them an indictment was found. The case has not yet been tried.

United States v. Standard Oil Company. Prior to June, 1908, the secret-service men were used by Mr. Kellogg in certain work connected with the above case in this district.

United States v. Theodore H. Price, Moses Haas, and Frederick A. Peckham. (Cotton-leak case.) Prior to June, 1908, the secret-service men were used for investigations in this case, and after the defendants had been indicted in the southern district of New York the secret-service men were used to locate Haas and Peckham, who had left the jurisdiction, and to bring them back.

The case of the United States v. Allen Brothers Company and others was instituted after the passage of the act prohibiting the use of the secret-service men by the Department of Justice in cases other than counterfeiting. This was an important prosecution which involved a lengthy investigation previous to the finding of the indictment. The Government was seriously handicapped by not having the services of the secret-service men, and the need for such men was so great that it necessitated assistant United States attorneys going out and doing difficult work which they were not equipped to do, and which could have been done more thoroughly by skilled men like the Secret Service.

During the same period there have been 30 indictments for counterfeiting or having in posession dies for the purpose of counterfeiting, in which there have been 29 convictions and 1 acquittal.

There are many other less important cases in which the secret-service men have been used in one way or another.

Since June, 1908, there have been important investigations in this district in which there has been serious need for the services of men in the Secret Service, and the Government has been handicapped by not being able to avail themselves of their services.

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman gets away from that——

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has stated, as I understand him, that all of these convictions were secured by the use of 20 secret-service operators in the southern district of New York?

Mr. BENNET of New York. "The gentleman" stated this: That the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] was that the total number of men in the Secret Service of the Government in these matters was 20; and the gentleman reiterates that statement.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman ought to state this. He recites the total number in the Secret Service as 67.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I stated it upon the authority of the statement of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman stated that upon his own information, secured first hand from the Secret Service Division.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I stated as I read the debate which took place in this House.

Mr. TAWNEY. In which the statement was made by the gentleman from Iowa that the total number of 67 did not mean the total number of the Secret Service, but meant 67 who were employed here in Washington.

Mr. BENNET of New York. There is no such limitation in the statement as made by the gentleman from Iowa at the time of the argument.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman suggests at least—I do not want to be too inquisitive—that all this work is done by secret-service men. Now, what I wish to ask the gentleman, because he has evidently made a very diligent investigation into this subject is: What in the world are they doing with the other large amounts of money that have been appropriated for detective work, something like half a million in the antitrust matter and something like a million in other directions, if we can get all this work done in the southern district of New York for $125,000 through the secret-service men? If so, what in the world are they doing with the rest of the money?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I suppose they are using it in Chicago; I do not know. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. But I can assure the gentleman that when any money is expended by this administration improperly it is not expended in Chicago or Illinois, but in the southern district of New York. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman makes that assertion. Any time he wants to get up on the floor here and prove it, I will be glad to be present.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield for one question, a very short one?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Just a question.

Mr. HARDWICK. No matter how useful and how valuable these secret-service agents have been, how does that affect or illustrate the issue between the House and the President?

Several MEMBERS. That is the point.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, that is not a difficult question to answer. The President is charged with the execution of the laws. He asserts that the action of this House has interfered with that administration of the laws. In pursuance of his constitutional authority and duty he recommends certain legislation, to wit, that the limitation which was placed upon the sundry civil bill last year be not continued in the sundry civil bill of this year. I am demonstrating to the House that from October 1, 1906, to January 1, 1909, practically two years, in the southern district of New York alone, in cases where secret-service men were used, either to collect or conserve the evidence, convictions were had under which corporations were fined $438,000.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. PADGETT. The President says that the House was actuated in its legislation by a desire to prevent its Members from being investigated for criminal acts. Now, why does that have anything to do with the investigations in New York? He says that was the chief argument, and the inference from that is that we were moved by that argument to enact certain legislation to prevent ourselves being investigated for criminal acts. Will the gentleman address himself to that matter?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Is this a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, the President says nothing of the kind, as I construe his language; and, in the second place, I have given very fully the reasons which I think might have moved him to use the language which he did, and I do not propose to go over that again.

Mr. McGAVIN. Before the gentleman gets away from this list of convictions, will he please tell the House how many convictions there were for counterfeiting?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will answer that question with pleasure. During that time the secret-service force obtained evidence in the southern district of New York, through which 30 indictments were found, either for counterfeiting or for having counterfeiting plates in possession. On those 30 indictments trials were had, and 29 of the 30 prosecutions resulted in convictions and only 1 in acquittal. So I think there is no criticism of the secret-service force for not having been engaged in that particular prosecution during that time.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. At the beginning of the reading of the list of cases which the gentleman has referred to he made the statement, "Here is what those 20 men have done."

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Later, in answering a question, the gentleman stated that those were convictions in the southern district of New York where secret-service men were employed. What I desire to ask the gentleman is this: Does he desire the House to understand that these convictions were all obtained solely or largely upon information furnished by secret-service men, or were there not other officers of the Government charged with a like duty, through whom a large portion of this evidence was secured or could have been secured? In other words, was the Secret Service entirely responsible for all of these convictions?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, of course district attorneys tried the cases; of course they passed upon the points of law; but I will say to the gentleman from Wyoming that it is my information that the evidence in these cases was not only secured but preserved by officers of the Secret Service, and that means a good deal sometimes in a big city. It is also my information that this force, which accomplished these results under which the Government received back $438,000, did not exceed, in the southern district of New York, 12 or 13 men. And the district attorney for the southern district of New York, after detailing a list of indictments which have not yet been brought to trial, and of investigations which have not been concluded, which I shall not read to the House, sums up the whole matter by saying:

Since June, 1908, there have been important investigations in this city in which there has been serious need for the services of the men in the Secret Service, and the Government has been handicapped by not being able to avail itself of their services.

Mr. Speaker, if in one district alone in the United States—of course, the largest in population and wealth—results like this have been achieved through the work of the Secret Service, is not the President of the United States, having full information of all the facts, knowing the results from each district—as I do not and as I have not attempted to know them—is he not justified in urging upon this Congress and upon this House in the strongest possible terms a careful and thorough consideration of the whole question before the particular limitation is reenacted?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If I have heard correctly, the gentleman has read a statement from the United States district attorney for the southern district of New York, in which he states that from the 1st of July, 1908, that office had need of the services of these secret-service men, and it has been greatly hampered in its work because it could not have them.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman from New York or does this district attorney know that since the 1st of July, 1908, practically the 20 men have been taken into the Department of Justice and organized as a separate secret service; and does he not know that that department is available for use in this work, payable from the funds from which they had been paid before, subject only to the orders of the Attorney-General, and not to the Chief of the Secret Service?

Mr. BENNET of New York. In reply to my colleague from New York, I will say that the United States district attorney says this about it: He inserts in this list the Morse case, which has been tried since the 1st of July, 1908.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He was not hampered in the Morse case, because Morse was convicted.

Mr. BENNET of New York. He was hampered, and he says he was; but he had skill enough to continue the work which the secret-service men had commenced before the 1st of July, 1908; but that is no reason why, being justified by his past record, he has no right, with the knowledge in his possession, to say that his work now and in the future is being hampered. He does say in this memorandum that he had to have new men in connection with the Morse trial.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is that memorandum the gentleman holds?

Mr. BENNET of New York. A memorandum furnished by the district attorney for the southern district of New York.

Mr. MANN. A memorandum from the district attorney in which he admits that he had skill enough to convict Morse notwithstanding he was hampered.

Mr. BENNET of New York. He had the skill and the ability, the same as the district attorney in the gentleman's district.

Mr. MANN. But he does not advertise it by saying that he had the skill to obtain a conviction.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I know that he has the courtesy——

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman from New York to say that the district attorney in New York admitted that he had skill enough to obtain a conviction, notwithstanding the loss of the services of these men.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I admitted that he had the skill.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman then tell us what the district attorney did say?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I have, that he had a force of new men, and while they did fairly well, they were not equal to the secret-service men whom he had used in the other cases.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it not a fact that the Morse conviction grew out of some bank transactions and scandals in the city of New York—violations of the United States banking laws, and did not the evidence upon which this man was convicted consist of the testimony of transactions in these banks by bank officials and experts who examined into the accounts of the bank?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I should be glad to tell the gentleman what it did consist of on the authority of this same district attorney:

While this is not a prosecution of a corporation, it is a prosecution in some respects similar to the prosecution of a corporation, and involved the examination of the books and accounts of four banking institutions and 40 or more brokerage firms in New York City, Boston, and Philadelphia.

Mr. FITZGERALD. So that was the work of accountants and not the work of sleuths?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I have not used the word "sleuths," and in connection with this argument I hardly consider it a dignified expression. It is the work that has been done in the past by secret-service men, and that is the reason why the United States district attorneys and United States judges desire to have men of that character continued in office where they can avail themselves of their services.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say to my colleague in perfect frankness that, although I have taken part in the preparation of a bill in which the compensation of these men is provided, I never knew that they were carrying accountants as detectives.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I am glad to supply the information.

Mr. PARSONS. If the gentleman from New York will permit me, I want to say that in the Morse case the secret-service men were used to investigate the panel of the jurors, or rather the special force was so used, and they were not able to do that as successfully as it had been done in the past.

It was such an important case that the judge felt compelled to lock up the jury all through the trial, and therefore it was very important that the United States district attorney should have full information in regard to everybody called to serve on the jury in that case, and he was handicapped by not being able to use the most expert men. That was the information he gave to me.

Mr. BENNET of New York. My colleague's statement is unquestionably correct. And now we go from that branch of this particular discussion to the question of the man whom we are to rebuke, if this resolution passes in the manner that the resolution provides. I hold no brief for the President of the United States. So far as I know, he has asked for neither help nor quarter. Endowed by Providence with a felicity and facility of expression, which he has perfected by use during thirty years of an active life, and in which he has greater and more increased confidence because of almost uninterrupted success, he is at all times, I believe, perfectly capable of being his own defender should defense be required.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman desire us to understand that in this endowment by Providence he uttered this language?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gifts that he has are the gifts that God gave him.

Mr. BUTLER. And this is one of them?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. All right. It comes from higher responsibility than I had supposed. [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman and I will not indulge in any religious controversy.

My Republican colleagues, of course, assume responsibility for any action that is to be taken here. With the highest respect and regard for the Members of this House on the other side of the center aisle, we must recognize that, being the majority, whatever action we take here to-day will be the responsibility of the Republicans in this House. It may be true that, there being none so great as to escape contumely——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is that another service of notice upon the Democratic membership of the House that they are not really Members of the House at all? [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. Oh, no.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought the gentleman was usurping the functions of his colleague from New York [Mr. PAYNE], the majority leader on the floor.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Oh, I shall leave him to answer that inquiry when he gets the floor. Oh, it is simply a statement of fact——

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. If the gentleman's conclusion is correct in that instance, that the Republicans are responsible for all that occurs in the House, then the aspersion, if any, which the President casts the gentleman takes entirely to his side. Is that right? [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. I have already taken pleasure in maintaining the position that the President of the United States intended no aspersion either on the House or the majority or the minority, and I assert it again. Of course there may be those who, if any considerable portion of the minority should vote for these resolutions, might cast their minds back to the events of recent campaigns and recall the letters to the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska, and might be unfair enough to believe that some lingering feeling of resentment, if such there is, actuated the Members of the minority so voting. So far as I am concerned, I personally repudiate any such feeling on my behalf and their own.

To my colleagues upon this side of the House I desire to recall very briefly some of the things that we ourselves have said in the recent past concerning this President of the United States of our own party faith——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may continue ad libitum.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may continue and conclude his speech. He has been interrupted a lot.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Pennsylvania ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may continue his speech. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the House for this courtesy. Upon this side of the House in at least two political campaigns, and on the floor of this House, we have spoken of this fellow-Republican of ours whom we propose, if this resolution passes, to rebuke——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the gentleman think it fair to state this in that way? He says we are proposing to rebuke the President. Are we not rather declining to receive a rebuke from the President [applause], and are we not rather denying his official right to scold the representatives of the people?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Mississippi will, as I presume he will, read the headlines in the newspapers to-night and to-morrow morning, he will find his question amply answered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But I am not asking it of the newspapers; I am asking it of the gentleman.

Mr. BENNET of New York. And I am answering it through the newspapers. [Laughter.]

The most recent description of the President of the United States, Mr. Speaker, that I find in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is contained in the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. DALZELL, who always adds to his eloquence a sincerity which convinces, and who spoke thus on February 16, 1908, concerning the President of the United States:

> The most noticeable thing in the discussion thus far has been the measure of credit that our Democratic friends are willing to concede to our Republican President. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is willing to do him honor in so far as he has been guided, he says, by Democratic principles. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] calls him one of the most extraordinary men in American history; declines to decide whether or not he is a great man; suggests that the answer be left to posterity, after the manner suggested by Lord Bacon, who, dying, left "his name and memory to men's charitable speeches, to foreign nations, and to the next age;" and then, with that kindliness which is so characteristic of him, wishes him happiness, prosperity, and length of days. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN], with that candor and eloquence which are so characteristic of him, calls upon those who have shared his views in the past to join him in hailing the President, "on his disappearance from the field of contentious politics, as a shining ornament of popular government, a loyal exponent of truth, an intrepid champion of justice, a great hero in the glorious galaxy of American heroism."
>
> While I am not of those who heretofore have shared the views of the gentleman from New York, I beg of him now that he permit me to be counted as one of the company that shares in his estimate of Theodore Roosevelt.

Mr. BUTLER and Mr. McGAVIN rose.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield to me? Were these eulogies pronounced before the delivery of the President's annual message?

Mr. McGAVIN. I will ask the gentleman from New York if he is now making a plea of justification or sympathy?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Not at all.

Mr. BUTLER. What is the date of that eloquence?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I took occasion to state it. Further on in a paragraph the gentleman said:

> In violation of all the precedents of diplomatic history, but pursuant to the dictates of humanity, President Roosevelt dared boldly to suggest a cessation of the bloody war between Russia and Japan, and as a result of his efforts brought about a treaty of peace. [Applause on the Republican side.] And I doubt not that when his name and memory shall be the subject of men's charitable speeches in foreign nations and the next age, not the least of his claims to a lasting place in the world's memory will be under the title of "the great pacificator." [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know that I understood the theory and burden of the gentleman's argument, but is he now setting forth the President's former good conduct in mitigation of his recent offenses? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. I decline to answer the question in the way it is stated, but propose to answer it in a way which seems better to me. These views stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania have been reiterated by every one of us upon the Republican side with belief and sincerity during two great national campaigns, and the people, believing in the President now as well as then, have heard our statements, with the result that not only have they elected him to high office, but that twice they have elected a Republican majority in this House. I cite these views and also the expressions of the Republican platforms, which without reading I will ask consent to put in the RECORD, as an estimate that we ourselves have put upon Theodore Roosevelt, not as a plea for mercy, not as a plea in mitigation of anything, but that as Americans and men, as well as Republicans, we can take as high a stand as our predecessors have in relation to men in whose honesty, patriotism, and integrity we have confidence, in the hope that even though there may be those here who disagree with me as to the construction of the language they will be animated by the history of past relations with the President, whom we respect and honor and pay our allegiance to as the foremost member of our party, and by what ought to animate us, if we are imbued with the patriotism which I think we are—the principle of Abraham Lincoln in his reply to Horace Greeley, when he said:

I waive it in deference to an old friend, whose heart I have always supposed to be right.

[Applause.]

REPUBLICAN PLATFORM OF 1904.

M'KINLEY AND ROOSEVELT.

The great statesman and patriotic American, William McKinley, who was reelected by the Republican party to the Presidency four years ago, was assassinated just at the threshold of his second term. The entire nation mourned his untimely death, and did that justice to his great qualities of mind and character which history will confirm and repeat.

The American people were fortunate in his successor, to whom they turned with a trust and confidence which have been fully justified. President Roosevelt brought to the great responsibilities thus sadly forced upon him a clear head, a brave heart, and earnest patriotism, and high ideals of public duty and public service. True to the principles of the Republican party and to the policies which that party had declared, he has also shown himself ready for every emergency, and has met new and vital questions with ability and with success.

SETTLEMENT OF THE COAL STRIKE.

The confidence of the people in his justice, inspired by his public career, enabled him to render personally an inestimable service to the country by bringing about a settlement of the coal strike which threatened such disastrous results at the opening of the winter in 1902.

ROOSEVELT'S FOREIGN POLICY.

Our foreign policy under his administration has not only been able, vigorous, and dignified, but to the highest degree successful. The complicated questions which arose in Venezuela were settled in such a way by President Roosevelt that the Monroe Doctrine was signally vindicated and the cause of peace and arbitration greatly advanced.

PANAMA.

His prompt and vigorous action in Panama, which we commend in the highest terms, not only secured to us the canal route, but avoided foreign complications which might have been of a very serious character.

IN THE ORIENT.

He has continued the policy of President McKinley in the Orient, and our position in China, signalized by our recent commercial treaty with that Empire, has never been so high.

THE ALASKAN BOUNDARY.

He secured the tribunal by which the vexed and perilous question of the Alaskan boundary was finally settled.

Whenever crimes against humanity have been perpetrated which have shocked our people his protest has been made and our good offices have been tendered, but always with due regard to international obligations.

Under his guidance we find ourselves at peace with all the world, and never were we more respected or our wishes more regarded by foreign nations.

DOMESTIC QUESTIONS.

Preeminently successful in regard to our foreign relations, he has been equally fortunate in dealing with domestic questions. The country has known that the public credit and the national currency were absolutely safe in the hands of his administration. In the enforcement of the laws he has shown not only courage, but the wisdom which understands that to permit laws to be violated or disregarded opens the door to anarchy, while the just enforcement of the law is the soundest conservatism. He has held firmly to the fundamental American doctrine that all men must obey the law; that there must be no distinction between rich and poor, between strong and weak, but that justice and equal protection under the law must be secured to every citizen without regard to race, creed, or condition.

His administration has been throughout vigorous and honorable, high-minded and patriotic. We commend it without reservation to the considerate judgment of the American people.

REPUBLICAN NATIONAL PLATFORM OF 1908.

Once more the Republican party, in national convention assembled, submits its cause to the people. This great historic organization, that destroyed slavery, preserved the Union, restored credit, expanded the national domain, established a sound financial system, developed the industries and resources of the country, and gave to the Nation her seat of honor in the councils of the world, now meets the new problems of government with the same courage and capacity with which it solved the old.

REPUBLICANISM UNDER ROOSEVELT.

In this greatest era of American advancement the Republican party has reached its highest service under the leadership of Theodore Roosevelt. In no other period since national sovereignty was won under Washington, or preserved under Lincoln, has there been such mighty progress in those ideals of government which make for justice, equality, and fair dealing among men. The highest aspirations of the American people have found a voice. Their most exalted servant represents the best aims and worthiest purposes of all his countrymen. American manhood has been lifted to a nobler sense of duty and obligation. Conscience and courage in public stations and higher standards of right and wrong in private life have become cardinal principles of political faith, capital and labor have been brought into closer relations of confidence and interdependence, and the abuse of wealth, the tyranny of power, and all the evils of privilege and favoritism have been put to scorn by the simple, manly virtues of justice and fair play.

The great accomplishments of President Roosevelt have been, first and foremost, a brave and impartial enforcement of the law; the prosecution of illegal trusts and monopolies; the exposure and punishment of evil doers in the public service; the more effective regulation of the rates and services of the great transportation lines; the complete overthrow of preferences, rebates, and discriminations; the arbitration of labor disputes; the amelioration of the condition of wage-workers everywhere; the conservation of the natural resources of the country; the forward step in the improvement of the inland waterways; and always the earnest support and defense of every wholesome safeguard which has made more secure the guaranties of life, liberty, and property.

These are the achievements that will make Theodore Roosevelt his place in history, but more than all else the great things he has done will be an inspiration to those who have yet greater things to do. We declare our unfaltering adherence to the policies thus inaugurated, and pledge their continuance under a Republican administration of the Government.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman takes his seat will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman now please state what justification there is, if any, for the language used by the President, which is this:

The chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen themselves did not wish to be investigated by secret-service men.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I have been granted time to conclude my remarks, and therefore it would be discourteous for me to refuse. I think upon that particular expression there has been too much of a limitation. The President nowhere says that "the chief argument in the House" was what the gentleman has quoted. In a sense it was fortunate that so distinguished a literary man as my colleague from New York was made the chairman of this committee, because I think he will agree with me that similar expressions occur in all historical references to past events when the historian sums up the surroundings of an incident, and so the President sums up the surroundings of this incident. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] will search in vain to find either in that language or anywhere else in the President's message the statement that that was the chief argument used upon the floor of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BENNET of New York. I prefer to complete this answer.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I call the gentleman's attention to a possible oversight; that the President in reply to the House resolution——

Mr. BENNET of New York. I decline to yield to my friend. He does say that the chief argument was what the gentleman has quoted, and he surrounds it by argument from several sources, first, from the RECORD, where the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] makes the argument, and then going outside of the RECORD to reports in the newspapers, as the gentleman will recall, and which the gentleman has probably read.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Not until I conclude this, then I will yield to him.

Then, if the President had preferred to continue that character of evidence, the files of the evening newspapers, which unquestionably make some sort of atmosphere for this House, in the week preceding the vote contained arguments similar to that contained in the articles by Mr. Busbey in the Chicago newspapers.

Mr. MANN. Where are they?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Does the gentleman wish me to put them in the RECORD?

Mr. MANN. Yes; because I do not think the gentleman can do so.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in my remarks the newspaper articles referred to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] asks unanimous consent to insert in his remarks——

Mr. BENNET of New York. To insert in the RECORD articles similar to Mr. Busbey's article.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Before this item was passed?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. MANN. All of the items?

Mr. WILLIAMS. All that say it did not, as well as those that say it did.

Mr. BENNET of New York. If the gentleman from Mississippi will furnish them, I will put them in.

Mr. BUTLER. Has the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] completed his answer as to the interpretation of the word "argument?"

Mr. BENNET of New York. I have.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman tell me what he supposes was in the mind of the President when he used the verb "was," instead of using the verb "is?"

Mr. BENNET of New York. Because he referred to a past event. [Laughter.] I will now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman state where in the RECORD I made the argument that Members of Congress, or that I, as a Member of Congress, was afraid of being investigated by secret-service men?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman from Kentucky made no such argument, and I have made no such statement.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; but the gentleman has said that he substantially relied for his statement upon remarks made by the gentleman from Kentucky. Now, I want the gentleman from New York, who is familiar with the colloquy that passed between him and myself, to designate what language in that colloquy he thinks justified that statement of the President.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will do so with pleasure.

First, on page 5753 of the RECORD, on May 1, 1908:

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman think that if the accusation was made against a Member of Congress that he had been guilty of conduct unbecoming a gentleman and a Member of Congress that a department would be warranted in investigating his conduct by a secret-service man—

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman think——

Mr. BENNET of New York. If the gentleman will allow me to conclude my statement. Second—

The gentleman may be aware of the fact that this Secret Service at one time was used for the purpose of looking into the personal conduct of a Member of Congress, notwithstanding the gentleman seems to think that they are answerable to no one.

Now, while——

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, does the gentleman think that the two statements—one of them a question and the other one a statement of an historical fact—warrant the conclusion that the chief argument was that we are afraid of being investigated by secret-service men?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky, I will say that the President never said that the Congress was afraid of being investigated by secret-service men.

Mr. SHERLEY. But does the gentleman say that the language warrants the statement that the chief argument was——

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, unless I am permitted to answer the gentleman's question in my own way and in my own time, I shall not attempt to answer it.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman, of course, can control his own time, but he owes it to the truth of the controversy to answer a direct question when it is put.

Mr. BENNET of New York. And the gentleman intends to do it, if the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will not at present. If the gentleman from Kentucky will renew his question, as this colloquy has rather diverted me.

Mr. SHERLEY. I asked the gentleman this question: Whether he considers the question asked by myself and the statement made by myself of a historic fact in regard to the use of the Secret Service warranted the conclusion by the President, or anyone, that the chief argument made had been that Members of Congress were afraid of being investigated by secret-service men?

Mr. BENNET of New York. In the first place, it is necessary for me to call attention to the fact that during this controversy at no time has the President of the United States said that the Members of Congress were afraid to be investigated by secret-service men. [Cries of "Oh!"] If gentlemen will further permit, I should say that standing alone perhaps that remark would not justify the statement, but taken as a part of all the President cites, I think it is a necessary thing to be cited.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman believe that my remarks as a whole can honestly be interpreted as giving any reason for the statement that the chief argument was the fear of Members of Congress being investigated by secret-service men?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman insists, unintentionally, very possibly, in misquoting the language of the President.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have not quoted the language of the President. I am now dismissing what the President has said, and I ask the gentleman to say whether, as he construes the language in the RECORD, it warrants the statement that the chief argument made was the fear of Members being investigated by secret-service men. Eliminating what he has said, what does the gentleman think? Does the language warrant that conclusion?

Mr. BENNET of New York. "The gentleman from New York" thinks that the language of the gentleman from Kentucky warranted anyone, the President of the United States or anybody else, in believing that—first, the gentleman from Kentucky, and afterwards the House, so far as it followed his views, believed—what the gentleman alleged as a fact, that a member of the Secret Service had been used to investigate the conduct of a Member of the House, was an argument against permitting the further use of secret-service men in that capacity. Otherwise why was such assertion made? The gentleman from Kentucky is not used to making vain assertions. He is accustomed to make assertions in which there are force and weight. Evidently he believed there were force and weight in the assertion, or he would not have made it. That is my answer.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will listen to the reply of "the gentleman from Kentucky," which will be made in his own time, he will find why those statements were made. And in ending this colloquy between the gentleman from New York and myself, permit me to say that I do not believe any man desiring to construe language fairly, and with a knowledge of the whole debate, could possibly construe my language or that of any other Member used in that debate as warranting the statement that any single Member of this House was in fear of being investigated by the Secret Service.

Mr. BENNET of New York. And the "gentleman from New York" repeats again that neither he nor the President of the United States nor anybody else, so far as "the gentleman" is informed, has ever made the assertion that any Member of this House was in fear of being investigated by the Secret Service. [Cries of "Oh!"]

I herewith append the following as a part of my remarks:

APPENDIX.

[Washington Star, April 21, 1908.]

LOAN OF DETECTIVES—PROPOSED TO STOP A DEPARTMENTAL PRACTICE—SOME FACTS BROUGHT OUT—REVELATIONS MADE BY ASSISTANT CHIEF MORAN—EXAMINED BY MR. TAWNEY—STRINGENT RESTRICTION ON THE SECRET SERVICE BUREAU TO BE PUT IN THE SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

It is all up with the "black cabinet" of Washington. Alarmed by the institution here in the National Capital of a secret-service spy system similar to that of the hated black cabinet of St. Petersburg, the House Appropriation Committee has included in the sundry civil appropriation bill, which will be reported this week, a drastic and stringent provision prohibiting the detailing, assignment, or loan of any member of the government secret-service force to any other department of the Government for any purpose whatsoever.

The hearings on the sundry civil bill, which have not yet been made public, contain a deal of interesting information extracted after considerable effort from Assistant Chief W. H. Moran, of the Secret Service. This section of the hearings which contains Mr. Moran's testimony shows that in detailing secret-service operators to other departments of the Government for detective purposes the law now on the statute books has been repeatedly violated.

USED IN DIVORCE PROCEEDINGS.

But it was learned to-day that there is a great deal more in the mater than appears in the hearings. It is known that these secret-service men loaned to other departments have been used in all sorts of ways; and some of the ways, even by the most liberal interpretation, can not be construed to be in any degree intimately related to the actual business of the Government. Officials of the departments here in Washington, officials of high and low degree, who for one reason or another have fallen under the suspicion of their superiors, have been followed night and day by these secret-service agents of the Government, detailed from the Secret Service Division to this, that, or the other department and paid out of that department fund with the good gold of Uncle Sam.

It is said that any number of cases of this kind could be cited, but the most remarkable of all, and the one which, so far as the Appropriation Committee is concerned, was the straw that broke the camel's back, was the employment by the Navy Department of a secret-service man to gather evidence of the kind that ordinarily is used only on one side or the other in a sensational divorce case. Upon this kind of evidence gathered by a secret-service man paid by the Government drastic action was based, a midshipman at the Naval Academy being dismissed from the service, which dismissal was followed by a suit for divorce in naval circles.

To show to what extent the practice among the various departments of using secret-service men for all purposes has grown it is necessary only to state that in the fiscal year 1907 the Secret Service Division supplied 78 detectives to the other departments of the Government here in Washington. Sixty-one of these men went to the Department of Justice, 7 to the State Department, 3 to the War Department, 4 to the Navy Department, and 3 to the Department of Commerce and Labor. From July 1, 1907, to February 29, 1908, 66 detectives were supplied to the departments by the Secret Service Division, 51 going to the Department of Justice, 5 to the State Department, 4 to the War Department, 5 to the Navy Department, and 1 to Porto Rico.

TO STOP THE PRACTICE.

According to Chairman TAWNEY and other members of the House Committee on Appropriations, nothing more foreign to every fundamental principle of the republican form of government could be imagined than this gradual growth and extension of the espionage system here in the National Capital. The members of the committee are a unit in the determination to stop the practice here and now, and the provision which they have included in the sundry civil bill is intended to accomplish this end. They believe that they will have the support of a majority of the Members of the House of Representatives in their efforts, and Chairman TAWNEY expects that after he and other members of the committee have called attention to the utterances of Assistant Chief Moran, of the Secret Service, and have explained the situation and the remedial paragraph the legislative restriction in question will be permitted to remain in the bill, thus effectually putting a quietus on the local "black cabinet."

The Appropriations Committee had some trouble in getting Assistant Chief Moran to admit that the law was being violated.

"Are these men detailed to the other departments?" asked Chairman TAWNEY of Mr. Moran when the latter appeared before the committee.

"No," replied Mr. Moran, "they are not detailed."

"Could they be detailed?"

"No, sir; not lawfully."

Replying to Mr. TAWNEY's questions, Mr. Moran then admitted that when the secret-service men were detailed or loaned or assigned, or whatever it may be called, to other departments they did not resign their position as secret-service men, and that brought forth the query from Mr. TAWNEY if the word "detailed" was used in the ordinary way.

"I don't think you intend that," said Mr. TAWNEY, "because if you have detailed them you have violated the law."

"We do not detail them," said Mr. Moran, correcting himself. "What is done, we separate them entirely from our service; in other words, their pay and allowance is stopped the moment they undertake any other work for any other department."

MERE EVASION.

But taking this statement as a basis Mr. TAWNEY demonstrated by extracting information piecemeal from Mr. Moran that, although these men were not "detailed," yet the difference from actually detailing them and loaning or assigning them amounted to little more than a technical evasion of the law. Not only that, but these secret-service men sent to other departments do not cease reporting to their secret-service chiefs, nor do they take the oath of office under any other department, as is required by statute. All these matters were brought out in full.

It also came out that when the secret-service force was not sufficient to supply all the demands for men from the various departments outside detectives from private agencies were employed, although this has been expressly forbidden by statute ever since the Homestead strike.

"If a department made request upon the Treasury Department for secret-service employees," asked Mr. TAWNEY, "and you were not able to meet that request with the force you then had in the employ of the Secret Service of the Treasury Department, how would you supply their demands?"

"Well," replied Mr. Moran, "we would tell them we could not supply them."

"Or would you employ other men temporarily?" inquired the chairman.

A TEMPORARY FORCE.

"Well, we have done that," said Mr. Moran; "we have employed men who have performed temporary service for us and found them to be efficient."

"So under the present practice," remarked Mr. TAWNEY, "it would be possible for each department of the Government to secure and maintain a secret-service force, provided it had the appropriation out of which it could pay the compensation and the per diem which these people demand and which the Secretary of the Treasury recommends?"

"Yes," admitted Mr. Moran, "if we had the proper number of men available. We do not recommend to another department a man for any service unless we know that man is peculiarly fitted to perform it."

The chairman continued along the same line. "If," asked he, "the demand for this service from another department was such as to require the services of more men than are in your department regularly, and you had applications on file and investigated them to satisfy yourself as to the efficiency and competency of the men, you could, as a matter of fact, supply the entire demand from other departments in this way?"

Mr. Moran admitted that this was the fact.

"Now," questioned Mr. TAWNEY, "did you not, as a matter of fact, know that the restrictions of the law are intended to prevent that very practice?"

"No," replied Mr. Moran. "I did not know that. It was never put to us in that way."

Then, in reply to questions from various members of the committee, Mr. Moran admitted that although a detective's secret-service pay was stopped when he was loaned to another department, his chief continued to be his chief, and there was a full record in the central Secret Service Bureau of the activities and discoveries, whether of an official, personal, social, or scandalous nature, of all the detectives so loaned and employed.

"So," commented Mr. TAWNEY, "to all intents and purposes he remains a member of the Secret Service Department?"

"Yes; that is true," admitted Mr. Moran.

OF RECENT GROWTH.

Then the chairman endeavored to find out how long the "black cabinet" had been flourishing so blithely.

"Can you tell me, Mr. Moran, from your recollection," asked Mr. TAWNEY, "about when the practice of using as many detectives as the departments are now using began?"

"Never as many as now," replied Mr. Moran. "It has been increasing right along, in the last few years particularly."

"Is it not a fact," continued the chairman, "that prior to about six or seven years ago men in your Secret Service were requested by other departments very infrequently?"

"Comparatively; yes," replied the assistant chief.

"Have you kept your force up and do you now aim to keep your force up to supply not only the men that are required in the service for which appropriations are made, but also to meet the requirements of other departments as they are demanded?"

"Yes; otherwise we would not keep these 20 additional men on the roll."

"You keep in the neighborhood of 20 men in addition to the men necessary to do your work under this appropriation on hand at all times to supply the other departments, and they are employed all of the time?" asked Mr. TAWNEY.

"Well," replied Mr. Moran, "we have had need for them recently in that way."

PRONOUNCED UNLAWFUL.

Then the committee discovered that although the Secret Service Division treated these loaned detectives still as their employees and yet not their employees, the other departments treated them as still regularly connected with the Secret Service, not requiring them to take the oath of office. This, it was pointed out by the committee in no undecided language, was unlawful.

"You say they do not take the oath of other departments?" asked Mr. TAWNEY.

"Not in all cases," replied Mr. Moran.

"Then," continued the chairman, "how can they be compensated for their service? The law expressly prohibits compensation until the oath of office has been taken."

In reply to this question Mr. Moran answered that the Secret Service Bureau did not want this class of work and would not care if it were stopped to-morrow.

Mr. TAWNEY then read the oath of office to the committee in order to reinforce his statement.

[Washington Star, April 22, 1908.]

ESPIONAGE EXISTS—REPRESENTATIVES CONTRADICT CHIEF WILKIE'S STATEMENT—DECLARE LAW IS VIOLATED—SAY SPY SYSTEM INVADES PRIVACY OF CITIZENS—ASSISTANT MORAN IS QUOTED—REPRESENTATIVE SMITH PRONOUNCES PRACTICE REPUGNANCE TO OUR RACE—MR. BONAPARTE'S ARGUMENT.

Members of the House Appropriation Committee were somewhat surprised this morning when they read in the local papers a statement from Chief Wilkie, of the Secret Service, denying the stories printed yesterday with reference to the employment of secret-service men on all sorts of sleuthing work, from domestic entanglements down, or up. One member of Congress remarked this morning that Mr. Wilkie would do well to read the hearings on the sundry civil bill, or, rather, that portion of them which contains a statement from Assistant Chief Moran, of the Secret Service. In spite of Mr. Wilkie's denial, members of Congress say that Mr. Moran's admissions show very plainly that the law has been repeatedly violated.

This matter will undoubtedly provoke considerable discussion on the floor of the House if there should be time and opportunity when the sundry civil bill is up.

There was some discussion of secret-service operations before the committee when Attorney-General Bonaparte was explaining the necessity for various appropriations for his department. At that time Representative SMITH of Iowa made this statement:

HOSTILITY TO SPIES.

I do not think there is any hostility to the employment of men like bank examiners, but under the secret-service system, up to twenty-five years ago, or about that, these men were used for the purpose of investigating different felonies committed against the laws of the United States; and owing to the abuse of this spy system, Congress put a clause in the bill providing they should be used for certain specific purposes and for no other purposes whatever. That has been repeated in every act for the Secret Service for about a quarter of a century. Bank examiners are not in any sense detectives; they are accounting officers. Do you not think that all this fairly illustrates the hostility on the part of Congress to the spy system?

"The growth of the country," replied the Attorney-General, "is such, and the enormous increase in facilities of communication and the, so to speak, 'cosmopolitization' of crime—if I can call it the word for the occasion—is such, that you are compelled now to have a central agency to deal with it. What I recommend on this subject is what I have recommended all along—that you put into the hands of the Department of Justice the opportunity to employ a certain number of men for this purpose. What you have said about the spy system applies rather to the method of doing the work than to the work itself. We are obliged to have people who will investigate and report on the facts attendant on crimes or suspected crimes, and the protection of the community makes it very desirable that you should have as efficient a force as you can."

PRYING INTO PRIVACY.

"Perhaps what is in the minds of some of us is this," suggested Representative SHERLEY, of Kentucky. "There is a certain character of offenses about which there has been much talk. Now, it does not strike some of us as being in accord with American ideas of government to undertake, by a system of spying on men and prying into what ordinarily would be designated as their private affairs, to determine whether or not a crime has been committed and to make the efficiency of a department dependent, not so much upon the presentation in an orderly and legal way of a case properly brought as upon the 'nosing' of the secret-service men. There seems to be a growing tendency to look to the employment of special agents whose chief attribute is their ability to spy."

In support of his contention for a regular force of detectives for the Department of Justice, as opposed to the idea of hiring secret-service operators by the job, Mr. Bonaparte remarked:

"If you pay him by the job and make his continued employment dependent upon his finding more jobs, you run into the danger of making him what they call abroad an 'agent provocateur,' a person who creates the crime in order that he may get the credit of detecting and punishing the criminal. I do not want you to understand me as saying that the secret-service men do that at all, but I do say if you will put a definite force in charge of this work you will avoid some of the very evils to which you have referred."

"REPUGNANT TO OUR RACE."

"I saw it stated in a newspaper the other day," remarked Representative SMITH of Iowa, "that the American government inspection service and Secret Service far exceeded that of Russia."

"I fancy that is rather an exaggerated statement," remarked Mr. Bonaparte; "however, I have no information as to the number they have in Russia. But there is no doubt that nothing is more injurious in that line and nothing more open to abuse than the employment of men of that type."

"Nothing is more opposed to our race," said Mr. SMITH, emphatically, "than a belief that a general system of espionage is being conducted by the General Government."

[Washington Star, April 23, 1908.]

WILKIE MAY APPEAR—CHANCE FOR HIM TO EXPLAIN DENIAL OF FACTS—BAD TEAM WORK OF MORAN—SOME OF CHIEF'S OWN STATEMENTS ON PRIVATE ESPIONAGE—WERE ERASED FROM RECORD—PRESIDENT SAID TO FAVOR PROHIBITION OF "BLACK-CABINET" WORK BY SECRET-SERVICE MEN.

It looks now as if Chief Wilkie, of the Secret Service, would be called before the House Committee on Appropriations to explain his denial of certain statements published exclusively in the Star with reference to the investigation by secret-service operatives of domestic entanglements, etc. Mr. Wilkie denied, in an interview, that any secret-service men had ever been engaged on work of this description. Yet it became known to-day that some of the testimony before the sundry civil subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations was so extremely "divorce-courty" that it was expunged from the records, and does not appear in the printed hearings.

A member of the Committee on Appropriations to-day pointed out that there seemed to be a distressing lack of team work between Chief Wilkie and Assistant Chief Moran of the Secret Service. He pointed out that if Mr. Wilkie had waited until Saturday, when the hearings on the sundry civil bill will be made public, he would have found that the facts which he now denies were admitted by Mr. Moran.

THE "BLACK CABINET."

There has been much discussion of the Washington "black cabinet" and of the system of comprehensive espionage which exists in Washington since the publication yesterday and the day before in the Star of the facts in connection with this remarkable case. It is believed that the drastic provision inserted in the sundry civil bill by the subcommittee, prohibiting the employment of secret-service men on any sort of work except the capture of counterfeiters and the protection of the President, will pass the House by a vote virtually unanimous.

Particularly is this the case since President Roosevelt, as it became known to-day, is not averse to some sort of a provision limiting the activities of secret-service men in this particular. It was expected that he would be opposed to placing this limitation in the bill, but several members of Congress said to-day that the President, after inquiring into the truth of the statement and finding that, in spite of Mr. Wilkie's denial, the facts were as stated in the Star, had declined to countenance a continuation of the practice.

The testimony before the Appropriation Committee, which was such as to warrant its being stricken from the records, had to do with the case, mentioned in the Star day before yesterday, of the midshipman who got mixed up in a domestic tangle and who was shadowed by secret-service men until sufficient evidence was found to warrant his dismissal from the navy.

[Washington Star, April 25, 1908.]

TO ABOLISH BLACK CABINET—PROPOSED TO END ABUSES OF THE SECRET SERVICE—VARIOUS LEGISLATIVE LIMITATIONS INCLUDED IN THE SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

"No person employed in the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department or under the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes, who is detailed, furloughed, granted leave of absence, dismissed, or otherwise temporarily or finally separated from the service of such division and is thereafter employed under any other branch of the public service, shall be restored or paid compensation for service or expenses in the Secret Service Division for two years after the termination of his employment under such other branch of the Government."

The legislative limitation above quoted is included in the sundry civil appropriation bill reported to the House to-day from the Committee on Appropriations, and is intended to do away with the evils and abuses of the secret-service system of the Government, which were unearthed during the preparation of the sundry civil bill by the committee. Chairman TAWNEY and his colleagues feel assured that this provision when adopted by the Senate and House—and they feel certain that it will be adopted—will put the "black cabinet" out of business and reduce to an irreducible minimum the espionage system which has been growing in favor for some years with department heads and others in Washington.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman in favor of the resolution or opposed to it?

Mr. WEEKS. I am in favor of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, I think there are but two considerations which justify me in taking any of the time of the House on this subject. I had intended to speak in my own time, in my own way, for the resolution, but so much time has been used and there are so many gentlemen who wish to speak that I will confine myself first to saying that I am in full accord, not only with the resolution, but with what my colleagues on the special committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DENBY] have said. I could not say it as well as they have, and I indorse every word.

The other consideration which leads me to take time is a reference which I wish to make to the speech that has just been made by my friend from New York [Mr. BENNET]. In doing so I should like to get the House back to a consideration of the resolution itself. I have great confidence in the intelligence and ability of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], but I must say that I have never heard so much time taken by him or anyone else on the floor of this House, discussing a resolution or a bill so irrelevantly as he has treated this subject. [Laughter.] I regret exceedingly, Mr. Speaker, that he has dragged in the question of politics. The resolution which provided for the special committee was adopted by the unanimous vote of the Members of this House, and I can say for the committee that there has never been a word during its consultations, and I believe there has never been a thought given to the political effect or the political results or to political considerations in any way. There should not have been and there should not be now.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. BENNET of New York. In what part of my remarks did I, as the gentleman seems to imply, refer to any political effect?

Mr. WEEKS. Well, the gentleman's remarks when they are printed will show.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not yield to the gentleman from New York in my admiration for the President or of his great qualities, but I occasionally take issue with certain things the President does and says; and this resolution which is reported to the House, in my opinion, justly takes issue with his message of December 7.

We have no desire to reflect on the purposes of the President. We have no desire to affect his future repute, as has been intimated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], but we have a desire to show our approval of recent messages sent to the Congress, and it is the consideration of the real merits of the resolution under consideration which I wish to call the attention of the House to in the few minutes which I shall speak.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] makes a mistake when he introduces the southern district of New York as a criterion of places where secret-service men may work effectually. The rest of the country may not be as fertile a field for secret-service men as the southern district of New York [laughter], but in any case whether they have performed efficient service there or elsewhere is not the question. We are appropriating millions and millions of dollars, I am told over $20,000,000 for inspection work in this country, and the first session of the Sixtieth Congress increased the appropriation for inspection work in the different departments many times the amount curtailed in the Secret Service Division, and I believe it was done without any malice and for the good of the service.

We are not considering what the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] has been discussing; that is to say, the duties of the Secret Service, the functions which it has performed, whether the service should be enlarged, whether it should perform all of the inspection work done by all departments.

That is a matter which is subject to investigation, and on which I assume that the minds of most Members of this House are open. But I want to emphasize the fact that the reduction of the appropriation for the Secret Service could not, in itself, have materially crippled the action of the Government in its propaganda against lawbreakers, when millions of dollars are appropriated to other departments to carry on this or similar work. Undoubtedly the restriction placed on the Secret Service was one which limited it to the purposes intended by the existing law, and I have yet to see, from any source, any evidence whatever that any criminal, or any set of criminals, have not been apprehended because of the action taken by the House last spring in making an appropriation for the Secret Service in the sundry civil bill. Of course, however, those matters are problematical, and the question of the desirability of increasing the Secret Service or changing the character of its duties, or of in any other manner changing the methods now followed by the Government to ferret out crime in different departments, is a subject of such importance that it should be treated after careful investigation, as I assume it will be.

But the House has made no objection to the President's criticism of its legislative action in this matter, although in the earlier days of the Republic such a criticism would have been resented, as is instanced by a protest sent by President Tyler to the House of Representatives, relating to its action on a certain bill, but in which nothing whatever was said which reflected on the motives of the House. In that case the House refused to receive the protest which had been sent it by the President. What this House is contending for is the right, as a separate and equal branch of our governmental system, to act as it sees fit, and in no way to have its motives for such action questioned; and I hope it will be shown by the vote which this House will soon cast that its membership agrees in the contention that the words "The chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret-service men," contained in the President's message of December 7, did reflect on the motives of the Members of the House, as this opinion is largely sustained by the press of the country. It seemed to the special committee, after making a suitable investigation of the language referred to, and the reasons which might have led to its use, that it should, in fairness and propriety, ask the President for any reasons which he had on which to base such a charge. The result of this resolution was the President's message of January 4.

Even if there were a difference of opinion on the part of the executive and legislative branches of the Government as to the desirability of changing the conditions which surround the Secret Service, that question would be of no importance whatever compared with the real issue for which the House contends.

Members of this House are not responsible to any other than their constituents for their actions or the motives which actuate them. The majority of the Members of this House have been elected and reelected after heated controversies, in which they have been criticised by political associates in contests for nominations and political opponents in contests for election. Their public acts, and their private characters, even, have been subjected to the strongest lime light, and therefore it is fair to say that when a man has been elected, and repeatedly elected, to this House he fairly well represents the average views and wishes and purposes of his constituents. Therefore any reflection on this House becomes even broader than a reflection on its membership. It becomes a reflection on the people of the United States, and it is our duty to not only resent this on our own account, but on account of the people who are represented by us, and in order that the language of the President may not stand as a precedent and be used in future as a basis of serious differences between branches of the Government. It is apparent to anyone, in this reign of yellow journalism and yellow magazines, that the public has been educated up to the view that, while their own Representative may be irreproachable in character, Representatives and Senators as a body are hardly worthy to represent the best wishes and intents of the people of this country; and if such a view, expressed by the President of the United States, promulgated with the great authority of his office and his unequaled popularity, is allowed to go unanswered it will be, in my judgment, a serious reflection on popular government, and one which we can not, whatever our personal views may be, allow to pass unchallenged.

While I am not an expert on what would be admitted by any court as evidence, after a careful examination of the President's message of January 4, 1909, I am forced to the conclusion that there is not a syllable in it other than the reference to Mr. SHERLEY, of Kentucky, and what he said on the particular subject in controversy, which would be admitted as evidence, and, while I have no brief to explain the questions or the action taken by the gentleman from Kentucky, it is worthy of note that in a debate which covers 14 columns of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—more than eleven hundred lines—less than 10 lines were devoted to any reference whatever to the undesirability of spying on the action of Congressmen or other government officials; that these 10 lines were included in two questions asked by Mr. SHERLEY of the gentleman who had the floor; that one of these questions not only included Members of Congress, but also army and navy officers and other government officials; that they were evidently asked without any premeditation whatever; and that when the gentleman from Kentucky himself obtained the floor he did not, in any manner, refer to this subject. It is on this slender thread that the President hangs the statement that the "chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret-service men."

It is the purpose of the committee in making this report to indicate that the House can not receive from the President, or from any one else, a message couched in such language that it constitutes a breach of the privileges of the House. The language referred to, in the message of December 7, and the entire message of January 4, in the opinion of the committee, comes under this head, and therefore our report that both lie on the table. Fortunately, there are few precedents for such action or the necessity for such action, and in no case is there a precedent which applies directly to this case, because never before has the President of the United States reflected in public message on the motives which govern the members of a coordinate branch of the Government.

There have been disputes heretofore between the President and the Congress, disputes compared to which this one is a gentle and trifling matter, but never before did the President in an official communication impugn the motives of the members of either House.

The gentleman from New York has referred to President Jackson and President Tyler. I have, fortunately, at hand the expressions of their views on this subject, and I think they will clearly demonstrate, because their contests with Congress were much more violent than anything we are likely to see in our day and generation, the impropriety of the use of language which imputes a wrong motive to either the executive or the legislative branch of the service.

In 1834 President Jackson sent the names of four directors of the United States Bank to the Senate for confirmation. The Senate failed to confirm them. The President later sent their names back to the Senate with a protest against its action and a statement why his nominations should be confirmed, using this language:

I disclaim all pretension of right on the part of the President officially to inquire into or call in question the reasons of the Senate for rejecting any nomination whatsoever. As the President is not responsible to them for the reasons which induce him to make a nomination, so they are not responsible to him for the reasons which induce them to reject it. In these respects each is independent of the other, and both responsible to their respective constituents.

Now, if there ever was a case where the President might call into question the action of the Senate in not agreeing with his recommendation, it is in that particular case, where the functions of the Executive and the Senate are in some degree the same, the action of one having to be taken in order to confirm the action of the other.

In the summer of 1842 President Tyler vetoed a revenue bill, and when his veto was returned to the Congress, instead of being acted on promptly by the House of Representatives, it was referred to a special committee, and August 30 of that year he sent a message of protest against the manner of procedure which the House had adopted, asking that this protest be entered on the Journal of the House, which request, however, was refused. In the protest referred to, President Tyler used the following language:

I would not have been so far forgetful of what was due from one department of the Government to another as to have intentionally employed in my official intercourse with the House any language that could be, in the slightest degree, offensive to those to whom it was addressed. If, in assigning my objections to the bill, I had so far forgotten what was due to the House of Representatives as to impugn its motives in passing the bill, I should owe, not only to the House, but to the country, the most profound apology.

[Applause.]

To show precedents for resenting the action of the President in purely legislative matters and the passing of resolution of condemnation, I call attention to the records of the Senate of March 28, 1834, and of the House in 1842, and also the reply of President Jackson to the resolution passed by the Senate.

The chairman of the committee which framed the resolution resenting the action of President Tyler in sending a protest to the House in 1842 was John Quincy Adams, of Massachusetts, then serving in the House after he had served a term as President of the United States.

No one, whether friend or foe, will question Andrew Jackson's strength of character, his having positive opinions and an ever readiness to advocate them, and yet he, in the heat of a controversy which has become famous, wished to, and did, preserve, as far as he was able, suitable relations between the departments of the Government; for, in the controversy which has been referred to, which had to do with the disposition of public revenues, in reply to the following resolution passed by the Senate on the 28th of March, 1834—

Resolved, That the President in the late executive proceedings in relation to the public revenue, has assumed upon himself authority and power not conferred by the Constitution and laws, but in derogation of both—

President Jackson, on April 15 of the same year, sent a protest to the Senate, going into the subject of controversy at great length, and requested that the protest be entered on the journal of the Senate. In this protest he expressed the following views:

It can seldom be necessary for any department of the Government, when assailed in conversation or debate, or by the strictures of the press or of popular assemblies, to step out of its ordinary path for the purpose of vindicating its conduct or of pointing out any irregularity or injustice in the manner of the attack; but when the Chief Executive Magistrate is, by one of the most important branches of the Government, in its official capacity, in a public manner, and by its recorded sentence, but without precedent, competent authority, or just cause, declared guilty of a breach of the laws and Constitution, it is due to his station, to the public opinion, and to a proper self-respect, that the officer thus denounced should promptly expose the wrong which has been done.

In the same protest he uses the following language:

But the evil tendency of the particular doctrine adverted to, though sufficiently serious, would be as nothing in comparison with the pernicious consequences which would inevitably flow from an approbation and allowance by the people, and the practice by the Senate of the unconstitutional power of arraigning and censuring the official conduct of the Executive in the manner recently pursued. Such proceedings are eminently calculated to unsettle the foundations of the Government, to disturb the harmonious action of its different departments, and to break down the checks and balances by which the wisdom of its framers sought to insure its stability and usefulness.

In 1841 the House adopted certain resolutions, condemning the course of President Tyler in a controversy relating to the revenues, and having received from the President a protest against the right of the House to censure his public course, the House, after a long and elaborate discussion of the whole matter, adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That while the House is, and ever will be, ready to receive from the President all such messages and communications as the Constitution and laws and the usual course of business authorize him to transmit to it, yet it can not recognize any right in him to make a formal protest against votes and proceedings of the House, declaring such votes and proceedings to be illegal and unconstitutional, and requesting the House to enter such protest on its journal.

Resolved, That the aforesaid protest is a breach of the privileges of this House, and that it be not entered on the Journal.

Resolved, That the President of the United States has no right to send a protest to the House against any of its proceedings.

December 9, 1868, President Johnson in a special message, or in his annual message, advocated what amounted to repudiation, and during the debate which took place after the message was received the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of that Congress used this language:

I look upon that portion of the message as the most gross, shameless, infamous proposition, to repudiate the debt of the country, that I have ever yet heard impudently avowed from any quarter.

The result of the action of the House was, on motion of Mr. Washburn, of Illinois, the laying of the message on the table and ordering it printed. I simply allude to this to show that there has been one precedent on which to base the action of the special committee in recommending the resolution which it has reported. After a careful inquiry into the records of Congress, I fail to find any other precedent, and even in this case it will be noticed that no reference was made to the action of the House or to impugn the motives of the Members of the House.

Mr. Speaker, for one, I want to say that, in my judgment, if this House took any other action than that which is proposed in the report of the special committee, it would not only convict itself of a lack of proper self-respect, but it would indicate a degree of supineness which would make it contemptible in the eyes of the people of this country, and even in the eyes of the President himself. The resolutions, therefore, ought to pass. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts reserve his time or yield the floor?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the resolution?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, had I not obtained the inference from the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that the opposition to this resolution was not going to express itself very largely on the floor of this House, I should have remained silent at this time, because I had not known that the resolution was coming up, and on account of its grave importance, not only to this House and possibly to the country, but especially to the Republican party, I would have been very glad indeed to have listened to those gentlemen who have more influence and who were better able to speak. I do, however, have some quite well-defined notions as to the merits of this question, and am perfectly willing to express them for what they are worth. I do not yield to anyone in my appreciation of the dignity of membership in the National House of Representatives. I appreciate the character of such membership most highly. I believe, as I have said on many occasions, that it is composed of the highest quality and character of men that can be found in the United States. I hold in high esteem the members of the great Committee on Appropriations. Not one of them do I question as to his honor, his integrity, or his ability, and I am anxious that their reputations shall be preserved against all possible unjust attacks, as I am jealous that my own reputation shall be preserved. As for myself, I have no fear of any investigation; I welcome it. Nor do I believe a majority or any number of this House has any fear of any kind of an investigation, whether by the Secret Service or otherwise. But we are confronted to-day with the proposition of adopting the resolution which looks to protecting the honor and integrity of the membership of this House against what has been claimed to be an attack by the Executive of the United States. It will be conceded that the President of the United States has a right to recommend legislation to the Congress; has a right to criticise legislation, the same as the House has the right and does exercise that right of criticising the Executive whenever it feels that he has gone wrong in anything that he may have done.

I am not claiming, nor am I going to contend, that the language of the President in his first or second message was the most fortunate that could be used. The President of the United States has a way of his own of expressing himself. He is a strenuous man, but the country believes that his is the strenuosity of a desire to serve it. When he recognized what he thought was a neglect of duty on the part of Congress in failing to provide suitably for the Secret Service and said that the main argument that was used in the Congress against its use by the Executive was their wish not to be investigated, he but expressed the sentiment of this House in this respect, I care not what you say about it. You did not have fear of investigation, but there was a righteous wave of indignation went over the House when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] suggested that a Member had been "shadowed" by the Secret Service, and I confess that I was one of those who felt indignant. I did not understand the facts then, but learned later, and in time to vote against the amendment. There can be no question but what Mr. SHERLEY's suggestion that a Congressman had been shadowed was repulsive to Members, and that without any thought of a possible disclosure of some criminal act, but rather because Congressmen felt that an unwarranted indignity might thus be shown them, and the dignity and honor of the House thereby lowered.

Now, what do you propose in this resolution to do? You propose to lay on the table the President's message or portions of it for the purpose of justifying ourselves or rather of clearing our name of any possible imputation which that message may cast upon us. But I say to you gentlemen if you are seeking to preserve your reputation before the country you will not accomplish it in this way. [Applause.] You can not secure it by any such action as this. The people have already settled it, and have no patience with oversensitive Congressmen. I myself am very sorry that the question ever came up. I submit that the original resolution was beneath the dignity of this House, and while I sat here in silence under the magic eloquence of that overpowering appeal of the gentleman from New York when he asked that it should pass unanimously, I simply submitted to what I afterwards believed to be a great mistake. We asked for information. That is what we asked of the President, and he proceeded to give it to us as he found it in the RECORD. There can be no question about this it seems to me. However we may feel about it, that is the situation which confronts us to-day. We have the information for which we asked. I submit that we ought, as you will find by reading the various resolutions and the message of the President——

Mr STANLEY. Will the gentleman submit to a question?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will.

Mr. STANLEY. As I understand the gentleman from Michigan, his only objection to the message of the President of the United States or the alleged objectionable matter in it is that he told the truth in a rather blunt way; that this objection is to the manner of his expression rather than the matter of it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will of course permit that to go into my speech as the opinion of the gentleman, and I do not propose to argue with him at this time as to how he expresses it. In fact I am willing to concede that he expresses the situation quite clearly, as I understand it.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I would like to ask; if the gentleman felt such a wave of indignation in his own breast and going over the House when there was an imputation, as he alleges, on the part of the gentleman from Kentucky that Members had been shadowed, what would actually be the feeling when the direct charge is made by the highest officer of the Government that the motives that prevented a certain action, in the best judgment of the committee having in charge the bill, was to prevent doing that very thing that the gentleman says almost caused a shudder or wave of indignation to go around. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will say to my colleague from Michigan that, while it is true, as he states, that what the President desired was freer use of the Secret Service, it is, notwithstanding, true that I, with many others in this House—and I submit they will not deny it—believed when that matter was brought up in May last that it was something new, something outside the duties that ought to be imposed upon the Secret Service, and had been used for an improper purpose. These facts have been brought out by this discussion by the gentleman from Kentucky, in whose honor and integrity I have the most unbounded confidence, and who, I have no doubt, can explain this situation, if it needs any. I submit he needs no apology; I submit he does not need any explanation, nor does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] need any explanation before the country and before this House; neither the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. TAWNEY], nor any other Member on that committee, so far as that is concerned. It seems to me, in view of the fact that there can be several interpretations placed upon the language of the President, gentlemen are a little supersensitive at this time in presenting these resolutions, in magnifying the situation, which will not relieve us before the country, even though we adopt them. The President has explained his words and disclaims any attempt to be unjust to the House. So I say, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the resolution. I am satisfied that all the good has been accomplished that can possibly be accomplished. There is no man in this country—no right-thinking man—who would believe that Congress, or would believe that many members of this Congress, are criminals. Our honor rests with us. No man can blacken our reputation. It lies wholly and entirely with us to make a record that shall command respect with the people of the United States.

Adopting this resolution will not help Members. We are not judged, so far as our character is concerned, by the adoption of any resolution, but rather by what we are and do.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will.

Mr. McMILLAN. Has any American citizen a right to say we are wrong without a fair investigation, no matter what office he occupies in the United States? [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not believe the gentleman will get many cheers on that proposition. The President of the United States has a right to recommend to the Congress and to say we are wrong, as far as that is concerned. There can not be any question about that. There ought not to be.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. McMILLAN. Can he answer that question without yielding to another that he furnish the evidence?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The President has furnished, in my judgment, all the information that was asked of him, all that he could furnish, and such as is corroborated by the RECORD, because taken therefrom.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The committee asked the President to furnish the House with any information which he had, whether obtained through the Secret Service or otherwise, showing the chief argument that had actuated the House in the legislation referred to was a desire to shield criminals, and especially to shield themselves. The committee, furthermore, asked the President to send any evidence that he had of any corruption, corrupt motive, or corrupt influence affecting the members of the Sixtieth Congress. The gentleman says that the President sent the information demanded. Now, will the gentleman direct himself for a few minutes to the proof of what he has just stated, namely, that the President did send the information demanded?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Now, Mr. Speaker, I supposed I had answered that argument in the first place. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has asked a long question, involving a good many parts. In the first place, the President has never said that we were afraid of being investigated or that the Congress was. The President has never said that there were any criminals in Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman permit one more question?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Let me answer. You are getting them piled up so fast that I can not catch up with you.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman is laying a foundation as a premise that, in my opinion, does not exist in the question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Here is the objectionable clause in the President's message, as I understand it:

> The chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret-service men.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is so, and then the following reference, that if in the opinion of Congress it were wise to exempt Congressmen from being shadowed, it was still wise to keep the service for other criminals. Of course that is not the exact language.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; it does not say that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is fairly the argument.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; I do not think it is. I think the gentleman demonstrates very clearly that different constructions can be put upon the very language that the President used. My opinion is that the "chief argument," and "chief" is a quality that must be decided by the President—what he thinks was the chief argument, not what the gentleman from Mississippi thinks was the chief argument or what I think was the chief argument—is just what the President thinks it was.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The facts must decide it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. He maintains the chief argument used was that the Congressmen did not wish to be investigated, and quotes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] in reference to that, which is shown in the RECORD, and which I submit, as I have said before, is a valid argument, because I believe that you, sir, did not care to have the President of the United States employ the Secret Service for this particular purpose, not that the gentleman was afraid of being investigated or that he expected to be investigated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the gentleman's pardon; and I think the gentleman is as much mistaken about every other Member of the House, except himself, as he is about me. I would welcome a presidential shadow as amusing company at all times, and I am going to propose at the proper time, if the gentleman will permit me, that, while this new amendment of the law shall continue in operation, there shall be inserted this proviso——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I can not yield for this speech in my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not going to make a speech. It will not take a minute and a half. I am going to ask to have inserted this proviso:

> Provided, however, That nothing in this law contained shall be so construed as to prevent the President of the United States from appointing a corps of secret-service agents, not exceeding 480-odd in number, the sole function of whom and the sole duty of whom shall be to shadow, espy upon, and report to the President of the United States concerning the conduct of each member of the House of Representatives and of the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Now, Mr. Speaker, I conclude by saying that I regard this question as one that is unwisely brought before the House at this time; gentlemen have builded a mountain from a molehill. The very arguments themselves and the questions that have been asked show the varied constructions that can be put upon the President's message. I do not believe we would justify ourselves before the country, or justify the standing of this Congress before the country, by the adoption of this resolution. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman reserve his time?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY]. [Loud and long-continued applause.]

CONFIDENCE OF PEOPLE THE ESSENTIAL OF GOVERNMENT.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, the continued success and perpetuity of government depend more upon the confidence of the people in the integrity, honor, and unselfish patriotism of those charged with the duty and responsibility of government than upon any other condition connected with, or incident to, government. Without it no government can long endure. Ours would soon crumble and fall. Whatever tends to destroy this confidence, whether arising from within any of the coordinate branches of the Government or coming from without, should be frankly and fearlessly met and, if possible, overcome. [Applause.]

Where, as in our form of government, the functions of government are divided and their exercise duly vested in separate and distinct branches, with the powers, rights, and privileges of each fixed and determined by written constitution, nothing can contribute so much to the destruction of this great essential of government or to the disintegration of our Republic as an attempt upon the part of one branch of the Government to impeach the honor and integrity of another branch, however that attempted impeachment may be sought, whether by attributing to the members of that other branch as a whole motives for their official conduct wholly inconsistent with honor, integrity, and the faithful discharge of duty, or otherwise.

The arbitrary and unauthorized use of the great power of any one of the branches of our Government in this respect, if allowed to pass unchallenged, will go further to undermine the confidence of the people in their Government than all other agencies combined. Undermine the confidence of the people in any one of the three coordinate branches of their Government and you have done more to destroy the foundation upon which that Government rests than could be accomplished in any other way.

THE MOTIVES OF CONGRESS IMPUGNED.

When therefore the head of the executive branch of our Government deliberately charges, as was done in the annual message of the President of December 8, 1908, that the legislative branch, in the exercise of its constitutional functions, has passed legislation which "has been of benefit only, and could be of benefit only, to the criminal classes," and "if deliberately introduced for the purpose of diminishing the effectiveness of war against crime, it could not have been better devised to that end," there is clearly implied, if the English language means anything, that in adopting this provision the Congress of the United States intended to benefit and protect from detection and punishment those guilty of committing fraud and other violations of the public law. No disclaimer now, however strenuous and vehement, can modify or change either the meaning of the language used by the President or its interpretation by the people and by the press of this country, under which interpretation the honor and integrity of Congress has been assailed and stands impeached. It is because of the interpretation of the language used and its effect upon their confidence in this branch of their Government that I deem it important to treat the charge as it has been accepted and is understood by the people generally. [Applause.]

The people as a whole can not conclude from this language otherwise than that in adopting the provision of law criticised Congress did so knowing that it would be "of benefit only, and could be of benefit only, to the criminal classes," and that it would "prevent or at least hamper effective action against criminals by the executive branch of the Government." This interpretation should not go unchallenged. The people should know the facts.

The people know, as we do, that it is as much the duty of Congress to provide the means and all the necessary instrumentalities authorized by the Constitution for the detection and punishment of criminals, as it is the duty of the executive and judicial branches of the Government to use the means and facilities thus provided for the detection, prosecution, and punishment of criminals. Hence, to charge that Congress has exercised its constitutional power in this respect in a way that "has been of benefit only, and could be of benefit only, to the criminal classes," can have no other effect, whether so intended or not, than to impair, if not destroy, that confidence in the honor and integrity of a coordinate branch of our Government, which is so essential to the success and continuance of our free institutions.

To emphasize the plain meaning of the language employed in describing the effect of the legislation criticised, it is also charged in the message of the President that the motive for proposing this legislation, or "the chief argument in favor of the provision, was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret-service men." Whether it was intended to charge this as a motive for the enactment of the law or not, neither the press nor the people nor any individual citizen can dissociate that which is said to be the "chief argument" in favor of a proposition and the motive that prompts him who makes it. [Applause.] To thus impugn the motives—for it has been accepted as such, whether so intended or not—of the members of the legislative branch of our Government violates not only the constitutional privileges of Congress, but is calculated to arouse popular prejudice against all branches of our Government, which is far more injurious.

If there was no intention upon the part of the President to impugn the motives of Congress in adopting this provision of law, then it was extremely unfortunate that the gave to the people the opportunity to say that from the language used such was the intention.

But what can be said of this action by the executive branch of the Government and of its effect upon the public mind, when it is proven, as it can and will be, that this impeachment of the honor and integrity of the Congress of the United States is made without any foundation in fact? [Applause.] When proven unfounded, however, it is unfortunate that there will still linger in the minds of many, as the result of this charge, the suspicion that there does not exist among those intrusted with the duties and responsibilities of government that degree of faithfulness to duty and unselfish patriotism which the people of right expect of their representatives in all branches of the public service.

What, then, are the facts in respect to the effect of the provision in the sundry civil appropriation bill, which is the subject criticised in the message of the President to Congress on December 8, 1908? Has it, as claimed, restricted the authority of any department of the Government to employ secret-service men for the investigation of fraud and the detection and punishment of crime? Has it taken from any department of the Government any appropriation or money theretofore available for the payment of compensation and expenses of those employed in this service? If it has not had this effect, then the statements with reference to it in the message of the President and with reference to what is said to be the chief argument in favor of its adoption are wholly without justification.

LIMITATION CRITICISED BY THE PRESIDENT.

This provision was offered by me on the floor of the House as an amendment to the paragraph entitled "Suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes," appropriating $115,000 for this purpose for the fiscal year 1909, and it reads as follows:

No part of any money appropriated by this act shall be used in payment of compensation or expenses of any person detailed or transferred from the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department or who may at any time during the fiscal year 1909 have been employed by or under said Secret Service Division.

This is the provision which, it is said, "has been of benefit only, and could be of benefit only, to the criminal classes," and "if deliberately introduced for the purpose of diminishing the effectiveness of war against crime could not have been better devised to that end." The President further says:

The amendment in question was of benefit to no one excepting to these criminals—

Referring principally to the government-land frauds—

and it seriously hampers the Government in the detection of crime and the securing of justice. * * * In its present form the restriction operates only to the advantage of the criminal, the wrongdoer.

Then, assuming that this amendment was for the protection of criminals, the President says:

I do not believe that it is in the public interest to protect criminals in any branch of the public service, and exactly as we have again and again during the past seven years prosecuted and convicted such criminals who were in the executive branch of the Government, so in my belief we should be given ample means to prosecute them if found in the legislative branch. But if this is not considered desirable, a special exception could be made in the law prohibiting the use of the secret-service men in investigating Members of Congress.

And then, in order to convey the idea that this provision of law was intended to prevent or at least hamper the executive branch of the Government in the detection and prosecution of crime, the President says:

It would be far better to do this than to do what actually was done, and strive to prevent or at least hamper effective action against criminals by the executive branch of the Government.

Now, let me again read the simple provision of law which was adopted by Congress and approved by the President without objection several days before the adjournment of the last session of Congress, and then I will submit to the candor and intelligence of the American people whether or not, without any explanation as to the actual operation of this provision, it could possibly have the effect charged in the arraignment by the President which I have just read:

No part of any money appropriated by this act shall be used in payment of compensation or expenses of any person detailed or transferred from the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department, or who may at any time during the fiscal year 1909 have been employed by or under said Secret Service Division.

You will observe that this provision, as admitted by the President, provides in effect merely that there shall be no detail from the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department and no transfer therefrom. While the President does not say that this prohibition applies only to the Secret Service under the control of the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department, yet such is the fact. It is also true that it applies only to the appropriations carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill, and does not apply to any of the appropriations carried in any of the other eleven appropriation bills. There is a large and extensive secret service, not wholly a detective service, in almost all of the departments of the Government. Those employed in this service are known as special agents and inspectors, whose duties are to investigate frauds and detect crime.

AUTHORITY TO DETECT CRIME NOT ABRIDGED.

It will be observed, too, that notwithstanding the severe arraignment of this provision of the law, it does not take away from any of the departments of the Government any authority they theretofore possessed, nor does it abridge any right of theirs to employ detectives or secret-service men. Any department of the Government that possessed authority for the employment of such service prior to the enactment of this provision possesses that same authority to the same extent as theretofore. This provision, therefore, has not, and does not, operate to restrict the activity of any department of the Government in the matter of investigation of fraud or the detection and punishment of crime. Furthermore, this provision leaves to every department, available for the payment of such service, all appropriations from which this service has heretofore been paid.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DETECTION OF CRIME INCREASED.

But that is not all; the appropriations available for the employment and compensation of secret-service employees in all of the departments of the Government, and especially in those that have heretofore used this service to a greater extent than the other departments, were all increased during the last session of Congress.

For the investigation of land frauds in the Department of the Interior, about which so much has been said in the message of the President, that department, until the beginning of this fiscal year, never had an appropriation for that purpose in excess of $250,000, while Congress at its last session doubled that appropriation, giving the Interior Department $500,000 for the investigation of land-fraud cases, instead of $250,000 as theretofore. [Applause.] The appropriation for the expense of hearings in land entries was also increased $26,000.

In the Department of Justice the appropriation available for the payment of this service was increased at the last session of Congress from $540,000 to $560,000, an increase of $20,000 in the appropriation for the payment of such miscellaneous expenses as may be authorized by the Attorney-General for the United States courts and their officers, including the furnishing and collecting of evidence where the United States is or may be a party in interest. In addition to this increase for the Department of Justice, the appropriation in relation to the enforcement of the naturalization laws was increased $50,000 over the appropriation for the fiscal year 1908.

In the Treasury Department, for the detection and prevention of frauds upon the customs revenue, up until the close of the fiscal year 1907 the appropriation was $150,000. Congress then increased it to $200,000, and that increase of $50,000 was again allowed at the last session for the detection and prevention of frauds upon the customs revenues. This service, as testified to before the committee by the Hon. L. M. Shaw, then Secretary of the Treasury, "is in all respects a secret-service force."

For violations of internal-revenue laws until the beginning of the present fiscal year the appropriation was $100,000. This appropriation was increased for this purpose at the last session of Congress by $25,000, making the aggregate $125,000.

The appropriation for compensation in lieu of moieties was at the last session of Congress increased from $20,000 to $25,000.

This makes a total increase in the appropriations for the several departments of the Government which have occasion to use, and have used, detectives or secret-service employees more than any other departments of the Government of $426,000 for the fiscal year 1909 over the fiscal year 1908. [Applause.]

APPROPRIATIONS FOR SECRET SERVICE, SPECIAL AGENTS, AND INSPECTORS.

The aggregate amount appropriated for the fiscal year 1909 for secret service and services of that character, including the $115,000 appropriated for the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department, is $7,214,593.35, being $792,755 in excess of the amounts appropriated for the fiscal year 1908 for the same service. There was also appropriated for the fiscal year 1909, to be used in whole or in part to prevent frauds on and depredations upon the several branches of the public service, to protect public lands from fraudulent entries, and to apprehend and punish other violators of law, an aggregate of $23,588,170, which was an increase over the sums appropriated for the fiscal year 1908 of $2,831,660. I will append and print as a part of my remarks a detailed statement of all these appropriations, which will fully explain the character of the services for which appropriations have been made and are available.

The impression that the only branch of the public service available for the detection and punishment of crime is the service employed under the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department is wholly and utterly erroneous. A year ago there were 67 men on the secret-service rolls in this division, and this number includes 20 men on that roll held for detail to other departments when needed. The time of 47 of these men, as testified to by the Assistant Chief of the Secret Service, is employed in the detection of counterfeiting and the protection of the person of the President. The Secret Service, therefore, of the Treasury Department, to which reference is made in the message of the President, is only a very small part of the secret service in the various departments of the Government.

UNDERLYING REASON FOR CRITICISM OF LIMITATION.

It may be asked, then, if this provision of law does not abridge the authority of any department of the Government to employ secret-service men, and if the appropriations for that service which is employed by other departments to investigate fraud and detect other crimes against the laws of the United States were increased instead of diminished, why has this provision of law been so severely criticised and made the basis for the impeachment of the honor and integrity of a coordinate branch of the Government? There can be but one explanation, and that is that the Chief of the Secret Service Division in the Treasury Department no longer controls the secret-service men theretofore detailed from his division to the other departments of the Government and no longer fixes the compensation which these other departments pay for that service. The effect of this law has been to take away from him the power which he theretofore exercised over the secret-service men or detectives employed by other departments, both as to service and compensation. It appears from the record of the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations, in the testimony of Mr. Moran, assistant chief of that service, and it also appears from the testimony of Attorney-General Bonaparte, when before the subcommittee on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, that when a man was detailed from the secret-service rolls of the Treasury Department to another department his compensation was fixed by the Treasury Department. He remained on the rolls of the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department, although detailed and was obliged to report to the Chief of the Secret Service Division, thus giving to the chief of that division the control both as to service and compensation of men detailed to and serving in other departments of the Government, whose compensation while thus detailed was paid out of appropriations made for the department to which they were detailed.

RECOMMENDATION OF ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

It was this practice, no doubt, that prompted Attorney-General Bonaparte, in his annual report of last year, to recommend the establishment of a small secret service force in the Department of Justice, and it was this also that prompted the Attorney-General, when before the subcommittee on the urgent deficiency appropriations, of which I am chairman, to volunteer the following statement as the conclusion of his testimony upon his deficiency estimates:

There is one other matter that I want to mention, because it is in connection with a subject that is noted in my annual report. We are obliged, as of course the committee knows, to rely on the Secret Service of the Treasury Department for certain work. They have gone up on us in price, increased their allowance from $3 to $4 a day. That is the per diem subsistence.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not pay their compensation?

Attorney-General BONAPARTE. Yes, sir; during the time they are in our service.

The CHAIRMAN. How many have you employed during the current year?

Attorney-General BONAPARTE. It would be difficult to say, but the number would be considerable. Of course they are not employed very long. One man may not be employed very long, but some of them remain all the time. In our service we are obliged to call upon them. It would unquestionably be a matter of economy——

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting). The reason I asked that question is that there is a specific appropriation for that service, and for a number of years there has been a proviso that that appropriation should be expended for no other service. My recollection is that the appropriation is $125,000. Now, if the Secret Service of the Treasury Department is employed any considerable part of the time by other departments of the Government, then I would like to know what becomes of the $125,000 appropriated for the service in the Treasury Department?

* * * * * * *

Attorney-General BONAPARTE. It would tend to more satisfactory administration and also to economy, if instead of being obliged to call upon them for this service we had a small, a very moderate, service of that kind ourselves. I think the best plan would be to have a service of that kind under the control of the Department of Justice, and let it, if necessary, assist other departments in cases of emergency.

REASONS FOR ADOPTION OF LIMITATION.

This testimony, together with other testimony on this subject by Mr. Bonaparte, was given unsolicited on January 18, 1908, about two months before the hearings on the sundry civil appropriation bill. It was this testimony, too, in respect to the practice which then obtained in the matter of securing the services of detectives or secret-service men that led to further investigation during the hearings on the sundry civil bill, and also led to the provision reported in the sundry civil appropriation bill which was proposed to correct the abuses in administration referred to by the Attorney-General and to prevent the violation of the law, which for more than thirty years has limited and restricted the use of the Secret Service under the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department to the detection of counterfeiting and two or three other purposes not now material, which purposes were broadened at the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress so as to include the protection of the person of the President.

So far as I am concerned, so far as any member of the Committee on Appropriations is concerned, there was never any other purpose or intention in our minds. The debate in the House on this provision shows conclusively that the members of the Committee on Appropriations had no other purpose in view than the good of the public service, and the facts conclusively prove that the activities of no department of the Government have been in the least restricted or affected by this provision, for every department of the Government possesses the same authority to-day it possessed before the enactment of this provision to employ that service and has more money available for the payment of that service now than it has ever had. [Applause.]

EFFICIENCY OF DEPARTMENTS NOT IMPAIRED.

In proof of this fact, and also to show that it has been known in the executive department of the Government that since the beginning of this fiscal year there existed in the Department of Justice a secret-service division, notwithstanding the provision in the sundry civil bill, let me quote from an interview with Mr. Wilkie, Chief of the Secret Service, published in a Boston newspaper, December 19, 1908. In this interview Mr. Wilkie says:

Since the law taking our men away from the Department of Justice went into effect that department has organized a secret service or detective force of its own, and the cost will be, I am informed, about $160,000 annually. Add that $160,000 to the $115,000 we will spend in this bureau for the present year, and you will find a total of $275,000 as the cost of the secret-service work. The only thing the fathers of the prohibitive law accomplished was an additional expense to the Treasury.

Mr. Wilkie then goes on in this same interview to explain how this secret-service force was created in the Department of Justice:

Ten men were transferred from the rolls of the Secret Service at the end of the last fiscal year, just after the congressional restriction of the former service was enacted. They are now engaged on the work of the legal department, work which is practically the same, Treasury people assert, as that in which they engaged before the transfer, and in order to map out the work for them the entire machinery of a new office had to be built up.

In this connection I will also quote from the last annual report of the Attorney-General, which shows that the Department of Justice at least has suffered no inconvenience and has not been restricted in the least in the matter of the employment and compensation of secret-service employees. They are not known in that department, however, as detectives, but as special agents. The Attorney-General in his report, says:

The special agents, placed as they are under the direct orders of the chief examiner, who receives from them daily reports and summarizes these for submission each day to the Attorney-General, are directly controlled by this department, and the Attorney-General knows, or ought to know, at all times what they are doing and at what cost.

This is exactly why the Attorney-General a year ago suggested to the Committee on Appropriations the advisability of a secret-service organization such as he now has.

SECRET SERVICE NOT NOW USED TO INVESTIGATE LAND FRAUDS.

Much has been said concerning the use of the Secret Service in the detection of land frauds or frauds upon the public domain. In fact, one of the chief arguments against this provision in the sundry civil appropriation bill is based entirely upon the supposed use of the Secret Service men in the Department of the Interior for the detection of land frauds. I have already shown that the appropriation for the detection of fraud and crime in the disposition of the public domain is this year $500,000, or double the amount the department has ever had in any previous year. As to the nonuse of the Secret Service in the investigation of the land frauds, I will quote from the testimony of Mr. Garfield on page 326 of the hearings before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations on the sundry civil appropriation bill for 1909, of which I am chairman:

TESTIMONY OF SECRETARY GARFIELD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Secretary, do you employ secret-service men in this work?

Mr. GARFIELD. None at all; and that is one of the points that I want to bring out in connection with the general question of the force of agents; none of them is employed as a detective. They are simply men who go out there for the purpose of investigating any entries, charges made of any kind, and their duty is as much to help the honest entryman as to catch the dishonest one.

The CHAIRMAN. Have they been given written instructions to that effect?

Mr. GARFIELD. One of the first things I did was to give them such instructions.

The CHAIRMAN. Then they are not longer employed as inspectors performing certain service as secret-service men.

Mr. GARFIELD. They are not. Of course, once in a while an agent may find a bad case of fraud, a criminal case, where he will have to use good, sound sense in trying to discover the perpetrators of the fraud. Most of these men are engaged in getting facts, and the agents have been carefully instructed that they are not in any way to hold themselves out or act as detectives. In every possible way they are to aid the honest entryman, and to protect his entry. With the corps of agents that Mr. Dennett is building up now, following out the plan of Mr. Ballinger's organization, I have not the slightest doubt, with the increased number, we will be able in a year's time to get the outstanding cases in such shape that we can come to you a year from now and say that the work is current.

At this same time Mr. Garfield made a further statement concerning the employment of secret-service men in the investigation of land matters, although that statement does not appear in the record of the hearings, for the reason that when the head of a department, before a committee of the House, has anything to say concerning another department he invariably asks that the statement be not taken down. The substance of Mr. Garfield's further statement was that he had entirely abandoned the use of the secret-service men in the investigation of land frauds, for the reason that their want of knowledge concerning land matters, land laws, and land titles was such as to render their investigations and reports practically worthless, and cited the dismissal of some thirty-odd cases a short time before which were brought in the United States court in Colorado for the reason that upon investigation it was found that there was not sufficient legal testimony to justify their prosecution. This statement Mr. Garfield recently verified in conversation with a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and can be corroborated by any member of the subcommittee present at the time the statements were made.

This ought to satisfy anyone that the investigation of land frauds, at least, has not been interfered with in the least by this provision of law which is the subject of the President's criticism. But if further proof is necessary, I would respectfully refer to the following letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, which gives the number of men detailed from the Secret Service Division to other departments for the fiscal year 1907 and from July 1, 1907, to February 29, 1908:

APRIL 2, 1908.

THE CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a statement showing the number of men supplied through the Secret Service Division to other departments of the Government during the fiscal year ending June 30 1907, and from July 1, 1907, to February 29, 1908, together with the total amounts paid to these men for services and expenses.

Respectfully,

GEO. B. CORTELYOU,
Secretary.

Agents supplied through the Secret Service Division to other departments.

FISCAL YEAR ENDED JUNE 30, 1907.

Department.	Number of men.	Aggregate amount paid.
Justice	61	$66,539.62
State	7	3,771.48
War	3	410.75
Navy	4	245.51
Commerce and Labor	3	145.30

JULY 1, 1907, TO FEBRUARY 29, 1908.

Justice	51	$51,311.56
State	5	807.46
War	4	710.80
Navy	5	1,027.73
Porto Rico	1	872.87

From this statement it appears that not a single secret-service employee was detailed from the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department to the Interior Department during either of the two years mentioned.

RESTRICTION ADOPTED TO STOP VIOLATION OF LAW AND ABUSES IN ADMINISTRATION.

I do not deem it necessary at this time to set forth in detail the purposes for which the Secret Service in the Treasury Department has been used in the past outside of those purposes for which the service was created and to which that service was limited by law. It is not necessary to do this for the purpose of showing that the law was violated. I will say, however, that it was this violation of the law and the desire to secure better methods of administration in other departments, as suggested by the Attorney-General, that influenced the committee in proposing and supporting this amendment, and not any specific instance where the Secret Service in the Treasury Department was used for purposes other than those authorized by this law. The truth of this statement is borne out by the argument made by myself in support of the provision when under discussion during the last session of Congress, and will be shown by the record of this discussion, volume 42, part 6, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sixtieth Congress, first session, pages 5553 to 5556, both inclusive, which debate conclusively answers the statement that the "chief argument in favor of this provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret-service men," an argument that was not used, as it will be made to conclusively appear before this debate closes.

As to the intention of Congress in adopting the limitation upon the Secret Service in the Treasury Department some thirty years ago, anyone who will study the history of the limitation which was then placed around this branch of the Secret Service in the Treasury Department, and who will inquire into the uses of the Secret Service which led to the enactment of the limitation and the practices which obtained the last few years before this provision of law was enacted, must conclude that the detail of men on the secret-service roll from the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department to the other departments was illegal and that it was in violation of this legal limitation.

The claim that this provision interferes with the activities of the Treasury Department, because it takes away from the head of that department the opportunity to alter the distribution of clerks allowed by law, as he may find it necessary, can not be sustained. The section of the law to which attention is called by the President, namely, section 166 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reads as follows:

Each head of a department may from time to time alter the distribution among the various bureaus and offices of his department of the clerks allowed by law as he may find it necessary and proper to do.

It will be observed that this provision of law relates only to clerks in any department and not to per diem employees. The men employed on the secret-service roll of the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department are per diem employees and not clerks, and there is a well-recognized distinction, both in law and in the administration of the departments, between clerks and per diem employees.

STATEMENT CONCERNING LETTER OF SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY MISQUOTED BY PRESIDENT.

In this connection I wish to call attention to two statements of a personal character in the message of the President, in answer to the resolution of the House, as presented to the House of Representatives January 4, 1909. In that message the President uses this language:

Mr. TAWNEY in the debate stated that he had in his possession "a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, received a few days ago," in which the Secretary of the Treasury "himself admits that the provisions under which the appropriation has been made have been violated year after year for a number of years in his own department."

And then, for the purpose of proving that my statement, thus quoted from my remarks upon the floor of the House during the consideration of this provision, is not true, he appends to his message the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury to which he referred and says:

It makes no such admission as that which Mr. TAWNEY alleges.

It is to me, as I believe it will be to the President, a matter of sincere regret that he did not see fit to do me the justice to quote all that I said, for if he had done so, it would have been unnecessary for me to call to the attention of this House and the country that he has in fact misquoted me. What I did say, and I now read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 5559, first column, May 1, 1908, was as follows:

Mr. TAWNEY (after answering a question by Mr. PARSONS). Why, I have in my possession a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, received a few days ago, in which he has pointed out to me the practice of the Treasury Department whereby he himself admits that the provisions under which this appropriation is made have been violated year after year for a number of years in his own department.

You will observe that if the President had quoted, without omission, the words contained in my statement—"in which he has pointed out to me the practice of the Treasury Department whereby he"—and had then continued with the words he did quote, my statement would have read as follows:

In which he has pointed out to me the practice of the Treasury Department, whereby he himself admits that the provisions under which this appropriation is made have been violated year after year for a number of years in his own department.

[Applause.]

In that case it would have been very plain to this House and to the country that my statement with reference to the admission of the Secretary was a conclusion from the Secretary's statement of the practice in the Treasury Department with reference to the Secret Service and not, as stated by the President, a statement of fact or an express admission upon the part of the Secretary of the Treasury. The omission by the President of the word "whereby," whether intentional or not, entirely changes the purport and meaning of my statement and conveys the impression that I deliberately misrepresented to the House that the Secretary in his letter had expressly admitted "that the provisions under which the appropriation is made have been violated year after year for a number of years in his own department." Further comment is not necessary.

STATEMENT CONCERNING INK INVESTIGATION ALSO MISQUOTED.

Again, on page 14 of the message of the President, in referring to the "ink-contract fraud in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing," the President says:

Mr. TAWNEY stated in the debate that this was not investigated by the Secret Service but by a clerk "down there," conveying the impression that the clerk was not in the Secret Service.

Again, I regret that I am obliged to call public attention to the fact that the President of the United States has misquoted what I said. In referring to the ink-contract fraud investigation, Mr. BENNET of New York, on page 5560, first column, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 1, 1908, said:

Well, it is a great deal more recent than the case my colleague [Mr. FITZGERALD] cited. They found there was trouble there, and they took and put a secret-service man at work there and found how the Government had been defrauded out of $45,000 by a man from my own city.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman now permit me to correct him there? That work was not done by the secret-service men. That work was done by a clerk in the office who has since been promoted in recognition and as a reward for that service.

At the time we were discussing the secret-service office in the Treasury Department, and the clerk referred to by me was in that office, then holding the position of chief clerk, and is the same identical person of whom the President says:

As a matter of fact he was in the Secret Service; his name was Moran, and he was promoted to assistant chief for the excellence of his work in this case.

Both the President and myself refer to the same man and the promotion of this man as a reward for the service thus performed. This is manifest from the language employed by me. The promotion to which the President refers was a promotion made upon the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations, and was referred to by me in answer to Mr. BENNET, who made the statement that I was mistaken about the clerk having made the investigation of this ink-contract fraud, when I said:

We carried in the appropriation two years ago a provision promoting his as a reward for his service.

To this Mr. BENNET replied:

I am glad he received the promotion.

CONCEPTION OF DUTY OF A REPRESENTATIVE.

Mr. Speaker, I have served in this House too long to make it necessary for me to defend myself against the statement of any man that I either have or would mislead its membership by misrepresenting facts in order to secure the enactment of any legislation. [Loud applause.] By my record I must be judged and must stand or fall before the people who have honored me with a seat in this, the greatest legislative body in the world. I knew when this provision was under consideration, as many other members did, that it was the opinion of the Treasury Department and the Chief Executive that this restriction was unwise. But I also knew that they were looking at the matter only from the standpoint of employing the Secret Service of the Treasury Department in all of the departments of the Government, regardless of the authority of those other departments to employ under their own control such secret service as they deemed necessary.

It was my mature judgment, after a careful investigation of all the facts and looking to the best and most economic administration of the public service, that the limitation proposed by me and my committee should be adopted, and it was upon my judgment, and my judgment alone, that I acted. In this respect I may differ from some of my associates, but ever since I became a Member of this House I have conceived it to be my duty as a Representative to be governed by my judgment and not by the opinion of another. I have tried to follow, in the discharge of my duty, the criterion laid down by that distinguished English statesman, Edmund Burke, who, when addressing his constituents at Bristol, November 4, 1774, said:

It should be the glory as well as the honor of a representative to live in the strictest union, the closest correspondence, and the most unreserved communication with his constituents. Their wishes should at all times have great weight with him, their opinions high respect, their business unremitted attention.

But his mature opinion, his unbiased judgment, his enlightened conscience, he should not surrender to you, to any man, or to any set of men living. These he does not derive from you, nor from the law or the constitution; they are a gift from Providence, for the abuse of which he is deeply answerable. Your representative owes you not only his industry, but his judgment, and he is betraying instead of serving you when he sacrifices that judgment to the opinions of another.

[Loud and long-continued applause.]

Appropriations made at the last session of Congress for the service of the fiscal year 1909 to prevent frauds in and depredations upon the several branches of the public service, to protect public lands from fraudulent entry, and to apprehend and punish other violators of the law; also increases made in certain of such appropriations over the sums appropriated for like purposes at the previous session of Congress for the fiscal year 1908.

IN SUNDRY CIVIL ACT.

For all authorized expenditures necessary in the execution of laws to regulate commerce, of which sum not exceeding $50,000 may be expended in the employment of counsel, and not exceeding $3,000 may be expended for the purchase of necessary books, reports, and periodicals, and not exceeding $1,500 may be expended for printing other than that done at the Government Printing Office	$700,000.00
To further enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to enforce compliance with section 20 of the act to regulate commerce as amended by the act approved June 29, 1906, including the employment of necessary special agents or examiners	350,000.00
To carry out the objects of the "Act concerning carriers engaged in interstate commerce and their employees," approved June 1, 1898	10,000.00
To enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to keep informed regarding compliance with the "Act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads," approved March 2, 1893, and to execute and enforce the requirements of the said act, including the employment of inspectors. Hereafter all inspectors employed for the enforcement of said act shall also be required to make examination of the construction, adaptability, design, and condition of all mail cars used on any railroad in the United States and make report thereon, a copy of which report shall be transmitted to the Postmaster-General	100,000.00
(The foregoing appropriations under Interstate Commerce Commission, $1,160,000, are an increase of $406,765 over the amount appropriated for 1908.)
GENERAL INSPECTOR OF SUPPLIES FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS: For 1 general inspector, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, whose duty it shall be to inspect public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, and report on the efficiency of the custodians' forces, and the use of fuel, lights, water, miscellaneous supplies, etc., $3,000, and for actual necessary traveling expenses, not exceeding $2,000; in all	5,000.00
INSPECTOR OF FURNITURE AND OTHER FURNISHINGS FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to employ a suitable person to inspect all public buildings and examine into their requirements for furniture and other furnishings, $2,500; and for actual necessary traveling expenses, including actual traveling expenses of assistant, not exceeding $3,000; in all	5,500.00

For assistant inspector of furniture and other furnishings for public buildings $1,600.00

SUPPRESSING COUNTERFEITING AND OTHER CRIMES: For expenses incurred under the authority or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury in detecting, arresting, and delivering into the custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction, dealers and pretended dealers in counterfeit money, and persons engaged in counterfeiting treasury notes, bonds, national-bank notes, and other securities of the United States and of foreign governments, as well as the coins of the United States and of foreign governments, and other felonies committed against the laws of the United States relating to the pay and bounty laws, including $1,000 to make the necessary investigation of claims for reimbursement of expenses incident to the last sickness and burial of deceased pensioners under section 4718 of the Revised Statutes, the act of March 2, 1895, and for no other purpose whatever, except in the protection of the person of the President of the United States 115,000.00

PUNISHMENT FOR VIOLATIONS OF INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS: For detecting and bringing to trial and punishment, persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws or conniving at the same, including payments for information and detection of such violations 125,000.00

(An increase of $25,000 over the appropriation for 1908.)

FOR the detection and prevention of frauds upon the customs revenue 200,000.00

(The foregoing appropriation amounted to $100,000 for the fiscals years 1880–1905, and $150,000 for fiscal years 1903 and 1907, and $200,000 for 1908 and 1909.)

COMPENSATION IN LIEU OF MOIETIES: For compensation in lieu of moieties in certain cases under the customs revenue laws 25,000.00

(An increase of $5,000 over the appropriation for 1908.)

ALASKA SEAL FISHERIES: For salaries of agents at seal fisheries in Alaska, as follows: For one agent, $3,650; one assistant agent, $2,920; two assistant agents, at $2,190 each; janitor service at the Government buildings at the Pribilof Islands, not exceeding $480; in all 11,430.00

ENFORCEMENT OF THE CHINESE-EXCLUSION ACT: To prevent unlawful entry of Chinese into the United States, by the appointment of suitable officers to enforce the laws in relation thereto, and for expenses of returning to China all Chinese persons found to be unlawfully in the United States, including the cost of imprisonment and actual expense of conveyance of Chinese persons to the frontier or seaboard for deportation 500,000.00

DEPREDATIONS ON PUBLIC TIMBER, PROTECTING PUBLIC LANDS, AND SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS FOR SWAMP LAND AND SWAMP-LAND INDEMNITY: To meet the expenses of protecting timber on the public lands, and for the more efficient execution of the law and rules relating to the cutting thereof; of protecting public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, and of adjusting claims for swamp lands and indemnity for swamp lands, to be immediately available, of which sum $250,000 is for the purpose of bringing up the work of the General Land Office hereunder so as to make the same current: Provided, That agents and others employed under this appropriation shall be selected by the Secretary of the Interior and allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each and actual necessary expenses for transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares 500,000.00

(An increase of $250,000 over the appropriation for 1908.)

EXPENSES OF HEARINGS IN LAND ENTRIES: For expenses of hearings held by order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to determine whether alleged fraudulent entries are of that character or have been made in compliance with law, and of hearings in disbarment proceedings 35,000.00

(An increase of $26,000 over the appropriation for 1908.)

HARBOR OF NEW YORK: For prevention of obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City:

For pay of inspectors, deputy inspectors, office force, and expenses of office, $10,260; for pay of crews and maintenance of six steam tugs and one launch, $75,000; in all 85,260.00

DEFENDING SUITS IN CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES: For defraying the necessary expenses incurred in the examination of witnesses and procuring of evidence in the matter of claims against the United States and in defending suits in the Court of Claims, including defense for the United States in the matter of French spoliation claims, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General 20,000.00

DETECTION AND PROSECUTION OF CRIMES: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States, preliminary to indictments; the investigation of official acts, records, and accounts of marshals, attorneys, clerks of the United States courts, and United States commissioners, for which purpose all the records and dockets of said officers, without exception, shall be examined by the agents of the Attorney-General at any time; the inspection of the United States prisoners and prisons; collection, classification, and preservation of criminal identification records, and their exchange with the officials of state and other institutions, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General, District of Columbia 30,000.00

ENFORCEMENT OF ANTITRUST LAWS: That the balance of the appropriation of $250,000, entitled "Enforcement of antitrust laws, 1907 and 1908," contained in the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 4, 1907, shall be available during the fiscal year 1909, and an additional appropriation of $250,000 made for the same purposes $250,000.00

For payment of such miscellaneous expenses as may be authorized by the Attorney-General, for the United States courts and their officers, including the furnishing and collecting of evidence where the United States is or may be a party in interest, and moving of records: Provided, That in so far as it may be deemed necessary by the Attorney-General, this appropriation shall be available for such expenses in the district of Alaska 560,000.00

(An increase of $20,000 over the appropriation for 1908.)

For payment of assistants to the Attorney-General and of assistants to United States district attorneys, employed by the Attorney-General to represent the United States in naturalization and other proceedings and for other necessary expenses in connection with such proceedings and cases 150,000.00

(An increase of $50,000 over the appropriation for 1908.)

IN THE LEGISLATIVE, ETC., ACT.

SECRET SERVICE DIVISION: For 1 chief, $4,000; assistant chief, who shall discharge the duties of chief clerk, $3,000; 1 clerk of class 4; 1 clerk of class 3; 2 clerks of class 2; 1 clerk of class 1; 1 clerk, $1,000; and 1 attendant, $720 ..... 16,120.00

For salaries of special agents, and for actual expenses of examiners detailed to examine the books, accounts, and money on hand at the several subtreasuries and depositories, including national banks acting as depositories under the requirements of section 3649 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, also including examinations of cash accounts at mints 3,000.00

Two special inspectors, whose employment shall be limited to the inspection of offices and the work in the several offices under the control of the Department of the Interior, at $2,500 each 5,000.00

For per diem in lieu of subsistence of 2 special inspectors, Department of the Interior, while traveling on duty, at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding $3 per day, and for actual necessary expenses of transportation (including temporary employment of stenographers, typewriters, and other assistance outside of the District of Columbia, and for incidental expenditures necessary to the efficient conduct of examinations), to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior 4,000.00

Three inspectors of surveyors-general and district land offices, at $2,000 each 6,000.00

For per diem in lieu of subsistence of inspectors and of clerks detailed to investigate fraudulent land entries, trespasses on the public lands, and cases of official misconduct, while traveling on duty, at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding $3 per day, and for actual necessary expenses of transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares, and for employment of stenographers and other assistants when necessary to the efficient conduct of examinations, and when authorized by the Commissioner of the General Land Office 7,000.00

For an additional force of 100 special examiners for one year at a salary of $1,300 each, and no person so appointed shall be employed in the State from which he is appointed; and any of those now employed in the Pension Office or as special examiners may be reappointed if they be found to be qualified 130,000.00

For per diem, when absent from home and traveling on duty outside the District of Columbia, for special examiners or other persons employed in the Bureau of Pensions, detailed for the purpose of making special investigations pertaining to said bureau, in lieu of expenses for subsistence, not exceeding $3 per day, and for actual and necessary expenses for transportation and assistance, and any other necessary expenses, including telegrams 250,000.00

Division of post-office inspectors: Chief inspector, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,000; 3 clerks of class 4; 8 clerks of class 3; 12 clerks of class 2; 16 clerks of class 1; 15 clerks, at $1,000 each; 14 clerks, at $900 each; 3 assistant messengers; and 1 laborer; in all 90,620.00

Six special agents, division of classification, at $2,000 each 12,000.00

For per diem allowance for special agents, division of classification, when actually traveling on business of the Post-Office Department, at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster-General, not exceeding $4, and for other actual and necessary traveling expenses arising in connection with the business of the division of classification 7,000.00

For compensation and per diem, to be fixed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, of special attoneys, special examiners, and special agents, for the purpose of carrying on the work of said bureau, as provided by the act approved February 14, 1903, entitled "An act to establish the Department of Commerce and Labor," the per diem to be, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $4 per day to each of said special attorneys, special examiners, and special agents, and also of other officers and employees in the Bureau of Corporations while absent from their homes on duty outside of the District of Columbia, and for their actual necessary traveling expenses, including necessary sleeping-car fares; in all 175,000.00

For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the act approved June 29, 1906, entitled "An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States," namely: Chief of Division of Naturalization, $3,500;

assistant chief of division, $2,500; 3 clerks of class 4; 3 clerks of class 3; 5 clerks of class 2; 7 clerks of class 1; 4 clerks, at $1,000 each; 2 clerks, at $900 each; 1 messenger; 1 assistant messenger; in all $38,960.00

For Division of Information established under section 40 of the act approved February 20, 1907, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," namely: For chief of division, $3,500; assistant chief of division, $2,500; 2 clerks of class 4; 1 clerk of class 3; 2 clerks of class 2; 3 clerks of class 1; 1 clerk, $900; 1 messenger; in all.. 19,840.00

IN THE ARMY ACT.

CONTINGENCIES OF THE ARMY: For all contingent expenses of the army not otherwise provided for, and embracing all branches of the military service, including the office of the Chief of Staff, to be expended under the immediate orders of the Secretary of War 15,000.00

INSPECTOR-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT: For pay of officers in the Inspector-General's Department 50,500.00

For additional pay to such officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay 16,000.00

For pay of expert accountant for the Inspector-General's Department 2,500.00

IN THE INDIAN ACT.

To enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to take action to suppress the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians 40,000.00

To enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, from time to time as he may deem necessary, to detail clerks from his office to make special investigations in the field: Provided, That while thus absent from Washington under such detail they shall receive a per diem of $3 to cover all expenses, exclusive of transportation and sleeping-car fares 3,000.00

For pay of 8 Indian inspectors, 2 of whom shall be engineers, 1 to be designated as chief, competent in the location, construction, and maintenance of irrigation works, at $2,500 per annum each, except the chief engineer, who shall receive $3,500 ..... 21,000.00

For traveling expenses of 8 Indian inspectors, at $3 per day when actually employed on duty in the field, exclusive of transportation and sleeping-car fare, in lieu of all other expenses now authorized by law, and for incidental expenses of negotiation, inspection, and investigation, including telegraphing and expenses of going to and going from the seat of government, and while remaining there under orders and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for a period not to exceed twenty days 12,800.00

For services of officers, at $25 per month each, and privates, at $20 per month each, of Indian police, to be employed in maintaining order and prohibiting illegal traffic in liquor on the several Indian reservations and within the Territory of Alaska, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purchase of equipments, and for the purchase of rations for policemen at nonration agencies 200,000.00

For contingencies of the Indian Service, including traveling and incidental expenses of Indian agents and of their offices, and of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; also traveling and incidental expenses of special agents, at $3 per day when actually employed on duty in the field, exclusive of transportation and sleeping-car fare, in lieu of all other expenses now authorized by law, and expenses of going to and going from the seat of government, and while remaining there under orders and direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for a period not to exceed twenty days; for pay of employees not otherwise provided for, and for pay of special agents, at $2,000 per annum each 85,000.00

(An increase of $10,000 over the appropriation for 1908.)

In the diplomatic and consular act.

EXPENSES UNDER THE NEUTRALITY ACT.

To meet the necessary expenses attendant upon the execution of the neutrality act, to be expended under the direction of the President, pursuant to the requirement of section 291 of the Revised Statutes 8,000.00

EMERGENCIES ARISING IN THE DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR SERVICE.

To enable the President to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the diplomatic and consular service, and to extend the commercial and other interests of the United States, to be expended pursuant to the requirement of section 291 of the Revised Statutes 90,000.00

For salaries of five consular inspectors, at $5,000 each.. 25,000.00

For the actual and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses of consular inspectors while traveling and inspecting under instructions from the Secretary of State 15,000.00

IN THE POST-OFFICE ACT.

FOR SALARIES OF POST-OFFICE INSPECTORS: For salaries of 15 inspectors in charge of divisions, at $3,000 each; 10 inspectors, at $2,400 each; 15 inspectors, at $2,250 each; 15 inspectors, at $2,000 each; 10 inspectors, at $1,800 each; 130 inpectors, at $1,600 each; 110 inspectors, at $1,400; and 50 inspectors, at $1,200; in all 572,750.00

For per diem allowance of inspectors in the field while actually traveling on official business away from their home, their official domicile, and their headquarters, at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster-General, not to exceed $4 per day: Provided, That the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, allow inspectors per diem while temporarily located at any place on business away from their home, or their designated domicile, for a period not exceeding twenty consecutive days at any one place, and make rules and regulations governing the foregoing provisions relating to per diem: And provided further, That no per diem shall be paid to inspectors receiving annual salaries of $2,000 or more $325,000.00

For compensation to clerks and laborers at division headquarters, 15, at $1,600 each; 9, at $1,400 each; 27, at $1,200 each; 8, at $1,100 each; 13, at $1,000 each; 5, at $900 each; and 2, at $660 each; in all.. 96,620.00

For traveling expenses of inspectors without per diem allowance, inspectors in charge, and the chief post-office inspector, and expenses incurred by inspectors not covered by per diem allowance 35,000.00

For livery hire incurred by inspectors not covered by their per diem allowance, including livery hire in connection with the installation and inspection of rural routes 50,000.00

For necessary miscellaneous expenses at division headquarters 6,000.00

For payment of rewards for the detection, arrest, and conviction of post-office burglars, robbers, and highway mail robbers: Provided, That of the amount herein appropriated not to exceed $5,000 may be expended, in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, for the purpose of securing information concerning violations of the postal laws, and for services and information looking toward the apprehension of criminals 20,000.00

In the District of Columbia act.

FOR METROPOLITAN POLICE.

For major and superintendent, $4,000; assistant superintendent, with rank of inspector, $2,500; 3 inspectors, at $1,800 each; 10 captains, at $1,500 each; chief clerk, who shall also be property clerk, $2,000; clerk, $1,500; 3 clerks, at $1,000 each; 4 surgeons of the police and fire departments, at $600 each; additional compensation for 20 privates detailed for special service in the detection and prevention of crime, $4,800, or so much thereof as may be necessary; 12 lieutenants, 1 of whom shall be harbor master, at $1,320 each; 45 sergeants, 1 of whom may be detailed for duty in the harbor patrol, at $1,250 each; 431 privates of class 3, at $1,200 each; 123 privates of class 2, at $1,080 each; 105 privates of class 1, at $900 each; for amount required to pay salaries of privates of class 2 who will be promoted to class 3 and privates of class 1 who will be promoted to class 2 during the fiscal year 1909, $8,303.35; 6 telephone operators, at $600 each; janitor for police headquarters for July, 1908, $60; 14 janitors, at $600 each; messenger, $700; messenger, $500; major and superintendent, mounted, $240; inspector, mounted, $240; 55 captains, lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted, at $240 each; 64 lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted, on bicycles, at $50 each; 26 drivers, at $720 each; and two police matrons, at $600 each; in all 915,593.35

IN THE NAVAL ACT.

CONTINGENT, NAVY: For all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, exclusive of personal services in the Navy Department, or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, D. C., arising at home or abroad, but impossible to be anticipated or classified, to be expended on the approval and authority of the Secretary of the Navy, and for such purposes as he may deem proper 65,000.00

IN THE PENSION ACT.

For examination and inspection of pension agencies, as provided by the final provision of the act of August 8, 1882, amending section 4766, Revised Statutes 1,500.00

Total 7,214,593.35

Increase in certain of foregoing appropriations for 1909 over 1908 ..... 792,755.00

Appropriations made at the last session of Congress for the service of the fiscal year 1909 to be used in whole or in part to prevent frauds in and depredations upon the several branches of the public service, to protect public lands from fraudulent entry, and to apprehend and punish other violators of law; also increases made in certain of such appropriations over the sums appropriated for like purposes at the previous session of Congress for the fiscal year 1908.

IN THE LEGISLATIVE, ETC., ACT.

For salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue, and deputy collectors, and surveyors, and clerks, messengers, and janitors in internal-revenue offices.. 2,075,000.00

For salaries and expenses of 40 revenue agents provided for by law, and fees and expenses of gaugers, salaries and expenses of storekeepers and storekeeper-gaugers 2,400,000.00

To carry out the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the withdrawal from bond, tax free, of domestic alcohol when rendered unfit for beverage or liquid medicinal uses by mixture with suitable denaturing materials," as amended by the act of March 2, 1907. And for the employment of such additional force of chemists, internal-revenue agents, inspectors, deputy collectors, clerks, laborers, and other assistants as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may deem proper and necessary to the prompt and efficient operation and enforcement of this law, and for the purchase of locks, seals, weighing beams, gauging instruments, and for all necessary expenses incident to the proper execution of this law 200,000.00

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR: Six special agents, at $1,600 each; 8 special agents, at $1,400 each; 4 special agents, at $1,200 each 25,600.00

For per diem, in lieu of subsistence, of special agents and employees while traveling on duty away from their homes and outside of the District of Columbia, at a rate not to exceed $3 per day, and for their transportation, and for employment of experts and temporary assistance, and for traveling expenses of officers and employees, and for the purchase of reports and materials for the reports and bulletins of the Bureau of Labor, and for subvention to "International Association for Labour Legislation," and necessary expenses connected with representation of the United States Government therein---------- $64,090.00

PERMANENT APPROPRIATIONS.

SALARIES OF STEAMBOAT INSPECTORS AND CLERKS: Indefinite appropriation to pay salaries of the Supervising Inspector-General, supervising inspectors, local inspectors, and assistant inspectors of steam vessels, and clerks of steamboat inspectors, under the acts of June 19, 1886, and April 4, 1888, as amended by the acts of March 1 and 2, 1895, and April 21, 1898, and June 2, 1900 (appointments authorized by secs. 4402, 4404, and 4414, Rev. Stat.), amended by act approved March 3, 1905, and further amended by act of April 9, 1906---------- 460,000.00

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, STEAMBOAT-INSPECTION SERVICE: Indefinite appropriation for the payment of fees to United States marshals and witnesses (sec. 4451, Rev. Stat.), and traveling and other expenses, when on official duty, of the Supervising Inspector-General, supervising inspectors, local and assistant inspectors, and all instruments, furniture, and other things necessary to carry into effect the provisions of Title 52, Revised Statutes (sec. 4461, Rev. Stat.), under the act approved April 4, 1888, amending the act of June 19, 1886, as amended by the acts of March 1, 1895, February 15, 1897, March 3, 1905, and April 9, 1906.. 110,000.00

EXPENSES OF REGULATING IMMIGRATION: For expenses of regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States, including salaries and expenses of all officers, clerks, inspectors, and other employees, permanently appropriated annually---------- 2,500,000.00

IN THE ARMY ACT.

INCIDENTAL EXPENSES: Postage; cost of telegrams on official business received and sent by officers of the army; extra pay to soldiers employed on extra duty, under the direction of the Quartermaster's Department, in the erection of barracks, quarters, and storehouses, in the construction of roads and other constant labor for periods of not less than ten days, and as clerks for post quartermasters at military posts, and for prison overseers at posts designated by the War Department for the confinement of general prisoners, and for noncommissioned officers of the United States military prison guard; for expenses of expresses to and from frontier posts and armies in the field, of escorts to paymasters and other disbursing officers, and to trains where military escorts can not be furnished; expenses of the interment of officers killed in action or who die when on duty in the field, or at military posts or on the frontiers, or when traveling under orders, and of noncommissioned officers and soldiers; and in all cases where such expenses would have been lawful claims against the Government, reimbursement may be made of expenses heretofore or hereafter incurred by individuals of burial and transportation of remains of officers, including acting assistant surgeons, not to exceed the amount now allowed in the cases of officers, and for the reimbursement in the cases of enlisted men not exceeding the amount now allowed in their cases, may be paid out of the proper funds appropriated by this act, and the disbursing officers shall be credited with such reimbursement heretofore made; but hereafter no reimbursement shall be made of such expenses incurred prior to the 21st day of April, 1898; authorized office furniture, hire of laborers in the Quartermaster's Department, including the hire of interpreters, spies, or guides for the army; compensation of clerks and other employees to the officers of the Quartermaster's Department, and clerks, foremen, watchmen, and organist for the United States military prison, and incidental expenses of recruiting; for the apprehension, securing, and delivering of deserters, including escaped military prisoners, and the expenses incident to their pursuit, and no greater sum than $50 for each deserter or escaped military prisoner shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be paid to any civil officer or citizen for such services and expenses; for a donation of $5 to each dishonorably discharged prisoner upon his release from confinement, under court-martial sentence, involving dishonorable discharge; for the following expenditures required for the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of light artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, the authorized number of officers' horses, and for the trains, to wit: Hire of veterinary surgeons, purchase of medicines for horses and mules, picket ropes, blacksmith's tools and materials, horseshoes and blacksmith's tools for the cavalry service, and for the shoeing of horses and mules, and such additional expenditures as are necessary and authorized by law in the movements and operations of the army, and at military posts, and not expressly assigned to any other department---------- 2,200,000.00

IN THE AGRICULTURE ACT.

GENERAL EXPENSES, FOREST SERVICE: To enable the Secretary of Ariculture to experiment and to make and continue investigations and report on forestry, national forests, forest fires, and lumbering, but no part of this appropriation shall be used for any experiment or test made outside the jurisdiction of the United States; to investigate and test American timber and timber trees, and their uses, and methods for the preservative treatment of timber; to seek, through investigations and the planting of native and foreign species, suitable trees for the treeless regions; to erect necessary buildings: Provided, That the cost of any building erected shall not exceed $500; to pay all expenses necessary to protect, administer, and improve the national forests; and hereafter officials of the Forest Service designated by the Secretary of Agriculture shall, in all ways that are practicable, aid in the enforcement of the laws of the States or Territories with regard to stock, for the prevention and extinguishment of forest fires, and for the protection of fish and game, and with respect to national forests, shall aid the other federal bureaus and departments on request from them, in the performance of the duties imposed on them by law; to ascertain the natural conditions upon and utilize the national forests, and the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, permit timber and other forest products cut or removed from the national forests, except the Black Hills National Forest in South Dakota, to be exported from the State, Territory, or the district of Alaska in which said forests are respectively situated: Provided, That the exportation of dead and insect-infested timber only from said Black Hills National Forest shall be allowed until such time as the forester shall certify that the ravages of the destructive insects in said forest are practically checked, but in no case after July 1, 1910; to transport and care for fish and game supplied to stock the national forests or the waters therein; to employ fiscal and other agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in practical forestry and in the administration of national forests, in the District of Columbia or elsewhere; and hereafter advances of money under any appropriation for the Forest Service may be made to the Forest Service and by authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to chiefs of field parties for fighting forest fires in emergency cases, who shall give bond under such rules and regulations and in such sum as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, and detailed accounts arising under such advances shall be rendered through and by the Department of Agriculture to the Treasury Department; to collate, digest, report, illustrate, and print the results of experiments and investigations made by the Forest Service; to purchase law books to an amount not exceeding $500, necessary supplies, apparatus, and office fixtures, and technical books and technical journals for officers of the Forest Service stationed outside of Washington; to pay freight, express, telephone, and telegraph charges; for electric light and power, fuel, gas, ice, washing towels, and official traveling and other necessary expenses; and for rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere---------- $3,151,900.00

(Estimated increase of $1,951,900 over permanent appropriation for 1908.)

PERMANENT APPROPRIATION.

MEAT INSPECTION, BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY: There is permanently appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the expenses of the inspection of cattle, sheep, swine, and goats, and the meat and meat-food products thereof which enter into interstate or foreign commerce, and for all expenses necessary to carry into effect the provisions relating to meat inspection, including rent and the employment of labor in Washington and elsewhere, for each year---------- 3,000,000.00

PURE FOOD: General expenses, Bureau of Chemistry: Chemical apparatus, chemicals, and supplies, repairs to engine and apparatus, gas and electric current, official traveling and other expenses, telegraph and telephone service, express and freight charges, labor and expert work and all necessary expenses in conducting investigations in this bureau in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and in collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such investigations; for the rent of buildings in the city of Washington and elsewhere; to continue collaboration with other departments of the Government desiring chemical investigations and whose heads request the Secretary of Agriculture for such assistance, and for other miscellaneous work; to demonstrate and illustrate the methods for the making of denatured alcohol on a scale suitable for utilization by the farmer, or associations of farmers; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the character of the chemical and physical tests which are applied to American food products in foreign countries, and to inspect before shipment, when desired by the shippers or owners of these food products, American food products intended for countries where chemical and physical tests are required before said food products are allowed to be sold in the countries mentioned, and for all necessary expenses connected with such inspection and studies of methods of analysis in foreign countries; for all expenses necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the act of June 30, 1906, entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated, or misbranded, or poisonous, or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for other purposes," including rent and the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere; employing such assistants, clerks, and other persons as the Secretary of Agriculture may consider necessary for the purposes named---------- 760,000.00

(Increase of $110,000 over appropriation for 1908.)

EXPENSES OF UNITED STATES COURTS: For expenses of United States courts, other than the sums for miscellaneous expenses, and for assistant attorneys in naturalization cases noted elsewhere, and including salaries and expenses of marshals, deputy marshals, United States attorneys, assistant attorneys, fees of witnesses and jurors, support of penitentiaries, etc.. (Increase of $769,760 over appropriations for 1908.)	$6,641,580.00

Total	23,588,170.00
Increase in certain of foregoing appropriations for 1909 over 1908	2,831,660.00

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that Messrs. SHERLEY, SMITH of Iowa, and FITZGERALD each be permitted to address the House at the present time in the following order, without reference to how they may feel in regard to this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH], the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] may be permitted to address the House, without reference to their opinions as to the resolution pending.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, is it intended that they shall talk to the resolution, or on something else?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the request to be in regard to the rules of recognition governing the Chair, not otherwise to interfere with the rules of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, occupying a somewhat different position than most of the Members of the House relative to the messages of the President that are the subject of the resolution offered by the special committee, inasmuch as my remarks made during the debate in the House last year relative to the Secret Service are referred to and relied on by the President in his response to the House, it has seemed proper to me that I should not only speak to these resolutions affecting the House as a whole, but also make a rejoinder to the message itself.

That a grave breach of the privileges of the House, and thereby a grave injury to the country has been committed by the President would seem to be apparent to anyone capable of understanding the English language, and no response to the previous resolution of the House could be accepted that did not contain a withdrawal of the offensive language objected to and an apology therefor. Instead of such a response, however, the President has declared that the language used by him does not mean what it plainly says, and an effort is made to change the issue existing between the House and the Executive.

That issue plainly is this: Was the Executive warranted in impugning the motives of the House in enacting legislation that was believed by him to be unwise? No amount of special pleading, no recital of the valuable services rendered by the Secret Service can serve to divert the issue, and to attempt to answer such an issue by a disclaimer of any intention to offend while repeating the offensive language is to add further insult. [Applause.] The question as to the wisdom of the action of the House in adopting the legislation complained of by the President is entirely distinct from the charge of a corrupt motive on the part of the House in so legislating.

The President in his annual message used this language:

> The chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by the secret-service men. Very little of such investigation has been done in the past; but it is true that the work of the secret-service agents was partly responsible for the indictment and conviction of a Senator and a Congressman for land frauds in Oregon. I do not believe that it is in the public interest to protect criminals in any branch of the public service, and exactly as we have again and again during the past seven years prosecuted and convicted such criminals who were in the executive branch of the Government, so, in my belief, we should be given ample means to prosecute them if found in the legislative branch. But if this is not considered desirable, a special exception could be made in the law prohibiting the use of the secret-service force in investigating members of Congress. It would be far better to do this than to do what actually was done, and strive to prevent or, at least, to hamper effective action against criminals by the executive branch of the Government.

Now, to what do the significant words "if this is not considered desirable" relate? Clearly to the affirmative statement that we (the executive) should be given ample means to prosecute them (to wit, criminals) in the legislative branch. Plainly the meaning is that if it is not considered desirable that the Executive should be given ample means to prosecute criminals in the legislative branch, then—and here is the final stigma—"a special exception could be made in the law prohibiting the use of the secret-service force in investigating members of the Congress," and, mark you, the President adds: "It would be far better to do this than to do what actually was done, and strive to prevent or, at least, to hamper effective action against criminals by the executive branch of the Government." In other words, he says if Congress is determined to protect its own criminals, it should at least permit the Executive to punish the other criminals outside that body, and not strive to prevent or hamper even this.

But further analysis is needless. How any person can carefully read the language I have quoted and come to any other conclusion than that the President deliberately libeled the House I am unable to understand.

It being apparent that a stigma was placed upon the membership of the House, but two answers were open to the President: First, to prove that the stigma was deserved, or secondly, like a brave man, to withdraw the offensive language and apologize to the House. The President has done neither. He expressly says:

> If I had proof of such corruption affecting any Member of the House in any matter as to which the Federal Government has jurisdiction, action would at once be brought.

In the light of the present circumstances, does anyone doubt for a moment that the President is absolutely without proof—even as he judges proof—of wrongdoing of any Member of Congress? And the only course left him was, as I have stated, to have apologized. But, unfortunately, instead of so doing, he has, in his reply to the resolution of the House, distorted out of all true proportion the real debate had in the House relative to the Secret Service, and then, by an elaborate argument as to the merits of such service, sought to obscure the real issue. The issue is not, Does Congress desire the Government to have the most efficient instrument to run down criminals or does it not? When Congress comes to legislate touching the Secret Service, there will then arise the very important question of how to so regulate that service as to retain its proper efficiency in the detection of crime with the least possible opportunity for its misuse, and as to that question I shall speak later.

But I now repeat that the issue now between the President and this House is: Was the President warranted in impugning the motives of the House in enacting this legislation? Had the President confined himself to a discussion of the wisdom of the action of Congress in passing the legislation, no exception could have been taken by Congress, however it might have differed with him. But, believing as I do that the President's message was an insult and that his response to the resolution of the House has aggravated his offense, I think it incumbent upon the House that it treat the two messages, as urged by the special committee, by adopting a resolution that they be laid on the table. Such action is a proper rebuke, and is notice that the House of Representatives of the American Congress will not tolerate such a flagrant breach of its rights to pass unnoticed, but will ever guard the honor of its name.

Mr. Speaker, I have presented briefly what I, as simply a Member of this House, believe to be its plain duty and my reasons therefor. I shall now make my rejoinder to that portion of the President's last message as seeks to justify his previous message by a recital of what he states to have been the argument made by myself in the discussion in the House last year.

The President apparently pays me the high compliment of saying in effect that my argument was the only real one made by the advocates of the limitation adopted. It would indeed be a real compliment were it not for the fact that he shows a complete failure on his part to understand the argument as a whole, or to ascribe to its different parts their true relative value. Doubtless the President refrained from quoting actually what I said and contented himself with a statement of what he conceived it to be, in the interest of brevity of speech, but that there may be had a real understanding of what I did say, I shall, at the risk of sacrificing brevity, read the whole of my remarks, not only that portion referred to by the President, but also the remaining, and by far the larger, portion not referred to by the President.

Before, however, doing this it might be well to clear away some of the brush piled up in the President's reply. First, as to the article written by Mr. Busbey some five years ago, I have never seen this article and my first knowledge of its language was obtained from hearing read the President's message last Monday. Second, as to the letter of the President to the Speaker of the House, I never knew of the existence of such a letter until informed of it by the President's message. Since the giving public of its contents by the President, I have seen the original letter which is marked "personal." Naturally, I could not be expected to be familiar with the personal correspondence of the President of the United States with the Speaker of the House.

Third, as to the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Hon. G. B. Cortelyou, to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I never saw this letter until some two weeks ago, after the annual message of the President was sent to Congress.

It may not be amiss to state, also, that as a minority Member of the House, I have never been honored by having the President discuss this or other important matters of legislation with me, and could not know of his views on the subject.

I mention these facts, Mr. Speaker, that the motives for my action may not be misjudged by virtue of the President's insertion into the controversy of matters that are, as to me, entirely extraneous. I do not know that I should have altered my position relative to the Secret Service by having had the viewpoint of the President; for while I should consider with respect any position taken by any President of the United States touching important legislation, I hold it to be the high duty of a member of Congress to give his constituents not only his industry, but his own judgment, and I am yet to be convinced that the information conveyed, either in the President's letter to the Speaker or in the letter of Secretary Cortelyou, warrants the conclusion that the action of the House was unwise.

Now, as to the real arguments advanced by myself in debate. The President divides the arguments used by the advocates of the limitation into two classes. He says:

One concerned the question whether the law warranted the employment of the Secret Service in departments other than the Treasury, and this did not touch the merits of the service in the least. The other line of argument went to the merits of the service, whether lawfully or unlawfully employed, and here the chief if not the only argument used was that the service should be cut down and restricted because its members had "shadowed" or investigated members of Congress and other officers of the Government.

In passing, it may be noticed with what disdain the President speaks of the argument as to the legality of the then use made of secret-service men. The President then refers to the remarks of my colleagues, Messrs. TAWNEY, SMITH, and FITZGERALD. Inasmuch as these gentlemen themselves reply to this portion of the message, I shall not deal with it, but come to the direct reference to myself. The President says:

A careful reading of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will also show that practically the only arguments advanced in favor of the limitation proposed by Mr. TAWNEY's committee, beyond what may be supposed to be contained by implication in certain sentences as to "abuses" which were not specified, were those contained in the repeated statements of Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. SHERLEY stated that there had been "pronounced abuses growing out of the use of the Secret Service for purposes other than those intended," putting his statement in the form of a question, and in the same form further stated that the "private conduct" of "Members of Congress, Senators," and others ought not to be investigated by the Secret Service, and that they should not investigate a "member of Congress" who had been accused of "conduct unbecoming a gentleman and a member of Congress." In addition to these assertions couched as questions, he made one positive declaration, that "this Secret Service at one time was used for the purpose of looking into the personal conduct of a member of Congress." This argument of Mr. SHERLEY, the only real argument as to the merits of the question made on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations will be found in columns 1 and 2 of page 5556, and column 1 of page 5557 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. In column 1 of page 5556 Mr. SHERLEY refers to the impropriety of permitting the secret-service men to investigate men in the departments, officers of the army and navy, and Senators and Congressmen; in column 2 he refers to officers of the navy and members of Congress; in column 1 of page 5557, he refers only to members of Congress. His speech puts most weight on the investigation of members of Congress.

Before analyzing this statement, I shall read my remarks in their entirety, together with such of the remarks of other gentlemen as are necessarily connected with them, viz:

Mr. BENNETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I shall feel constrained to make the point of order, but I think I ought to say that I sympathize with the efforts of the committee to make definite and certain that kind of employment. There is no law whatever on the statute books for a secret-service division. This provision has been carried here for forty-three years, and from time to time changed to cover other branches of the government work in other departments.

Mr. SHERLEY. Has not every change that has been made since the establishment of that Secret Service been a change looking to limiting it to the purpose for which it was established?

Mr. BENNET of New York. It has been just the opposite.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will point to a single instance where the change has been to enlarge it, other than for the protection of the President and the bounty act, I shall be glad to see it.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Those are the only two there are.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, no; the gentleman will find a very broad provision there.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. At one time it said "other felonies against the United States."

Mr. SHERLEY. Does not the gentleman from New York know that in the past history of this Secret Service there have been pronounced abuses growing out of the use of the Secret Service for purposes other than those intended?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman does not know those things.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is not very fully informed on the subject, then.

Mr. BENNET of New York. There are many subjects on which the gentleman is not fully informed.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman from Kentucky is perfectly willing to admit that.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman from New York is endeavoring to obtain the information which the committee has on the subject.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is very proper.

Mr. BENNET then refers, in a colloquy with Mr. TAWNEY, to a case in the Navy Department; and after a few questions and answers with Mr. CLARK of Missouri the following questions and answers occur, viz:

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman from New York indicate what kind of private conduct by an officer of the Government he considers should be investigated by the Secret Service, and should it apply to officers of the navy, to officers of the army, men in the departments, Members of Congress, Senators, or what shall be the line?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I shall not attempt to answer any such blanket question as that.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I will make it a little less of a blanket.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman indicate what private conduct of an officer or employee of the Government should be investigated at the instigation of the head of any department of this Government?

Mr. BENNET of New York. None whatever, except such as affect him in his public capacity.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is a statement that does not mean anything. What does the gentleman consider should be the class of conduct, and who is to be the judge of whether it affects him in his public or private capacity? Does the gentleman think that heads of departments should have the right to determine, and if they so determine that the private conduct of the individual affects him in his public capacity, shall they investigate the matter with secret-service men?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I think this navy case, the history of which some gentlemen here are familiar with—

Mr. SHERLEY. What are the facts in that case?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Without telling any names, I am ready to state the facts. Here is a case where a naval officer of previous very high and irreproachable character, so far as the department knew, was absent on leave. There came to the office of the Acting Secretary of the Navy one day a very estimable lady of Washington, who charged that gentleman with conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, to wit, that he had abducted her daughter. The Secretary of the Navy exhausted the ordinary means within the navy of ascertaining the whereabouts of that officer.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Was not her daughter a married woman?

Mr. BENNET of New York. That makes it worse. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am trying to get all the facts; she was a married woman?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly; after the Secretary of the Navy had exhausted all the means at his command, he called in either one or two, I don't know which, secret-service officers, who simply, after a lapse of a few days, reported to the Secretary of the Navy—

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. A few days of shadowing, I suppose the gentleman means?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I do not. After a few days investigating, to find out where he was, they reported that he was at a certain place, and there their connection with the case ended. The Secretary of the Navy sent for the naval officer, and he was subsequently separated from the service. I maintain that in a case like that the Secretary of the Navy, or the head of any other department, for instance, the Secretary of War, has the right to do that.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then, whenever a charge is made against any officer, on leave or not on leave, that he has been guilty of conduct unbecoming a gentleman and an officer, the Secretary of the Navy is warranted in employing the secret-service men to shadow that man in order to prove whether those charges are well founded or not.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Not at all; and I do not so state.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then, let us find out the gentleman's point.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I stated that the Secretary of the Navy desired to locate the officer, and that he was unable through the officers of the Navy Department and through the regular channels——

Mr. SHERLEY. The man was on leave.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. He had a right to be away.

Mr. BENNET of New York. On leave, and he was charged with a serious and most grave crime.

Mr. SHERLEY. But let us not confuse the issues.

Mr. BENNET of New York. That is part of the issue.

Mr. SHERLEY. The man was on leave.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. And the gentleman thinks the Secretary of the Navy was warranted in putting a secret-service man on that man's trail?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I think he was not only justified but that it is his duty—an officer of the navy being charged with crime, whether on leave or on duty—to send for that officer, to start investigations, to court-martial him, and if he is guilty to separate him from the service.

Mr. SHERLEY. That does not necessarily involve, and heretofore has not involved, the use of a secret-service man.

Mr. BENNET of New York. It may not be necessary, but it did in this case involve it, and it has in other cases involved it, and I think that when these rare cases arise——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman his expired.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I would like to have two minutes more.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman think that if the accusation was made against a member of Congress that he has been guilty of conduct unbecoming a gentleman and a member of Congress that a department would be warranted in investigating his conduct by a secret-service man?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman is a gentleman of very high erudition, and he knows, of course——

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, let us dispense with the compliments and get down to the case.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Very well. Now, I will give the gentleman some facts. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERLEY. I am prepared to admit that anything that adduces a fact from the gentleman is warranted.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Very well. He knows, as we all know who are lawyers and have given any thought to the subject, that we are not federal officers; that we are not state officers; that we are a component part of the Government. There is nobody over us. We are the Congress of the United States and the judges of our own conduct.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Is it not true in the navy that it is a part of the standing regulations that a man must never go on leave so that his address shall not be known to the department? He has to be where they can find him, if he is required for duty, at a moment's notice.

Mr. BENNET of New York. That ought to be the regulation, whether it is or not.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It is.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I am glad to find that it is. And when this man could not be found, in obedience to that regulation, I say it was the duty of the Secretary of the Navy in that case, himself a gentleman of the highest character, to find this man and give him a chance to face his accusers and his accusers a chance to face him.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman must be aware of the fact that this Secret Service at one time was used for the purpose of looking into the personal conduct of a Member of Congress, notwithstanding the gentleman seems to think they are answerable to no one.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman is not aware of anything of that kind. As far as the gentleman has investigated, it has been denied.

Mr. SHERLEY. But that was the fact.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The allegation was made, if the gentleman will permit, that that particular investigation was made not by a member of the Secret Service, but by a police officer of the city of Washington, who, when it was ascertained that he had done that, was summarily dismissed from the police force. The gentleman from New York has heard that.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Does the gentleman know the origin of this remarkable language, "for no other purpose whatever," in this section?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman from New York is not informed as to that. The statute is forty-three years old.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Not this part of it.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman from New York does not even know that. The gentleman from New York is confining his remarks to the matters which he does know.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is very satisfactory.

This covers the remarks made by me in the way of a colloquy with Mr. BENNET, and covers all my remarks referred to by the President. But on the next page of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to wit, page 5558, will be found the argument I made in my own time, and which illustrates plainly my position at that time, viz:

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the possibilities of abuse of such a system as has grown up, and that this amendment is intended to correct, to my mind more than outweighs any inconvenience that may happen to a department. The gentleman from New York goes on the assumption that it is necessary for the departments to have secret-service men. I am not quite prepared to admit that proposition, at least as a general proposition; and if it be true that they need, for certain purposes, to have secret-service men, they should come to Congress and get authorization by Congress for the employment of this class of men. There is always a tendency on the part of bureau government to use such means as these to carry out what they consider to be the legitimate purposes of their creation, but there may be, and frequently is, very great difference of opinion as to what is a legitimate purpose. The gentleman from New York thinks that the Secretary of the Navy properly employed secret-service men in order to find out the details concerning a scandal in connection with a naval officer.

Mr. BENNET of New York. "The gentleman from New York" did not say that.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am simply taking the statement of the gentleman and the facts of the case, and I understood him to justify the action of the Secretary.

Mr. BENNET of New York. In locating the man.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the location of the man was not a question with the department, to know where that man was while on leave; but the location of the man by the Secret Service was really for the purpose of making charges against him in connection with some scandalous conduct of his. Now, I deny that it is the business of the Secretary of the Navy, or the Secretary of War, or any other secretary to employ secret-service men to dig up the private scandals of men.

I do not mean to uphold the scandals, but I do not believe this country has reached a point where it needs that sort of supervision over men's conduct by Government and by secret-service methods. That is the reason I am opposed to it. Let the departments come openly. They have been evading the plain spirit of the law, and they know it. There is not a man who can justify what has been done in the face of that statute. The statute expressly says that these men shall be used for certain enumerated purposes, and for none other. Now, they could not avoid the meaning of that statute, and so they try to circumscribe it by detailing, by dropping men from the rolls temporarily, in order that they may be picked up by other departments, and they frankly confess that they keep on their rolls a greater number than the needs of their service require in order that they may be able to detail those men to other departments. It is treating Congress and its laws with absolute contempt, and I desire to voice my protest against this attempt of the departments to determine what is necessary and legal, rather than to let the lawmaking part of the Government make that determination. I hope the limitation will prevail.

Immediately following my speech, Mr. DRISCOLL, of New York, spoke, and, among other things, said:

They (the departments other than the Treasury) may need the services of detectives for certain purposes.

To this I replied:

If they have such need, why not let them present the need to Congress and have Congress authorize it?

And again I make the same rejoinder in these words:

You are acting on the assumption that the need exists. Now, if it exists, let the department show it and ask Congress to authorize it.

This covers in its entirety my remarks.

Let us now examine these remarks with reference to the President's statement that the chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret-service men. The first reference of the President is to my statement that there had been pronounced abuses growing out of the Secret Service, and he says that I then stated in the form of a question that the "private conduct" of "Members of Congress," "Senators," and others ought not to be investigated by the Secret Service, and further stated that they should not investigate a Member of Congress who had been "accused of conduct unbecoming a gentleman and a Member of Congress." Now, the President, not only by eliminating and subordinating several of my remarks, but also by ignoring the remarks of Mr. BENNET that called them forth, undertakes to convey the impression that the fear of secret-service investigation of Members of Congress was the dominant idea in my mind. The fact is that the whole purpose of my questions was to obtain from Mr. BENNET, the champion of that service, a definition of what he considered to be its proper functions, and this because of his statement of a case relative to a private scandal involving a naval officer, and which case he thought was a proper one for investigation by the Secret Service. Knowing something of that case, and having it in mind as one of "the pronounced abuses of the service," and Mr. BENNET approving of it, I was curious to know, and thought it well for the House to know, Mr. BENNET's view. I accordingly asked him this question:

Will the gentleman from New York indicate what kind of private conduct by an officer of the Government he considers should be investigated by the Secret Service, and should it apply to officers of the navy, to officers of the army, men in the departments, Members of Congress, Senators, or what shall be the line?

My question was purposely made broad in order to arrive at the full view point of Mr. BENNET. It was so broad that Mr. BENNET objected to it, and replied:

I shall not attempt to answer any such blanket question as that.

To this I answered:

Well, I will make it a little less of a blanket.

I then asked this question:

Will the gentleman indicate what private conduct of an officer or employee of the Government should be investigated at the instigation of the head of any department of this Government?

Here is no reference to a Member of Congress, yet if I had had Members of Congress chiefly in mind, I would have naturally eliminated other classes and referred only to them. Mr. BENNET's answer was that no conduct except such as affects him in his public capacity should be investigated.

Believing that his reply did not indicate anything, I said so to him, and he replied by citing the navy case. This was what I wished—to reach a definite case that he thought in point. I then asked him the facts as to the case. He stated them and upheld the use of the Secret Service. I was so surprised at his statement that I replied:

Then, whenever a charge is made against any officer, on leave or not on leave, that he has been guilty of conduct unbecoming a gentleman and an officer, the Secretary of the Navy is warranted in employing the secret-service men to shadow that man in order to prove whether those charges are well founded or not?

It will be noted that here I used Mr. BENNET's language, "of conduct unbecoming a gentleman and an officer." Mr. BENNET denied that I correctly stated his position, and after a running exchange of questions and answers, in order to again try to arrive at his position, I asked him this question; and on this single question rests entirely the assertion of the President that the chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated, and so forth. Listen to the question:

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman think that if the accusation was made against a member of Congress of conduct unbecoming a gentleman and a member of Congress that a department would be warranted in investigating his conduct by a secret-service man?

Mr. BENNET replied to this wonderful question, that contained in it the germ of this controversy, by saying that I knew, as all lawyers knew, that—

Members of Congress are not federal officers; that we are not state officers; that we are a component part of the Government. There is nobody over us. We are the Congress of the United States and the judges of our own conduct.

A view, by the way, that does not seem to be shared with him by the Chief Executive.

To this rejoinder I replied:

This Secret Service at one time was used for the purpose of looking into the personal conduct of a member of Congress, notwithstanding the gentleman seems to think that they are answerable to no one.

This statement, as is shown on its face, was made solely because of Mr. BENNET's previous statement, and it may not be amiss to here state that its accuracy can be verified by a reference to Senate Report No. 784, Forty-fifth Congress, third session. A reading of that report will show how the gossip of a corridor was seized upon by the Secret Service in an attempt to destroy a Senator of the United States and, while the report of the Senate committee states that the investigation by the Secret Service was requested by a Member of the House, the testimony shows that for days prior to his request the investigation was going on, and the suggestion was made to him by the assistant chief of that service that he request the inquiry. I commend to the advocates of an unrestrained Secret Service a careful reading of this report.

Mr. Speaker, my apology for this tiresome recital of the colloquy between Mr. BENNET and myself is the importance given it by the President of the United States in his attempted justification of his original message.

Let me now, as briefly as may be, refer to what I consider the real argument made by myself. I believed that a secret-service force had inherently in it the possibilities of abuse, and the very case cited by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], touching a naval officer, and which was known to me, was evidence to my mind of its abuse, whatever the motive was that prompted its use in that case or the good accomplished. I knew that the language in the law that the money appropriated for this service should be used for the limited cases enumerated and "for no other purpose whatsoever" was not accidental, but that the words "for no other purpose whatsoever" had been inserted because of an abuse of the service; that it had followed the exposure of the wrongful use of the service set out in the Senate report I have referred to.

I knew that the spirit of this provision was being violated by the detailing of men from this service to other departments, and that the method employed was destructive of the expressed will of Congress. All this had appeared in the debate; and so very briefly, for I spoke in my own time less than five minutes, I called attention to the possibilities of abuse in the system that had grown up; how the tendency of the departments was to use means that they thought proper to carry out their purposes, without regard to the opinion of the lawmaking body. My experience in Congress had from day to day confirmed this conviction, and so I urged that this plain and flagrant violation of the law should be stopped. I knew of the hundreds of thousands of dollars we had appropriated to enable the Government to detect and punish crime; I knew then, and I know now, that the number of men employed by the Government in detective work outside this bureau exceeded many times the number in the Secret Service Bureau, and so I stated that the possibilities of abuse of the system that had grown up, to my mind outweighed any inconvenience to a department. In this conclusion I may or may not have been right, though I now believe that if the resolution that will be offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is adopted, the inquiry thereby started will demonstrate the correctness of my statement.

The very essence of my position was contained in one of the closing sentences of my speech when I said:

> It is treating Congress and its laws with absolute contempt, and I desire to voice my protest against this attempt of the departments to determine what is necessary and legal rather than to let the lawmaking part of the Government make that determination.

I did not have in my mind at any time the fear of being investigated by secret-service men. I have no such fear now, but I have a pronounced repugnance to so being, and I trust the day may never come when I shall be so lacking in manhood as not to have such repugnance. [Loud applause.] In my judgment there was not a Member of this House who voted out of fear of being investigated by the Secret Service.

The President's stigma is gratuitous and without the shadow of an excuse. [Loud applause.] I shall not now enter into a recital of the various appropriations made by Congress to enable the Executive to enforce the laws of the land and detect and punish violators of them. This has and will be better done by my colleagues. Suffice it to say that the sums appropriated and provisions made by this Congress exceed that of any previous Congress during the entire life of the nation. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, when the resolution to be offered by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is adopted, and the investigation into the various secret-service bureaus of the Government is had, I trust we shall be in possession of such data as will enable Congress to fully deal with that subject-matter. Then will arise, not the question stated by the President, but the one I have mentioned, of how to so regulate the Secret Service as to retain its proper efficiency in the detection of crime, with the least possible opportunity for its abuse.

The President approaches this subject of the Secret Service from a diametrically opposite position to my own. His position he states thus:

> Such a body as the Secret Service, such a body of trained investigating agents, occupying a permanent position in the government service and separate from local investigating forces in different departments, is an absolute necessity if the best work is to be done against criminals. It is by far the most efficient instrument possible to use against crime. Of course, the more efficient an instrument is the more dangerous it is if misused. To the argument that a force like this can be misused it is only necessary to answer that the condition of its usefulness, if handled properly, is that it shall be so efficient as to be dangerous if handled improperly. Any instance of abuse by the Secret Service or other investigating force in the departments should be unsparingly punished, and Congress should hold itself ready at any and all times to investigate the executive departments whenever there is reason to believe that any such instance of abuse has occurred. I wish to emphasize my more than cordial acquiescence in the view that this is not only the right of Congress, but emphatically its duty. To use the Secret Service in the investigation of purely private or political matters would be a gross abuse.

If this statement is examined with care, it will be found to mean that the President considers that a secret-service department of government is not only an absolute necessity, but that the efficiency of its service is so great as to warrant its creation without restriction as to its use, trusting to the Executive to prevent abuse, and if such occurs, punishing unsparingly those guilty of the abuse. He states it frankly when he declares that—

> To the argument that a force like this can be misused it is only necessary to answer that the condition of its usefulness, if handled properly, is that it shall be so efficient as to be dangerous if handled improperly.

I, on the contrary, believe it to be so dangerous an instrument as to warrant its creation for the use of an Executive only when it is so circumscribed as to prevent as far as possible its abuse. [Applause.]

These opposing ideas represent differences in the fundamental aspects of government. The one stands as the Anglo-Saxon conception of government, the other as the continental.

In my reading of history I recall no instance where a government perished because of the absence of a secret-service force, but many there are that perished as a result of the spy system. If Anglo-Saxon civilization stands for anything, it is for a government where the humblest citizen is safeguarded against the secret activities of the executive of the government. [Applause.] It stands as a protest against a government of men and for a government of law.

The history of England, from its beginning until now, is a history of rights, guarding the freedom of the individual from the tyranny of the Crown, secured and sealed in the blood of its patriots. From a government built solely on brute force it evolved into a government where the executive power was predicated on divine right; from that to a government resting upon the tyranny of law, despotically enacted and enforced, and out of that to government resting upon laws expressive of the will of the people, and honestly and openly enforced.

Not in vain did our forefathers read the history of the Magna Charta and of the Bill of Rights. When our Constitution was adopted, the people's restlessness under it and fear of oppression was not removed until there was embodied in it the ten amendments constituting our American Bill of Rights. The fourth amendment declares:

> The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized.

The view of government that called it into existence is not lightly to be brushed aside. Contrast this theory of government with the history of France in the days of Napoleon and of the Reign of Terror. Picture the Government of Russia that but recently tottered almost to its fall because of the prevalence of the opposing theory of government.

Sir, when it shall come to the formulation of a new law that shall govern the use of a secret service, I trust that this Congress, representing the individual citizens of our country, may as heretofore guard with jealous care the sacred rights of those citizens, and hedge about such service with all the safeguards essential to the preservation of the people's liberties. Whatever may have been the wisdom of its course, I glory in the fact that it was this motive that actuated this House in the performance of its duty when legislating touching a spy system. [Applause.]

> Not the man alone who feels, but who is exposed to tyranny, is without freedom.

[Loud and long continued applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, impelled by a sense of duty to the country, the Congress, the Committee on Appropriations, and to myself, I wish to discuss as calmly as I can the controversy which has arisen as to the so-called "Secret Service."

In doing so I shall keep constantly in mind that while the Constitution creates three branches of government; first, the legislative; second, the executive; and third, the judicial, the precedence thus given the legislative branch did not imply superiority, but, on the contrary, our fathers founded a government of three equal and coordinate branches, and that respectful treatment is always due from each one of these three to the other two.

No controversy of any kind shall induce me to become unmindful of my duty in this respect. No man in the United States is more heartily in favor of the rigid enforcement of all laws alike against the rich and poor, the high and low, public officials and others, than I am, and to this end I am well aware that it is sometimes necessary to resort to the use of detectives.

The distinction in a city between an astute police officer and a detective is not well defined, except by the names of the places under which they are carried on the pay roll. And so in the national service the distinction can not be specifically stated between a shrewd special agent or inspector and a detective. Generally speaking, the former are trained along some special line and in that line are more efficient than a general detective could be.

There is no limit whatever upon the power of any department in the selection of its numerous special agents and inspectors, which are authorized by law to appoint as many detectives as its appropriation will cover. I think we ought all to be able to agree that some detective force is necessary in the enforcement of the criminal laws; and that, on the other hand, in a free country, no general system of spying upon and espionage of the people, such as has prevailed in Russia, in France under the empire, and at one time in Ireland, should be allowed to grow up. I am unwilling to permit this controversy to continue on a false issue. The question is not whether we should have a detective force in the Department of Justice, a thing which, so far as I can recollect, has never been advised by the President until his message of January 4, 1909. That is a very proper subject for the consideration of Congress; and in advising it, the President is certainly within his right. The question now is not should a legal detective force be created in the Department of Justice, but was Congress subject to just criticism for destroying at its last session the system which had grown up of using the counterfeiting force in the Treasury Department for miscellaneous purposes.

I may say, however, that as there never was any special creation by act of Congress of the detective force, now known as the "Secret Service," except by the appropriation of funds for the detection of counterfeiters, I am wholly at a loss to know why the Attorney-General has not full power to organize a detective force under the numerous appropriations now at his disposal, and his last report shows he has already done so.

Again, attention is called to the fact that the question now is not what should be done in the future upon the advice just received, but did Congress do right last year in what was done in reference to the so-called "Secret Service?"

In discussing that, I must briefly review the history of this service.

Prior to the civil war trifling appropriations were made for the detection and punishment of counterfeiters, but the civil war caused a vast issue of greenbacks, national-bank notes and bonds, at a time when such work was, when compared with the present, in a primitive state, and counterfeiting increased, so that Congress commenced making regular appropriations for its suppression.

For the fiscal year 1864 the law read:

> For detecting and bringing to trial of persons engaged in counterfeiting the coin of the United States, treasury notes, and other United States securities, $25,000.

The appropriations for the years 1865 to 1868, inclusive, while not verbally identical with the act for 1864, were so in substance. A deficiency appropriation was obtained for the year 1868, which read:

> For detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons engaged in counterfeiting treasury notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States, as well as the coin of the United States and other frauds on the revenue.

The appropriation for the year 1869 was in the same language, except that the words "other frauds on the revenue" were omitted and "other frauds upon the Government" inserted. An appropriation in substantially this language was made for each of the following years, down to and including 1879, except that in the year 1874 and thereafter the appropriation was made also for the detection and bringing to trial and punishment of persons engaged in counterfeiting national-bank notes.

There never was any law, as I understand it, creating the Secret Service, but at some time prior to the summer of 1878 the Treasury Department had created what is called the "Secret Service Division" to administer these annual appropriations. In the summer of 1878 the counterfeiting section of the Treasury Department, which it had named the "Secret Service Division," upon its own responsibility, as far as it appears, undertook to ascertain how a paragraph in the sundry civil bill for 1879 was omitted from the bill in the enrolling room. While this investigation was started, apparently, by the Secret Service upon its own responsibility, a few days after it was started the chief of the division succeeded in securing from General Atkins, then chairman of the Appropriations Committee of this House, a request to make the investigation. This use of the appropriation having been shown, Congress at its next session, in the sundry civil act approved March 3, 1879, for the year ending June 30, 1880, appropriated for this service in the usual language, except that it struck out the words "frauds on the Government" and inserted "crimes against the United States, and for no other purpose whatever."

We are now told, in effect, that this was only a limitation of the use of the money, and not a limitation on the use of the force. If I remember rightly, one of the rules of construction of a statute is to consider what the old law was, the evil, and the remedy.

This service engaged in an investigation wholly foreign to any for which it was created; that was the evil. Congress put the limitation on, "and for no other purpose whatever," and it is seriously contended the legislative intent was simply that such foreign work could be done out of other appropriations by this same force.

Laws should be observed in their spirit as well as in their letter, and government officials even more than ordinary citizens should heed this rule. He who is charged with the execution of the law, even in a humble capacity, should set an example of law obedience to all. If it be improper for a mere citizen, by a technical or strained construction of the law, to evade the self-evident legislative purpose, much more culpable is it for one charged with the law's administration so to do. Considerable as was the restriction sought to be put on this service by the act I have just quoted, at the following session, in the appropriation made June 16, 1880, for the year ending June 30, 1881, Congress struck out the general authority as to "crimes against the United States" and inserted "and robbing mails and other felonies committed against the United States, relating to the postal service, the pay and bounty laws, and against the laws relating to the revenue service," and retained the phrase "and for no other purpose whatever." Not satisfied with this second reduction of the powers of this force, in the appropriation for the fiscal year 1882 this was the language:

> For expenses of detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons engaged in counterfeiting treasury notes, bonds, national-bank notes, and other securities of the United States, as well as the coins of the United States, and other felonies committed against the laws of the United States, relating to the pay and bounty laws, and for no other purpose whatever, $80,000.

Thus as Congress supposed this force was stripped of every function, except as to counterfeiting and the back pay and bounty laws, and provision was from time to time made for inspectors, special agents, and the like to enforce with the marshals and the law department the other laws of the United States, but no restriction was ever imposed upon any department in selecting its force of inspectors or special agents from choosing detectives, if it saw fit.

Exactly the same language adopted in the year 1882 was used in the acts for 1883 to 1888, inclusive, and very generally speaking the same language has been used ever since. In the act for 1889 authority was extended to the "investigation of claims for reimbursement of expense incident to last sickness and burial of deceased pensioners," and this clause has ever since been carried.

In the act for 1890 authority was extended so as to include detecting and bringing to trial and punishment dealers and pretended dealers in counterfeit money, and this has been carried ever since. In the act for 1891 authority was granted to investigate violations of section 5209 of the Revised Statutes, with reference to embezzlement from national banks, and the same authority was given by the acts for the years 1892 to 1894, inclusive, when it was dropped. In the act for 1893 the language was changed from "for detecting and bringing to trial and punishment" to "for detecting, arresting, and delivering into the custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction," and authority was granted with reference to counterfeiting the securities and coins of foreign Governments.

In 1907 the act was changed to read:

> And for no other purpose whatever, except in the protection of the person of the President of the United States.

When that bill was being prepared Mr. John E. Wilkie, Chief of the Secret Service, was before the subcommittee, having it in charge. He was asked if the men kept at the White House were members of his force, and he said they were. He was also asked if they were paid out of the appropriation for the suppression of counterfeiting and said they were, and upon being asked how that could be done, he replied that he was compelled to make a false certificate to every pay roll. The subcommittee was anxious not only to furnish every possible protection to the person of the President, but to furnish him whatever he might deem the most efficient force for that purpose, but it did not believe that a system of false accounting should be maintained, and it was at once suggested that the language ought to be modified so as to give the President, for his protection, that force he apparently regarded as most efficient, and at the same time stop the filing of false certificates that the force was used for the suppression of counterfeiting.

As Mr. Wilkie was leaving the room, he said in substance: "I hope you will make some arrangement that will relieve me from committing perjury once a month." Each of the other members of the then subcommittee, who are still in Congress, and Mr. Courts, the clerk of the whole committee, have in the form of letters to me, stated their recollection of this matter, and I will read these letters:

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 6, 1909.

Hon. WALTER I. SMITH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Complying with your personal request for a statement of the testimony of Mr. John E. Wilkie, Chief of the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department, when before the subcommittee on the sundry civil appropriation bill during the hearings upon the estimates for appropriations for the Secret Service for the first session of the Sixtieth Congress, I will say that I distinctly recollect what Mr. Wilke said, and I also recall the fact that at his request his testimony was not taken down by the stenographer to be printed in the record of the hearings for the reason which he suggested, which was that the character of his service was such that he would prefer not to have the information regarding any use of the Secret Service made public. Mr. Wilkie was especially desirous of having the purposes for which the Secret Service of the Treasury Department was authorized enlarged so as to include the protection of the President, stating that for some time past he had detailed several of his men for this service; that such details were unauthorized by law; and that in order that the men thus detailed could secure compensation for their services, he was obliged to falsely certify to the pay roll by stating that they were employed in the service authorized by law. Before leaving the committee room he was informed by me and by other members of the subcommittee that his request to have the authority for the use of the Secret Service enlarged so as to include the protection of the person of the President was a reasonable one, and that it would be granted. Whereupon Mr. Wilkie stated that if that was done, he would be relieved from the necessity of committing perjury every month when he signed the pay roll for the payment of his men thus detailed. While I do not pretend to give from recollection the exact words used by Mr. Wilkie in relation to this matter, I do, nevertheless, distinctly recall his statement that he was obliged falsely to certify to the employment of the men who were detailed for the protection of the person of the President; and when informed that authority would be given for the employment of the men in that service, he stated distinctly that if that was done, he would be relieved from the necessity of committing perjury every month or every thirty days.

Yours, very truly,
J. A. TAWNEY,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, January 5, 1909.

Hon. WALTER I. SMITH,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SMITH: In the spring of 1906, as a member of the subcommittee on sundry civil appropriation bill, I was present when Mr. Wilkie, Chief of the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department, was examined in regard to the duties of his office and how his force was employed. He answered freely all inquiries. Among other things he stated that he and his force belonged in the Treasury Department and were employed principally in looking after counterfeiting and like offenses. In reply to the question "are you and your men ever called upon to do work outside of and unconnected with the Treasury Department," he replied, "we are sometimes detailed for outside work, especially in protecting the person of the President." He was asked out of what fund his men were paid, who were engaged in protecting the person of the President, he replied that they were paid out of the same fund that he made out his pay-roll account, just as though the force was employed in the regular work of the Treasury Department; that he was embarrassed by this, inasmuch as he was practically compelled to falsify every time he made out accounts for such services of his men; and that he would be glad if the committee could so amend the law as to relieve him of this embarrassment. It was and is my impression that this last statement was a factor leading to the amendment placed upon the sundry civil appropriation bill in that Congress; at least it was in so far as I was concerned.

During the examination Mr. Wilkie said he hoped his statement would not be printed in the hearings, and to this the subcommittee readily assented.

I may add, as doubtless you remember, that individually I favored a large allowance and more extended employment for the Secret Service of the Government, and my opinion in that regard is unchanged.

This is my recollection of the facts, and you may use this letter as you see proper.

Yours, very truly,
GEO. W. TAYLOR.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 7, 1909.

Hon. WALTER I. SMITH,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: I was a member of the subcommittee that prepared the sundry civil appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907.

While we were considering that bill, Mr. Wilkie, the Chief of the Secret Service, was before the committee in reference to his estimates, and was interrogated as to the manner in which those men assigned to duty at the White House were paid.

My recollection of much of what he said is somewhat vague, but I know it was that a clause should be inserted to permit his force to be used for the protection of the person of the President, and that, as Mr. Wilkie left the room, he said, in substance, "I hope you will make this change, as it will save me from committing perjury once a month." His use of the term "perjury" was so startling that that portion of his statement was impressed upon my mind, although much of the balance of what he said has escaped me.

Very respectfully, yours,
W. P. BROWNLOW.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 6, 1909.

DEAR SIR: Some time prior to the last of May, 1906, and during the conduct of the hearings on the sundry civil appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1907, Mr. John E. Wilkie, Chief of the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department, appeared before the subcommittee in behalf of the estimate of $125,000 for suppressing counterfeiting. At his request his statement was not reported in common with other testimony reported by the committee. Mr. Wilkie in response to questions of the chairman, and perhaps other members, stated that he was greatly embarrassed each month in making certificate to the pay rolls of his service on account of the operatives he had on duty in connection with the protection of the person of the President, that the service was not permitted under the terms of the appropriation, and that in effect he was compelled each month to make a false certificate. After the close of his examination, and as he was leaving the room, he said, substantially:

"I hope you gentlemen will so modify the terms of the appropriation as to relieve me from the necessity of perjuring myself every month."

Very respectfully,
JAMES C. COURTS,
Clerk Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

Hon. WALTER I. SMITH,
House of Representatives.

While this amendment was not asked by the department in the estimates, it is perhaps but simple justice to Mr. Wilkie to say that he seemed much embarrassed by the position he was placed in and much pleased at the proposition that the committee would so amend the law as to relieve him. I ought perhaps to say that I do not understand his reference to perjury meant more than that he was compelled every month to violate his oath of office, as I do not understand that such certificates are sworn to.

I do not believe that the present President or his predecessors, if they used this service in the same way, understood the situation so graphically pointed out by Mr. Wilkie. This was the first information I at least had that any system had been in use of drawing money upon untrue vouchers by executive officers in this connection. It will be observed that such a thing as the Secret Service Division was never mentioned in connection with any of these numerous appropriations, but in 1882, to check the departments in a tendency displayed to use a very large portion of many appropriations for administrative work in Washington, Congress passed a law making it illegal to use lump-sum appropriations such as these for salaries of employees in Washington, and so the Treasury Department was compelled to apply to Congress for a special appropriation for the chief of the division which it had created and his assistants in Washington, and such an appropriation has been made each year from 1883 to the present time. It appears from the hearings before the Appropriation Committee that the usual appropriation in this counterfeiting section will pay the expenses of about forty-seven men, the compensation of the men varying from three to seven dollars a day, a single one receiving $8, and the balance when used is expended for subsistence when away from one's post and for traveling expenses.

Notwithstanding the appropriation would only pay the compensation and allowances of about 47 men, about 67 have been carried on the roll, depending absolutely for ability to pay them on money obtained from other departments for loaning them.

Mr. Moran, Assistant Chief of the Secret Service, when before the committee a year ago, illustrated how men were thus loaned as follows:

Mr. MORAN. The Attorney-General writes a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, stating that he has a certain matter that he wants investigated, probably under the direction of a United States attorney; he asks that there be recommended a competent person to make that investigation, and, if so, what compensation they will expect for that person. In reply to that, they are told that Mr. So-and-so is a person who is probably able to meet the requirements, and if they want him, he will expect a certain per diem and expenses. (Hearings, 1909, p. 186.)

It appears that formerly each man was allowed $3 a day for subsistence when away from his post, and his actual traveling expenses, but that recently the allowance for subsistence has been increased to $4. It is thus quite clear that in many cases the allowance for subsistence and traveling expenses exceeds the allowance for personal services, if the employee is away from his post. The examination of Mr. Moran as reported contains the following:

Mr. SMITH. When you designate some one to serve in another department, does he invariably serve under the same allowances that he does under your roll?

Mr. MORAN. Well, that depends altogether on what the language of the appropriation is from which he must be paid.
Mr. SMITH. This question referred entirely to the amount, not to how he was carried on the roll. You say that the amount he gets is not the same?
Mr. MORAN. Oh, yes; he gets, in effect, the same.
Mr. SMITH. That is to say, if the appropriation out of which he was to be paid was one for service, if I understand you rightly, they would proceed to pad the service enough to cover the expenses and allowances of per diem?
Mr. MORAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. SMITH. That is what you mean?
Mr. MORAN. Yes. (Hearings, 1909, p. 189.)

It will thus be observed that in all such cases a very large portion of the money paid out is paid for expenses which are not properly payable out of the appropriation under its terms.

I call your attention to the fact that Mr. Moran said that the officer calling for the detective was informed how much of the allowance was in reality for personal service and how much for expenses, and that he further stated that in the class of cases under consideration the accounts for personal service were deliberately padded to cover the allowance for expenses. To draw the money it was necessary to make a false certificate, that it was all for personal services. Whereas in many cases not one-half of it was for that purpose or for any purpose for which the appropriation was authorized to be expended.

Section 5438 of the Revised Statutes provides:

Every person who * * * makes, uses, or causes to be made or used any false * * * voucher, roll, * * * (or) certificate knowing the same to contain any * * * fictitious statement or entry * * * shall be imprisoned at hard labor for not less than one nor more than five years or fined not less than one thousand nor more than five thousand dollars.

It thus appears that in every such case as that referred to by Mr. Moran in his statement quoted a felony has been committed by some one in the department using the detective from the Secret Service. Some of the committee had other reasons for believing this service had been abused, but all were agreed that this system, which was in defiance of the well-indicated purpose of Congress, expressed every year for thirty years by the insertion of the words each year "and for no other purpose whatever;" a system which allowed an official to carry more men all the time on the roll than could be paid with his appropriation, trusting to find places where he could hire them out; a system which required padding of pay rolls, false certificates, and illegal expenditure of appropriated funds must cease. Standing steadfastly for the enforcement of law, but opposed to the commission of innumerable felonies to that end, the same bill increased the appropriation for the Interior Department for the investigation of illegal land entries from $250,000 to $500,000.

This was not only an increase of one-fourth of a million dollars, but was an increase of 100 per cent in one year, and was all the department asked; but, more than this, the increase allowed was twice as great as the whole ordinary appropriation for the Secret Service.

While the President says that at one time, while Mr. Hitchcock was Secretary of the Interior, it was decided that the special agents' division, or corps of detectives, of the Land Office was largely under the control of the land thieves, I trust that in the years intervening these unworthy officers have been separated from the public service. The increase in the appropriation for investigating land frauds alone was sufficient to have hired the entire force of the Secret Service permanently, and have thus employed all the men so much talked about; but let us see what some of the witnesses say upon this subject. On April 30, 1906, Governor Richards, of Wyoming, then Commissioner of the General Land Office, was before the subcommittee on the sundry civil bill when it was inquiring as to the proposed appropriation for protecting public lands from illegal or fraudulent entry or appropriation, and he was then interrogated and answered as follows:

Mr. SMITH. Are any of the Treasury Department secret-service men employed under this fund?
Mr. RICHARDS. There are men who have been obtained from the Secret Service and are employed and paid out of this fund; but they are borrowed, you might say, from that service. Their pay is stopped in that service and they are paid in our service.
Mr. SMITH. How many men, about, in a year do you have from the Secret Service in that way, governor?
Mr. RICHARDS. We never had any until this Oregon trouble came up. Then there was one man obtained from the Secret Service.
Mr. SMITH. That one man is all you have ever had?
Mr. RICHARDS. Yes, sir. Those cases seem to be so badly involved that we had no men, no special agents, that possessed just the right qualifications to ferret the matter out. Mr. Wilkie was called on to furnish us a man who had the proper qualifications, and he did so. That man is employed yet, and so far as I know there is no other man out of the Secret Service. This man has been allowed, however, to employ men to assist him, but they have not been men who were in the Secret Service. (Hearings, 1907, p. 427.)

Mr. Moran, Assistant Chief of the Secret Service, furnished a tabulated statement to the Appropriation Committee a year ago, from which it appears that not a single secret-service agent has been employed by the Interior Department since June 30, 1906. This statement is printed on page 193 of last year's hearings. As Governor Richards testified on the 30th day of April, 1906, and Mr. Moran's statement only goes back to June 30, 1906, I can not be positive as to what was done during May and June of that year, but it fairly appears that only one secret-service agent has ever been employed by the Interior Department, which has exclusive charge of the public lands, and that was in the Oregon cases. Secretary Garfield appeared before the committee a year ago and, while disclaiming any criticism of secret-service agents, declared that he needed for his purposes men specially trained in the land laws and who knew what constituted a legal entry. It thus clearly appears by the testimony of Governor Richards, Mr. Moran, and Secretary Garfield that unless it might have been in May or June, 1906, the Land Department never used these men, except one man in the Oregon cases, and that it does not want them.

General Bonaparte, when before one of the subcommittees, complained that the system of borrowing men from the counterfeiting section was unsatisfactory. General Bonaparte and Secretary Garfield were the only Cabinet members who ever appeared before the committee on this subject, and both disapproved of the system.

The President, as I am advised, has never discussed this subject, either orally or any other way, with any member of the subcommittee having the matter in charge, and I do not know how far he is familiar with the matters I have stated.

When the subject came up a year ago in the House, I said:

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, for two years past some investigation has been made into this subject by the Committee on Appropriations. It appears that this division was, in fact, created by an appropriation, as stated by the gentleman from New York, and at one time the language was so broad as to authorize the use of this Secret Service for investigation of all felonies. After certain gross abuses of it, about twenty-five years ago, a provision was put into this appropriation that it should be used for the enumerated purposes and for no other purpose whatever.
Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Not until I finish this statement; then I will yield.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa declines to yield.
Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Now, that was the only way in which any limitation could be put upon the activities of this Secret Service.
It existed only in the appropriation authorizing it, and when Congress provided that no person employed under this appropriation could be used for any other purpose whatever than those enumerated in the statute, although it only operated as a limitation technically upon the appropriation, it was a specific declaration of congressional purpose that the men in this division should not be used for any other purpose whatever.

The President quoted from my remarks on that occasion the words, "Now, that was the only way in which any limitation could be put upon the activities of the Secret Service." I think the ordinary reader of the message would understand that this remark was made in reference to the amendment of last year, whereas my remarks as a whole show that the statement was in reference to the amendment inserted in the act of March 3, 1879.

It was my effort in those remarks to treat mildly the past offenses of this system, if they would but cease, but I have now seen fit to do some plain speaking. The vote for the amendment, so vigorously criticised, was so overwhelming that no division even was demanded.

It is true that when the bill went to the Senate, upon a wholly one-sided presentation, and that against the amendment, the committee dropped it out, but upon a full and fair conference in which Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON, Hon. EUGENE HALE, and Hon. HENRY M. TELLER represented the Senate and Hon. JAMES A. TAWNEY, Hon. J. J. FITZGERALD, and myself represented the House, upon the presentation in general of the matters I have detailed, it was unanimously agreed that the House amendment should stand.

The President, in his message of January 4, says: "In Nebraska it was necessary to remove a United States attorney and a United States marshal before satisfactory progress could be made in the prosecution of the offenders.

"The evidence in all these cases was chiefly secured by men trained in the Secret Service and detailed to the Department of Justice at the request of that department and of the Department of the Interior. In the State of Nebraska alone 60 defendants were indicted, and of the 32 cases thus far brought to trial 28 have resulted in conviction, 2 of the principals, Messrs. Comstock and Richards, men of wealth and wide influence, being sentenced to twelve months in jail and fined fifteen hundred dollars each. The following secret-service memorandum, made in the course of a pending case, illustrates the ramifications of interest with which the Government has to deal:

"Charles T. Stewart, of Council Bluffs, was indicted at Omaha for conspiracy to defraud the Government of the title to public lands in Mc-

Pherson County, Nebr.; also indicted for maintaining an unlawful inclosure of public lands; and also under indictment for perjury in connection with final proof submitted by him on lands filed on by him as a homestead. In his final proof he swore that he and his family had resided on the lands in McPherson County (which are within his unlawful inclosure), when, as a matter of fact, his family has at all times resided in Council Bluffs, Iowa. He is engaged in the wholesale grocery business, his store being located in Omaha, in the wholesale district there. He is reputed to be quite wealthy. Stewart's attorneys are Harl & Tinley, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, who are also the attorneys at that place for the Omaha and Council Bluffs Street Railway Company, in which company Harl holds considerable stock, Stewart being also a stockholder, and possibly a director, of the company. He is also represented in Omaha by W. J. Connell, one of the attorneys there for the same company. Stewart is also represented in his perjury case by "Bill" Gurley, of Omaha, Nebr., who at one time was quite closely connected in a political way with the Union Pacific Railroad Company. Stewart is also closely associated with C. B. Hazleton, postmaster at Council Bluffs. Harl and Tinley and Hazleton are all members of the same lodge. Another close personal friend of Stewart's is Ed. Hart, alias "Waterworks" Hart, president of the Council Bluffs Water Company, and interested in the street railway. Stewart's father was interested in, and practically owned and controlled during his lifetime, a large ranch along the Union Pacific Railroad in Nebraska and did a great deal of business with that road.

"Concerning this case, the United States attorney at Omaha states "there are three cases against Stewart, one for fencing, one conspiracy, one perjury, all good cases, and chances of conviction good."

It is quite generally known that my home is at Council Bluffs. Why this special reference to these cases which chanced to be prosecuted in my vicinity, although the offenses were all committed more than 200 miles from my home, and in another State, I might feel that it was intended to insinuate that the proximity of these cases had in some way influenced my action in this matter but for the fact that the President said all this to "illustrate the ramifications of interests with which the Government has to deal."

I am not at liberty to even suspect, therefore, that there was any other purpose in the President's mind than the one he states. If such an insinuation were properly inferable, I would treat it with all conceivable scorn and contempt. I do not know the name, even, of any man tried in Nebraska for illegal transactions in connection with the public lands, except the two who are named in the message of January 4. I do not know any man who has ever been indicted, except C. T. Stewart. I do not know the name of any man who has directly or indirectly represented any of the parties charged, except those who it is said appeared for Mr. Stewart. It is, of course, possible that if I knew the names of the attorneys for other defendants I might know some of them. I have never had a word of conversation or other communication with Mr. Stewart, or anybody representing him, about the Secret Service. I never dreamed that any secret-service man had been employed in this case until within about three weeks. I have never known until the message of January 4 what particular offenses he was charged with, but understood from the press that one or more indictments were found against him, charging some violations of the land laws. I do not know what the conspiracy charged against him is, but so far as the other charges are concerned, as revealed in this memorandum, it would seem that a special agent of the Land Department should be able to ascertain whether a ranchman was fencing the public domain and whether a society woman was living in McPherson County, Nebr., or Pottawattamie County, Iowa, hundreds of miles apart, during the homestead period. If these special agents can not prepare cases like that, we are simply wasting $500,000 a year on them. But the President tells us that the Secret Service, at least, had a memorandum of the Stewart case, which "illustrates the ramifications of interests with which the Government has to deal."

We are not advised when this memorandum was made or who made it. Let it be examined in detail.

It is stated that—

He (Stewart) is engaged in the wholesale grocery business, his store being located in Omaha, in the wholesale district there.

This is wholly untrue. He is not now and never was engaged in the wholesale grocery business at Omaha. He had a cousin, J. T. Stewart, 2d, who was in the wholesale grocery business in Omaha. [Laughter.]

The detective claims to have discovered the names of Stewart's attorneys of record. That was a mighty struggle by which our fathers secured the right to appear by counsel in criminal proceedings. I trust this sacred right is not regarded as obnoxious.

Stewart's attorneys are Harl & Tinley, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, who are also the attorneys at that place for the Omaha and Council Bluffs Street Railway Company, in which company Harl holds considerable stock, Stewart being also a stockholder and possibly a director of the company.

I did not believe Mr. Harl owned any stock in that company, and I wired him to know, and have here his answer:

Never owned a dollar of stock in street railway company.
CHARLES M. HARL.

[Laughter.]

But the memorandum suggests that Stewart is a stockholder and possibly a director. The information that he might possibly be a director would, of course, be exceedingly valuable, but he is not, and never has been either a director or stockholder in the company named; but his father's estate, to which he is one of the heirs, does own some stock in a wholly different company, which owns the bridge across the Missouri River and a portion of the street car lines, and has leased all its property for ninety-nine years or such a matter to the company named. [Laughter.]

He is also represented in Omaha by W. J. Connell, one of the attorneys there for the same company. Stewart is also represented in his perjury case by "Bill" Gurley, of Omaha, Nebr., who at one time was quite closely connected in a political way with the Union Pacific Railroad Company. Stewart is also closely associated with C. B. Hazleton, postmaster at Council Bluffs.

The name of the postmaster at Council Bluffs is Arthur S. Hazelton. This detective calls him "C. B. Hazleton." This detective could not even get the name of a man that has been in the Blue Book for six or seven years. [Laughter.] While I have no doubt Stewart is acquainted with Hazelton, the assertion that they are closely associated is wholly false. Hazelton is himself a prominent lawyer, but does not seem to have been closely enough associated with Stewart to be retained.

Harl and Tinley and Hazleton are all members of the same lodge.

This may be true. I think they are all members of the Order of Elks and all wear emblems of that order. This astute detective was able to conclude that in a city where there was but a single Elk's lodge three resident lawyers, wearing Elk emblems, probably belonged to the same lodge.

Another close friend of Stewart's is Ed Hart, alias "Waterworks" Hart, president of the Council Bluffs Water Company and interested in the street railway company.

Hart is not now and never was president of the water company. Mr. Sheldon, president of the Phœnix Insurance Company, of Brooklyn, is president of the water company and has been for many years.

I have a telegram from Mr. Hart, as follows:

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, January 5, 1909.

I am not and never have been interested in any street railway company, here or elsewhere.

EDWARD W. HART.

These statements in the memorandum would be trifling if true, but they are substantially all false. If that is the best a secret-service agent can do, and they are superior to the special agents of the Land Office, no wonder the Government has trouble in obtaining convictions. In view of this, the only sample of the work of the Secret Service, as distinguished from a description of it which is laid before the House, the bill to increase the salary of its chief to $6,000 certainly ought at once to be put upon its passage.

I am done with this whole matter, except to say that never again, if I can prevent it, shall the old system of law defiance and law evasion, the system of broken oaths of office, of illegal expenditure of money appropriated, of padded accounts, of false certificates, of the constant commission of felonies by public officers, of simple lying, and of tergiversation be restored to the public service. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York.

[Loud and long continued applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the resolution before the House for action meets my hearty approval. Had it been possible for me to have had my way, the special committee to which was referred that portion of the President's message in which he discussed the provision relative to the Secret Service would not only have been charged with the duty of reporting the action to be taken upon that portion of the message, but it would have also been charged with the duty of making an independent and calm investigation of the particular provision of the sundry civil act to which the President refers and of its effect, so that Congress could at this time reject as inadvisable the recommendation of the President that that provision be repealed. I would have the House calmly and deliberately ratify at this time its previous action and reaffirm that its previous action was proper. Since that could not be done, or was not feasible under the circumstances, I shall in the discussion at this time content myself with setting forth the reasons which would have induced me to vote for such a resolution, had it been possible to have had it before the House, and to set forth for the information of the House the facts which induced me to support the provision when considered by the House.

Mr. Speaker, before doing that, perhaps it may be proper to say that had the language used by the President in his annual message to Congress been used by any other person than the President, that the Congress could have properly ignored the reflection upon its integrity contained therein. But this language is not to be considered as the language of any individual, or of an insignificant official; it is the language contained in an official communication from the Chief Executive of this great Nation. A decent respect for ourselves, as well as for those whom we represent, as well as a proper appreciation of the duty that devolves upon us to uphold the good name and fame of the body of which we are Members before our own people and before civilized men in all lands, make it imperative that we should take proper notice of this language, and treat it in a manner becoming the body representative of the people.

Mr. Speaker, I am in a somewhat unfortunate position in this matter. I have been specifically named by the President in his special message. I have not been directly charged with any dereliction of duty. No language has been attributed to me which justifies any assertion made by the President in his message, but I have been so confounded in the minds of Members and of the public with some Members whom the President has singled out for consignment to a distinguished aggregation of undesirable citizens that it is difficult for anyone to read his message and not believe either that for some considerate purpose he refrained from saying what he might have said regarding me or that he deemed me unworthy of the same notice which is given to others.

Mr. Speaker, in his annual message, transmitted to the Congress on December 7 last, the President used the following language:

> Last year an amendment was incorporated in the measure providing for the Secret Service, which provided that there should be no detail from the Secret Service and no transfer therefrom. It is not too much to say that this amendment has been of benefit only, and could be of benefit only, to the criminal classes. If deliberately introduced for the purpose of diminishing the effectiveness of war against crime, it could not have been better devised to this end. It forbade the practices that had been followed to a greater or less extent by the executive heads of various departments for twenty years. To these practices we owe the securing of the evidence which enabled us to drive great lotteries out of business and secure a quarter of a million of dollars in fines from their promoters. These practices have enabled us to discover some of the most outrageous frauds in connection with the theft of government land and government timber by great corporations and by individuals. These practices have enabled us to get some of the evidence indispensable in order to secure the conviction of the wealthiest and most formidable criminals with whom the Government has to deal, both those operating in violation of the antitrust law and others. The amendment in question was of benefit to no one excepting to these criminals, and it seriously hampers the Government in the detection of crime and the securing of justice. Moreover, it not only affects departments outside of the Treasury, but it tends to hamper the Secretary of the Treasury himself in the effort to utilize the employees of his department so as to best meet the requirements of the public service. It forbids him from preventing frauds upon the customs service, from investigating irregularities in branch mints and assay offices, and has seriously crippled him. It prevents the promotion of employees in the Secret Service, and this further discourages good effort. In its present form the restriction operates only to the advantage of the criminal, of the wrongdoer.
>
> The chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret-service men. Very little of such investigation has been done in the past; but it is true that the work of the secret-service agents was partly responsible for the indictment and conviction of a Senator and a Congressman for land frauds in Oregon. I do not believe that it is in the public interest to protect criminals in any branch of the public service, and exactly as we have again and again during the past seven years prosecuted and convicted such criminals who were in the executive branch of the Government, so in my belief we should be given ample means to prosecute them if found in the legislative branch. But if this is not considered desirable a special exception could be made in the law prohibiting the use of the secret-service force in investigating Members of the Congress. It would be far better to do this than to do what actually was done, and strive to prevent or at least to hamper effective action against criminals by the executive branch of the Government.

The House, by resolution adopted December 17, 1908, declared that—

> The plain meaning of the above words is that the majority of the Congressmen were in fear of being investigated by the secret-service men, and that the Congress as a whole was actuated by that motive in enacting the provision in question.

The House further declared that its—

> Committee appointed to consider these statements of the President and to report to the House can not find in the hearings before the committee, nor in the records of the House or Senate, any justification of this impeachment of the honor and integrity of the Congress.

And thereupon requested the President, among other things, to transmit to the House any evidence upon which he based his statement that the—

> Chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret-service men.

The President, in a message to the House in response to this request, states that—

> A careful reading of this message—

Referring to the language heretofore quoted—> will show that I said nothing to warrant the statement that "the majority of the Congressmen were in fear of being investigated by the secret-service men," or that Congress as a whole was actuated by that motive. I did not make any such statement in this message.

He further states that the allegation in the resolution—that the plain meaning of the words is that the majority of the Congressmen were in fear of being investigated by the secret-service men and that Congress as a whole was actuated by that motive—> must certainly be due to an entire failure to understand my message.

Apparently there is an irreconcilable difference between the House and the President as to the meaning of the language used by him.

The President, however, while disclaiming any intention to impeach the integrity of the Congress, insists that the debate sustains his statement that—

> The chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret-service men.

This statement—

He says in his reply to the House resolution—> is sustained by the facts.

>
> If you will turn—

Continues the President—

> to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for May 1 last, pages 5553 to 5560, inclusive, you will find the debate on this subject. Mr. TAWNEY, of Minnesota, Mr. SMITH, of Iowa, Mr. SHERLEY, of Kentucky, and Mr. FITZGERALD, of New York, appear in this debate as the special champions of the provision referred to.

The President asserts that two lines of argument were followed in the debate in support of the provision which he condemns. To use his own language:

> One concerned the question whether the law warranted the employment of the Secret Service in departments other than the Treasury, and this did not touch the merits of the service in the least. The other line of argument went to the merits of the service, whether lawfully or unlawfully employed, and here the chief, if not only, argument used was that the service should be cut down and restricted because its members had "shadowed" or investigated members of Congress and other officers of the Government.

Then, after further comment, he says:

> Mr. TAWNEY, for instance, says: "It was for the purpose of stopping the use of the service in every possible way by the departments of the Government that this provision was inserted;" and Mr. SMITH says, "Now, that was the only way in which any limitation could be put upon the activities of the Secret Service." Mr. FITZGERALD followed in the same vein, and by far the largest part of the argument against the employment of the Secret Service was confined to the statement that it was in violation of law.

Mr. Speaker, no language used by me has been quoted by the President as justification for the assertion that "the chief argument used in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated; yet it is impossible to read the President's message and not reach the conclusion that something said by me justified the statement.

My entire contribution to the debate on the question, as found in the RECORD mentioned by the President, is as follows:

> Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be adopted. Those who have given any attention to this matter know that there have been gross abuses growing out of the use of the men in the Secret Service by the various departments of the Government. It should be stopped. These men——
>
> Mr. DRISCOLL. Suppose another department wants a man, a competent man, to do some detective work, secret-service work, and the men in this bureau, that are getting about $125,000 a year, are not all busy, what great harm can be done if one of these men should be detailed to do that work instead of keeping up a permanent force in the other department?
>
> Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will permit me to proceed for five minutes I may answer his question. That is what I am going to discuss.
>
> The Secret Service Division has an eligible list of 304, and whenever they require the services of more men than they have they take a man from this list. Numerous instances have come to the observation of many Members of the House where this secret-service force has been employed upon service upon which they should not have been employed.
>
> Congress appropriates a certain amount of money to employ a certain number of men in this Secret Service for a certain specific purpose. They should be restricted to that work. They should not be given a roving commission, so that they may be assigned to any kind of work, to investigate the action of all kinds of persons, whether in the government service or not.
>
> There has been an effort once or twice to create a general police system under the Federal Government. It has not been successful. But if the practice be continued which has been in force for some years, not many, but recently, of having carried apparently upon the rolls of the Secret Service 20 more men than are necessary or are required for that work, and appropriations continue, then we will have in time a federal secret police. What does the ordinary district attorney do when he requires work of this character done? It is not necessary for him to apply to the Secret Service. He can easily secure competent men within his jurisdiction to do any work of this character that is required. And so with every department of the Government: whenever it requires a man of particular qualifications in any locality, it can easily find a man to do the work required.
>
> Mr BENNET of New York. Does not my colleague recall, as stated by the gentleman from Iowa, that the Government is prevented, and properly prevented, from going to the same place that a lawyer would go; that is, to a generally recognized detective agency in order to get the character of work done?
>
> Mr. FITZGERALD. Where some lawyers go.
>
> Mr. BENNET of New York. Most lawyers.
>
> Mr. FITZGERALD. Not most lawyers; some lawyers. Everybody knows what that law is. After the railroad strike in Chicago a law was passed prohibiting the employment of the Pinkerton and similar detective agencies. But it is easy enough to get competent men for such work who are not employed by those agencies. The Secret Service Division has an eligible list of 304 men, men applying from all parts of the country. It would be very easy for a department, if it required an odd man, to pick him out from this list rather than have him carried in this list of secret-service men.

Mr. Speaker, I dismiss as unworthy the suggestion that the President deliberately shifted his ground in his special message to the House. While he may have been unfortunate in the language in which he couched his recommendations, I am unable to believe that he was actuated by other than a proper and a patriotic motive.

It would be so unbecoming the Chief Executive to attempt in his official communications to the Congress to seek any purely personal advantage in a difference as to the advisability of any legislation that I am convinced, and I shall proceed upon the theory, that the President, believing that a mistake had been made, desired to have it rectified in a proper and a legitimate manner.

In response to the resolution of the House he has reiterated that the action of Congress has been in the interest of the criminals. He charges that the provision regarding the Secret Service Division in the Treasury Department "was emphatically an action against the interest of justice and against the interest of the law-abiding people and, in its effect, of benefit only to lawbreakers, and that it "operates only to the advantage of the criminals." He calls upon the Congress to remedy what he terms the "wrong."

Whether Congress did cripple the Government in its capacity to prevent wrongdoing and to detect and punish wrongdoers is a question which, at this time, far overshadows, in my opinion, other matters in issue. This charge should not be ignored. In my judgment it can not be sustained. The action of the Congress was in harmony with my views, and I am perfectly willing to assume whatever responsibility belongs to me for the action of the Congress. I believed when the provision, which is now condemned by the President, was enacted that it was wise and proper. The fear that it would cripple the Government in its efforts to detect and punish criminals I was then convinced was groundless; the assertion that it is a benefit to the criminal classes I would consider preposterous were it made by anyone other than the President. Nothing has occurred which has caused me even to suspect that the beliefs held by me last May regarding the provision were erroneous.

I venture to express my opinions thus freely, since the President has singled me out as one of the four Members of the House who led the House to perpetrate what he characterizes as a "wrong." I am not insensible of the notice which the President takes of the unbounded confidence which many Members of the House must have had in my integrity and judgment. Although the President had, as he asserts, for a long time endeavored, by personal appeal and by letters, to have the House refuse to enact the provision now so obnoxious to him, yet the Members accepted the judgment of myself and of the three other members of the Committee on Appropriations as to the propriety of a legislative provision in preference to the conclusions of the President. Indeed what higher compliment could be paid me than to have the admission made that the House, "without having had the opportunity to know very much of the rights or wrongs of the question," as the President says, unhesitatingly accepted the judgment of myself and of my three colleagues, although only one of us, in the President's opinion, had made any real argument in justification of our position? [Applause.]

The sundry civil appropriation bill was reported to the House April 25, 1908. It contained this provision:

No person employed in the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department or under the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes, who is detailed, furloughed, granted leave of absence, dismissed, or otherwise temporarily or finally separated from the service of such division and is thereafter employed under any other branch of the public service shall be restored or paid compensation for service or expenses in the Secret Service Division for two years after the termination of his employment under such other branch of the Government.

This language was ruled out on a point of order. In its place an amendment was adopted by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and by the House itself, without any division being had.

The amendment adopted is as follows:

No part of any moneys appropriated by this act shall be used in payment of compensation or expenses of any person detailed or transferred from the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department, or who may at any time during the fiscal year 1909 have been employed in or under said Secret Service Division.

This is the provision which the President so vigorously characterizes as of benefit only to the criminal classes.

The purpose and practical effect of this provision is to prevent the transfer of men employed in the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department to other branches of the public service.

The President asserts that this provision practically prevents the detection and punishment of violators of the federal laws, and he vigorously urges the Congress to repeal the provision. He makes that the issue upon which he invokes the favorable judgment of the country.

Does this provision cripple the Government? Should it be repealed? I emphatically assert that it should not be repealed; that it has had none of the grievous effects described by the President.

To demonstrate the soundness of my opinion, Mr. Speaker, and to make clear the wisdom of the action of the Congress in enacting the provision, it is necessary to consider the means at the disposal of the Government to detect criminals, and the relation which this Secret Service Division of the Treasury bears to the secret agencies of the Government.

In the legislative act for the current fiscal year is the following provision:

Secret Service Division: For 1 chief, $4,000; assistant chief, who shall discharge the duties of chief clerk, $3,000; 1 clerk of class 4, 1 clerk of class 3, 2 clerks of class 2, 1 clerk of class 1; 1 clerk, $1,000; and 1 attendant, $720; in all, $16,120.

This provides for the office force of the secret-service force in the Treasury Department. In the sundry civil act is the following provision:

Suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes: For expenses incurred under the authority or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury in detecting, arresting, and delivering into the custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction, dealers and pretended dealers in counterfeit money, and persons engaged in counterfeiting Treasury notes, bonds, national-bank notes, and other securities of the United States and of foreign governments, as well as the coins of the United States and of foreign governments, and other felonies committed against the laws of the United States relating to the pay and bounty laws, including not to exceed $1,000 to make the necessary investigation of claims for reimbursement of expenses incident to the last sickness and burial of deceased pensioners under section 4718 of the Revised Statutes, the act of March 2, 1895, and for no other purpose whatever, except in the protection of the person of the President of the United States, $115,000: Provided, That no part of this amount be used in defraying the expenses of any person subpœnaed by the United States courts to attend any trial before a United States court or preliminary examination before any United States commissioner, which expenses shall be paid from the appropriation for "Fees of witnesses, United States courts."

This division and force is authorized and appropriations are and have been made to enable it to suppress counterfeiting, protect the person of the President, to apprehend violators of the bounty laws, and to investigate certain claims for reimbursement of expenses incident to the last sickness and burial of deceased pensioners, "and for no other purpose."

No extraordinary intelligence is required to understand that the force authorized to be maintained under these appropriations is restricted to the specific duties set forth. The business of suppressing counterfeiting, of protecting the person of the President, and the other services enumerated is specialized. The intent and the efforts of Congress have been to maintain a special force to do a special work.

The impression is widespread that all of the secret agents of the Government, or all of its detective force, is confined to the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department. Anyone unfamiliar with the facts would be inclined to this belief from the statements of the President in his annual message and in his reply to the House resolution.

Such is not the fact. The Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department is relatively an insignificant feature of the secret-service forces of the Government.

To demonstrate the accuracy of this statement it is necessary to enumerate the various appropriations made by Congress for such service.

In the Post-Office Department there is a force of post-office inspectors. For the current year Congress appropriated for 355 inspectors, whose compensation is $572,750; for per diem allowance of these inspectors while traveling on official business away from home, $325,000; for clerks and laborers at the division headquarters, from which the inspectors operate, $96,620; for traveling expenses of inspectors not covered by per diem allowances, $35,000; for hire of livery, $50,000; for miscellaneous expenses, $6,000; for rewards for the detection, arrest, and conviction of post-office burglars, robbers, and highway mail robbers, $20,000. Altogether for the secret-service or crime-detection division of the Post-Office Department, $1,105,370. No serious question has ever been raised as to the efficiency of this service. It is confined to the work it is specifically authorized to do; it has never been diverted to services not contemplated in the creation of the force.

In the Indian appropriation act $40,000 is placed at the disposal of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to suppress the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians—police work and largely of the detective order. Three thousand dollars is also given to the commissioner to cover the traveling expenses of clerks detailed to make special investigation in the field. Eight Indian inspectors are carried, at a cost of $21,000 for salaries and $12,800 for traveling and other expenses. Not exactly of the same character, but yet a force to prevent and detect crime, is the Indian police force, which costs $200,000 a year.

Forty revenue agents are provided by law, in connection with the internal-revenue laws; their compensation and allowances aggregate about $125,000, and is included in the sum of $2,400,000 which is used to pay the fees and expenses of gaugers, storekeepers, and storekeeper-gaugers. This force is used to prevent illicit distilling, and the work requires the highest class of detective skill. Two hundred thousand dollars is appropriated to enforce the so-called "denatured-alcohol act," which includes the compensation of chemists, internal-revenue agents, inspectors, and other assistants.

For salaries of special agents and for actual expenses of examiners detailed to examine the books, accounts, and money on hand at subtreasuries and depositories, including examinations of cash accounts at mints, $3,000 is appropriated.

Under the Secretary of the Interior there are provided "two special inspectors, whose employment shall be limited to the inspection of offices and the work in the several offices under the control of the Department of the Interior, at a salary of $2,500 each, with $4,000 to cover expenses connected with their work."

Seven thousand dollars is allowed for per diem in lieu of subsistence of clerks "detailed to investigate fraudulent land entries, trespasses on the public lands, and cases of official misconduct."

For the per diem allowance of pension examiners or other persons making special investigations in connection with the Pension Bureau, $250,000 is appropriated.

A force of 100 pension examiners was allowed for this year, at a cost of $130,000.

In addition to the $1,105,370 carried in the post-office act for the post-office inspectors' division, the office force in Washington costs $90,620. In the office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General six special agents are provided at a salary of $2,000 each, and $7,000 is required for their traveling expenses. They are employed to ascertain violations of postal laws regarding classifications.

The Bureau of Corporations is given $175,000 for the compensation of special attorneys, special examiners, and special agents, employed to carry on the work of the Bureau of Corporations.

For assistants to the Attorney-General and of assistants to United States district attorneys in naturalization cases, and other expenses in connection with them, $150,000 is appropriated.

Moreover, a permanent appropriation of $2,500,000 in each year is available to the Department of Commerce and Labor. It is out of this fund that the special agents are paid, both here and abroad, to obtain information relating to the violation of alien-labor laws and the immigration laws. A large number of inspectors and agents are so employed.

In the report of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor it is pointed out that 2,172 contract laborers have been removed from the country during the past year. In addition "every effort has been made to mete out appropriate punishment to the individuals and corporations found violating the law." He points out that about 30 cases arose during the year, and he mentions certain cases specifically.

In the sundry civil act the following appropriations are carried: For the authorized expenditures of the Interstate Commerce Commission, $700,000; to enforce compliance with section 20 of the Hepburn Act (act to regulate commerce), including the employment of necessary special agents or examiners, $350,000; to carry out the objects of the "act concerning carriers engaged in interstate commerce and their employees," $10,000; to enable the commission to keep informed regarding compliance with the "act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads, including the employment of inspectors, $100,000.

For detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws, or conniving at the same, $125,000.

For the detection and prevention of frauds upon the customs, $200,000; for the enforcement of the Chinese-exclusion act, $500,000; to prevent depredations on public timber, protecting public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry, an appropriation, including some other purposes, of $500,000; for expenses of hearings held by order of the General Land Office to determine whether alleged fraudulent entries are of that character, $35,000.

For defraying the necessary expenses incurred in the examination of witnesses and procuring evidence in the matter of claims against the United States and in defending suits in the Court of Claims, $25,000.

For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States preliminary to indictment, the investigation of official acts, records, and accounts of marshals, attorneys, clerks of the United States courts, and United States commissioners, and for some incidental purposes, $30,000. The balance remaining unexpended of the appropriation of $250,000 for the enforcement of the antitrust laws is reappropriated, together with an additional $250,000. Fifty thousand dollars are appropriated for the necessary expenses incident to any suits brought at the request of the Secretary of the Interior in certain cases in Oklahoma.

For the salaries and fees and expenses of United States marshals and their deputies, $1,350,000.

For the payment of such miscellaneous expenses as may be authorized by the Attorney-General for the United States courts and their officers, including the furnishing and collecting of evidence where the United States is or may be a party in interest, and moving records, $560,000.

For the enforcement of the so-called "meat-inspection" law there is a permanent annual appropriation of $3,000,000.

The Steamboat-Inspection Service has an indefinite permanent appropriation of about $570,000 a year.

The Forestry Service has an appropriation to cover various services aggregating over $3,000,000, part of which is available for police or detective service.

For the enforcement of the pure-food act and other work the Bureau of Chemistry in the Department of Agriculture has an appropriation of $826,720.

In the army act a contingent fund of $15,000 and another of $10,000 are available for the employment of detectives or secret agents.

The Inspector-General's Department of the Army costs $66,500, while in the item for incidental expenses provision is made for the employment of spies.

The Secretary of State is given $90,000, which is a secret fund, the expenditures from which are made by him. He is never required to disclose the purposes for which the expenditures are made, and it is available for the securing of desired information of an important character by means of secret agents.

The Navy Department also has a contingent fund of $65,000 available and used for the payment of secret agents or detective services.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that I have enumerated all the appropriations out of which payments are made by the Federal Government for the detection of crime.

This review will tend to disclose the varied and extensive fields occupied by the government secret agents.

Not every dollar of the appropriations named is available or is used for detectives; but large sums are so employed, and the various special agents are practically engaged in the work of preventing and detecting crime.

It is apparent, moreover, that it has never been the policy to establish a central police or spy system in the Federal Government. Every department has been and now is given ample funds and authority to procure evidence and to detect criminals. If the criminals are not unearthed, it is not due to the provision about which the President complains, but it is due entirely to the inefficiency of his adminstration. [Applause.]

The policy has long been followed of separating the work of the secret agents of the Government. Not only is that policy wise and proper, but it even evokes the commendation of the President in the message sent to the House in reply to its resolution. "Congress," he says, "passed a very wise law providing a special service and appropriation for the prevention of naturalization frauds." It is a special service apart and separate from the secret service of the Treasury, and the President commends the new service.

Having reviewed the amounts available for the detection of crime in the various departments, I wish to revert again to the Secret Service Division in the Treasury Department. The appropriations given for some years of about $125,000 enables the employment of 47 field agents or detectives. Considering the extent of the United States, is it not apparent that this force, if it properly discharges its duty of protecting the President and of suppressing counterfeiting, has sufficient to keep it fully occupied? According to the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report recently issued, there were 17 new counterfeit issues discovered and described in official circulars during the year; there were 345 prosecutions under the various acts relating to counterfeiting, as compared with 216 the previous year; and there was an increase of not quite 150 per cent in the amount of notes and coin captured and confiscated, the total coin, $19,135, being almost double the amount confiscated in 1907. In addition, an unusually large quantity of plates, dies, molds, and contraband material was captured.

Evidently the 47 agents of this force are fully occupied in suppressing counterfeiting throughout the United States, as well as protecting the person of the President.

In the investigations by the Committee on Appropriations it was ascertained, however, that about 20 more men were carried on the rolls than could be paid out of the appropriations for the purpose of being hired or loaned to other departments. The committee believed the practice bad, and that it should be stopped. It recommended a provision that would have effectively prevented what it deemed an abuse.

The President says that for a long time he contented himself with endeavoring to persuade the House not to permit this "wrong." He only spoke informally to those members who he believed knew anything of the matter, and communicated only in the ordinary channels, as through the Secretary of the Treasury.

The inference from the President's language is unavoidable that he was clamoring or at least actively at work to prevent what he believed would be a great "wrong." To which particular Members of the House he spoke, believing them to know anything of the matter, I am unable to say. He did not speak to me, nor did he, as I am informed, speak to any other member of the subcommittee which prepared the sundry civil appropriation bill. He says he contented himself with "communicating officially only in the ordinary channels, as through the Secretary of the Treasury." Mr. Speaker, the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury mentioned by the President and printed with his message is dated April 29, 1908; the letter to the Speaker April 30, 1908. The sundry civil appropriation bill, in which the provision mentioned is contained, was reported to the House on April 25, 1908, four days before either letter upon which the President relies was written. [Applause.]

Had anyone other than the President himself suggested that his ordinary channel of communicating with Congress was through the Secretary of the Treasury or through the head of any other department he would deservedly have been scoffed by all intelligent men. The ordinary method this President has used to communicate with Congress has been by message. During the last session he sent, exclusive of vetoes, 54 messages to Congress. From recollection and hasty examination of them, I believe it is safe to assert that he discussed in them practically every conceivable public question, with the single exception of the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department. [Laughter and applause.]

But if the President felt so keenly about this provision as he states that he did, is it not unfortunate that his official advisers were not in harmony with him? Perhaps had the President known what members of his Cabinet had been saying to the Committee on Appropriations, and had he considered their statements, he might not have been so aroused about the action of Congress.

The Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Garfield, for instance, a close confidant and friend of the President, unceremoniously turned all the secret-service men out of his department. How dare he do it if the President has accurately pictured the imperative necessity of having them run down land thieves? The Secretary was before the committee explaining his reasons for asking an appropriation of $500,000, which was given to him on the committee's recommendation instead of $250,000, which had been the largest sum appropriated for the investigation of land frauds. On March 25, 1908 (p. 326, Hearings before Committee on Appropriations on sundry civil bill), the following occurred:

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Secretary, do you employ secret-service men in this work?

Mr. GARFIELD. None at all; and that is one of the points that I want to bring out in connection with the general question of the force of agents. None of them is employed as a detective. They are simply men who go out here for the purpose of investigating any entries, charges made of any kind, and their duty is as much to keep the honest entryman as to catch the dishonest one.

The Secretary made another statement. It is not in the hearings, because it was then deemed inadvisable to make it public. Believing now, however, that the public interest requires that it shall be published, I shall repeat the substance of his statement. In effect he said that in Colorado 37 indictments had been returned on the testimony of secret-service men in land cases, but that their testimony had turned out to be so absolutely worthless that the Government had not moved a single one of these indictments for trial.

On January 17, 1908, the Attorney-General, Mr. Bonaparte, appeared before the committee. (P. 202, Hearings on Urgent Deficiency Bill, Committee on Appropriations.) Voluntarily he called attention to the fact that he had been required to rely on the secret-service men of the Treasury Department. He complained that the price had been raised for the work. He insisted that it would be better to give him a force of his own. He preferred such a force to the Secret Service Division men, and he stated that as required he did employ men from outside sources.

On April 2, 1908, the Attorney-General was again before the committee. (P. 774, Hearings on Sundry Civil Bill.) He again expressed the opinion that "there is no question that it would tend to a more satisfactory administration if the Department of Justice had a small force under its own direct control." He also stated that "the administrative objection to it (the practice of using men of the Secret Service Division) is this, that it compels our department to rely for certain duties, and also duties of a somewhat delicate and confidential character, upon employees that we have not direct control over, and we can not discipline them as we could if they were directly attached to the department, and there are certain rather serious objections in that sense."

Since the passage of the provision to which the President objects the Attorney-General, without additional legislation, has acquired the special force which he believed preferable to the use of the secret-service men of the Treasury in the manner heretofore in vogue.

On page 7 of his annual report, recently issued, he says:

In my last annual report I called attention to the fact that this department was obliged to call upon the Treasury Department for detective service, and had, in fact, no permanent executive force directly under its orders. Through the prohibition of its further use of the secret-service force contained in the sundry civil appropriation act, approved May 27, 1908, it became necessary for the department to organize a small force of special agents of its own. Although such action was involuntary on the part of this department, the consequences of the innovation have been, on the whole, moderately satisfactory. The special agents, placed as they are under direct orders of the chief examiner, who receives from them daily reports and summarizes these for submission each day to the Attorney-General, are directly controlled by this department, and the Attorney-General knows, or ought to know, at all times what they are doing and at what cost. Under these circumstances he may be justly held responsible for the efficiency and economy of the service rendered. The experience of the past six months has shown clearly that such a force is, under modern conditions, absolutely indispensable to the proper discharge of the duties of this department, and it is hoped that its merits will be augmented and its attendant expense reduced by further experience.

On March 24, 1908, Mr. Moran, Assistant Chief of the Secret Service Division in the Treasury Department, was before the Committee on Appropriations. (Hearings on Sundry Civil Appropriation Bill, p. 185.) He was examined at great length regarding the practice prevailing of supplying men to other departments. His statements disclosed a situation which the committee believed undesirable and which it desired to correct by the provision to which the President makes such vigorous objection. Toward the close of his testimony he made this statement (p. 192): "We do not go after this work, and we would not care to-morrow if it was all stopped. We do not want it."

Mr. Speaker, from this brief review of the information before the committee, I repeat that, in my opinion, the action of the Congress was wise, proper, and creditable. It was in the interest of good administration. The criminal classes have received no benefit. No wrong has been done; there is none to remedy. Whatever may have been the views of the President, whatever information he may have had as to the undesirability of such a provision, it was never brought to the attention of the committee during the preparation of the bill.

Careful consideration of recent happenings and much reflection induces a belief that some one has misinformed the President. Let me illustrate. The President in his reply to the House resolution says:

The Government is further crippled by the law forbidding it to employ detective agencies.

Of course the Government can detect the most dangerous crimes and punish the worst criminals only by the use either of the Secret Service or of private detectives; to hamper it in using the one and forbid it to resort to the other can inure to the benefit of none save the criminals.

As to the law which prevents the employment of the Pinkerton and similar agencies, Mr. Bonaparte said (p. 774, Hearings on Sundry Civil Bill, Apr. 2, 1908):

I think that is a good law.

He is prohibited and has stopped using secret-service men, and does not complain. Indeed, he has been urging Congress to arrange so that he would not be required to use them. He believes it wise not to permit him to use the agencies prohibited. Still he does not assert that criminals have been benefited.

Moreover, on January 2, 1909, a report from the Secretary of War was sent to the Senate (S. Doc. No. 626, 60th Cong., 2d sess.), which discloses that the War Department, before the prohibition against the use of secret-service men was enacted, was able to make a contract for the employment of outside agencies to make certain investigations relative to the so-called "Brownsville matter." Fifteen thousand dollars has been paid out up to date under that contract. It was paid, too, out of an appropriation not heretofore mentioned, namely, the provision in the deficiency appropriation act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat. L., 1233), which provided that—

For emergency fund to meet unforeseen contingencies constantly arising, to be expended at the discretion of the President, $3,000,000.

In this instance the Government not only did not use the Secret Service Division but it has not been hampered, either from lack of funds or agencies, to make secret investigations.

Mr. Speaker, the President in his annual message properly designated the Congress as the responsible party for this provision. In his reply to the House resolution he relieves the Senate of all responsibility; he excuses the larger part of the House, on the ground that they blindly followed the lead of a committee, and he narrows responsibility to the Committee on Appropriations.

The Senate is relieved from all condemnation because it disagreed to the provision inserted by the House after the Secretary of the Treasury had sent a comprehensive statement of the work of the Secret Service Division, including his arguments against the provision and his conclusions as to its effects.

The bill passed the Senate and went to conference. The Senate was represented in the conference by Senators ALLISON, HALE, and TELLER; the House, by Mr. TAWNEY, Mr. SMITH, and myself.

The item obnoxious to the President was the subject of conference. The Senate yielded and acquiesced in the House provision. Whatever justification there may be for the statement that the House acted blindly and without knowledge of the merits, the same argument can not be advanced on behalf of the Senators who were in conference. They had, as the President says, "a strongly worded protest from Secretary Cortelyou." They had all the information in the possession of the Secretary of the Treasury. They had his arguments in writing, they had this statement of his conclusion:

I can not impress upon you too emphatically my conviction that any modification of the statutory rights accorded to the Secretary of the Treasury by section 166 or any restriction upon the use of these men by other departments will be wholly and solely of advantage to the enemy of public welfare and government interests.

But two conclusions are possible from the action of the Senate conferees in receding from their disagreement to the House provision; either they were convinced that the alarm of the Secretary was groundless and his conclusions erroneous, or else, believing that the provision would be of advantage wholly and solely to the enemy of public welfare, they accepted it on behalf of the Senate.

Whatever may be believed elsewhere or by any other person, I wish to express as emphatically as I may my conviction that Senator Allison, since passed to another world, and Senators HALE and TELLER were convinced that the provision was wise, was proper, and in the interests of good government; that the conclusions of the Secretary of the Treasury as to the effect of the provision were erroneous, that his fears were not well founded; and I further assert my belief that if any of the Senators named had the slightest doubt that the fears of the Secretary would be realized and that the provision would have been of benefit to criminals, that they would never have consented to the enactment of the provision. [Applause.] What I have said of these Senators I repeat of my colleagues in conference from the House. In my opinion they were actuated by high and patriotic motives and by a desire to improve, not to impair, the public service. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the repeal of the provision. I shall oppose its repeal if it be attempted. I shall not quarrel with the President, nor shall I scold him because he disagrees with me about legislation. Neither shall I permit my judgment to be improperly swayed nor my action upon legislative matters to be controlled by him. His recommendations shall be given the respectful consideration to which they are entitled by reason of his high office. But I shall continue to exercise my own judgment, to voice my own views, to act in accordance with my convictions, indifferent as to whether others are pleased or annoyed.

I shall continue to act as a responsible Representative; I decline to become a mere empty echo. [Applause.]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in my own time to give notice that this question has been fully debated, and ere long I shall feel it proper to move the previous question, but before doing that several gentlemen have spoken to me who wish to be heard in opposition to the resolution, and having given the notice that at the close of their remarks I shall make that motion, I shall now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman makes that notice effective, I desire to say——

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, I understood my colleague did not wish to speak.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to say that I do not know whether I shall want to talk or not, but if the representatives of the White House on the floor say anything that seems to me worthy responding to, that I reserve the right to respond to it.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL].

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Do I understand that the time remaining for this debate is at the disposal of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS]?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York reserved the time out of his hour, thirty-three minutes, and resumed the floor in his own right. He is entitled to do so, and he is entitled to use the thirty-three minutes or to yield the same.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Or to call for the previous question.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. In the event that an hour has been exhausted by one side or the other, is it not customary, before allowing any Member to take up his unused time, to recognize some Member in opposition in his own right?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, chairman of the special committee, was entitled to be first heard. He was heard for twenty-seven minutes, and then reserved his time. The Chair is of opinion that the practice has been in such cases that he is entitled to resume the floor at any time that the floor is not occupied by somebody else, and as a matter of practice or custom some one opposed to the resolution would be entitled to recognition, as those favoring the resolution have used the most time.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Why can not my colleague from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL] be recognized in his own time if he desires?

The SPEAKER. He can be the moment that his colleague, the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS], yields the floor. The Chair is not aware what course the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee, proposes to follow.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Am I now recognized, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is this not also a personal privileged question; and if so, can a mere custom or a mere parliamentary rule cut off the right of a Member to rise at his seat, state that question, and then discuss it?

The SPEAKER. Oh, a question of privilege must be considered under the rules and practices of the House. It can not be put out of the way by any other question of privilege.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] could have arisen in his seat this morning and occupied his time and then called the previous question and cut off everybody else?

The SPEAKER. Absolutely, if the majority sustained him.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But that is not my inquiry. The Chair put it on the ground of custom and precedent, which, of course, is mere custom or rule, but I speak of the constitutional right. A privileged question is one thing and a personal privilege is another, but they are both constitutional questions, and here both the House, as such, and the Member's rights are involved.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman seems to forget that under the rules of this House and the practice of the House, no gentleman can make the House act until the majority of the House desires to act, and a majority of the House has the right to force action.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] yield the floor or take the floor?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes' time to my colleague [Mr. DRISCOLL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL] is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it will require only a few words to explain my views on this resolution and the vote which I shall cast. I am not excited, but in a very mild and amiable state of mind, and will try not to provoke the eloquence of my distinguished friend from Mississippi. I was present on the 1st day of last May, when the debate occurred out of which all this contention has arisen. I listened to all that was said for and against the amendment offered by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I did not hear any argument which convinced my mind that I ought to vote for that amendment, and I voted against it.

I heard the remark of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] about Congressmen being shadowed by detectives and it made no impression on me. I had not then heard of any rumor that Congressmen had been shadowed or spied upon by members of the Secret Service. I had not read the article by Mr. Busbey, which was published some years before that time, I had no suspicion whatever——

Mr. WILLIAMS. By the way, if the gentleman will permit an interruption——

Mr. DRISCOLL. Let me finish the sentence. I had no information or intimation from any source, and had no suspicion that the Secret Service was in any way being used to spy upon Congressmen.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes; just for a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. At the time the article referred to as having been written by Mr. Busbey was published, was or was not Mr. Busbey at that time the secretary of the Speaker?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I do not know and do not care. That is not material, so far as my argument is concerned.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that he was not, and that it was about five years before this controversy arose.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I object to yielding any further time. I want to say this: That if I had any suspicion at that time that members of this House and Senate were being spied upon by members of the Secret Service, I would have taken the remark of Mr. SHERLEY more seriously, and I presume I would have indignantly resented such action by the Secret Service as an insult and have voted for the amendment proposed by Mr. TAWNEY. But under the circumstances this remark passed in one ear and out the other, and I paid no attention to it. But who can say that it did not influence other Members on the floor of this House at that time? Who can say that it was not the main reason why they voted in favor of the amendment of Mr. TAWNEY?

If I had had any notion that it was seriously offered I would have voted for the amendment, so that spies could not be used upon members of Congress; not that I feared any spy in the world, or that I thought any man in this House was guilty of any offense, or in danger of any detective force. But I would have felt, as you do, that it would be an insult to this House to suggest the idea of permitting the Secret Service to spy upon its Members. I did not know at that time that the President had written a letter to the Speaker in opposition to this amendment which was being considered. I did not know that Secretary Cortelyou had written a long letter to Mr. TAWNEY, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in opposition to his amendment. I did not know any of those facts, which have since been disclosed. I simply opposed that amendment on its merits and according to my best judgment.

I presume that when the President read that debate afterwards, in order to learn what the argument was which persuaded a majority of the Committee of the Whole House to vote for the amendment, it occurred to him that perhaps the remark thrown in by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] had some influence upon the membership; to repeat, not because they were afraid of investigation or of being spied upon, but because they would naturally resent as an insult the use of the Secret Service for that purpose. I am willing to take the construction put on that sentence in the President's message by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], and I think it is only fair to the President that we should give it any fair construction to which it is susceptible rather than humiliate him by the adoption of this resolution. The other sentence criticised by gentlemen is this:

> But if this is not considered desirable a special exception could be made in the law prohibiting the use of the Secret Service in the investigation of members of Congress.

In view of our action on the Burleson bill, in which we expressly excepted Members of Congress from criminal prosecution in a law which included all other government officials, we should not go into convulsions over that sentence.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, if the gentleman will yield——

Mr. DRISCOLL. I have not the time. When the President sent in his first message and gentlemen took exception to it, if you had then adopted a resolution tabling that part of the message which referred to the Secret Service, it would have been a great deal more harmless and a great deal more sensible than what you are proposing to do now. But you put it up to the President to justify what he said. In your resolution here to-day you say that you asked him to give any information that would justify the language of the message or assist the House in its constitutional duty to purge itself of corruption.

What did the President do? In my judgment he was manly about it. He immediately said he did not intend to reflect on the Congress or any member of it. He expressly disclaimed any idea of reflection or any idea of an insult being carried in that message. He went further and complimented this House, and said many nice things about this branch of the Government. What did you want him to do? Did you want him to admit that he meant to insult the Congress when that was not his intention. I have gone through this world not looking for insults, and the man who does that and does not resent an insult unless he is sure it is intended for him gets along better than the fellow who is always looking for a quarrel. If one of you should make a remark to me that I might construe into an offense and call you to account, and you would assure me that you did not mean it as an offense, that you did not mean to insult me, that you did not mean to reflect on me in any possible way, I would treat you as a gentleman and take you at your word, and let the matter drop.

Now, the President of the United States says that he meant no reflection on this body. He says that no reflection on this body is contained in his message at all, according to his construction of it, and yet you are not satisfied with that.

What do we propose to do? The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] says we are trying to avoid a rebuke. But I say we are trying to rebuke the President. You have gone back beyond the memory of any Member of this Congress for a precedent. It is a very unusual and very extraordinary proceeding when you refuse to give the President the same consideration that any of you gentlemen would give to any other gentleman whom you thought had insulted you.

I am aware that the President's term is drawing to a close.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DRISCOLL. This morning I asked that the consideration of these resolutions be postponed for a few days, in the hope that we might get out of this matter with honor to ourselves and without trying to reflect on or belittle the President, but the majority of this body was clamorous to consider it to-day.

I am aware that the President's term of office is drawing to a close. In less than two months he will go out of his great office by his own volition, for he could have been President for the next four years if he had permitted it. I am aware that his power will be gone after the 4th of March, but I would be more reluctant to rebuke even under those circumstances than if he had four years more of power in the White House.

I do not think we are treating our great President fairly when we are trying to drive him into a corner, when we are trying to follow him up and force a quarrel on him, when he has explained that he meant no reflection on this body. Theodore Roosevelt is a great man and a great President, and New York is proud of him, and will be proud of him no matter what action this House may take here to-day. I am willing, as an humble Member of this House, to take him at his word, to accept his explanation, to give him credit for not having tried to insult or reflect on this body when he says so. And when I give him only the same consideration I would give any man, rich or poor, high or low, I am not belittling myself or lowering my self-respect or dignity.

And because these resolutions embody a reflection on him, a rebuke to him—and they are so intended—I can not vote for them. [Applause and cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. PERKINS. We will not have a vote yet. Mr. Speaker, there has been ample time given to those who are in favor of the resolutions. I do not intend that it shall be said that anyone who wishes to speak in opposition to these resolutions did not have full opportunity to be heard. [Applause.] We have time enough, between the time I have not used of my own and the two hours not used by my associates on the committee, to grant, it seems to me, all the time any gentleman may require, and it has been my purpose to yield all the time in the disposal of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and myself that might be required.

If the gentleman from Massachusetts insists upon being recognized in his own right and desires to grant from his own time to those who desire to speak, I have no objection. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I offer an amendment, which I send to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the first "whereas" and insert:
"A certain misunderstanding has arisen in regard to a clause in the last annual message of the President; and
"Whereas we believe that a misapprehension exists as to the action of certain Members of this House mentioned in the President's message of January 4, 1909:
"Resolved, That this House has the utmost confidence in every member of the Committee on Appropriations."

Mr. PERKINS. I raise the point of order on that amendment, that it is not germane to the resolution. The resolution submitted has reference to certain language in the message of the President; and also the amendment is not now in order, because general debate has not been closed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman's amendment, in effect, proposes to strike out the whole text and substitute a new text for pages 1, 2, and 3 on the printed report, down to the bottom of page 4. It is a substitute for the two "whereases," as the Chair gathers.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. With the "resolve." The Chair will observe there is a resolution at the end. It is a substitute for the three resolutions.

The SPEAKER. This is an amendment by way of substitute for the whole resolution and whereases. It is proposed to strike all out and insert therefor——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. That was the intention.

The SPEAKER. After the whereases, after these words—

Whereas the annual message of the President——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The Chair will observe writing on the bottom. The Chair will see I ask to strike out all after the word "whereas" and insert.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that this proposed amendment is germane.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do I understand the gentleman has offered a resolution to be acted upon now?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman offers an amendment in his time, and has the floor.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does he offer the resolution as an amendment now to be acted on, or for the information of the House?

The SPEAKER. To be acted on when we come to take the final proceeding to bring the House to a vote upon the original resolutions and the proposed substitute.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In order to bring the question to a test, following up my parliamentary inquiry, I will move to lay the resolution offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts on the table.

The SPEAKER. To lay the amendment on the table, the Chair suggests, would lay everything on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought the gentleman from Massachusetts had offered an amendment.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I raise the point of order that the gentleman from Mississippi is out of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought the gentleman from Massachusetts had offered an amendment, which I heard read, to the original resolution. I understand, Mr. Speaker, from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts proceeds to the entire matter under discussion, and I withdraw the motion I have just made.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move that further consideration of this whole matter be postponed until Monday next at 1 o'clock, and that the amendment be considered as pending. [Cries of "No!"]

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order that, under the rule, we can not postpone to a definite time next week.

The SPEAKER. The Chair reads from the Manual, in reply to the gentleman from New York, and desires the attention of the House to clause 4 of Rule XVI:

When a question is under debate no motion shall be received but to adjourn, to lay on the table, for the previous question (which motion shall be decided without debate), to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to amend, or postpone indefinitely; which several motions shall have precedence in the foregoing order.

In the absence of a motion of a superior privilege, which would be to adjourn, or lie on the table, or for the previous question—in the absence of any of these motions, it seems to the Chair that the gentleman's motion is in order.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I move the previous question on the motion I have just made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman has called for the previous question upon the motion to postpone. Is that correct?

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I move to lay that on the table.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move the previous question on the resolution and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. Pending which the gentleman from Minnesota moves the previous question upon the resolution and upon the pending amendment; and that, it seems to the Chair, would have precedence of the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I withdraw my motion, in that case.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I moved postponement until Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Several MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Massachusetts moved to postpone until Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Upon that he moved the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Does the Chair rule that, pending the ordering of the previous question, a motion to adopt the amendment and subsequently the resolution is in order?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, my motion was not to adopt the resolution or amendment, but the previous question on both the resolution and the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], having the floor, moves first an amendment. Second, he moves to postpone to a day certain, and upon that motion demands the previous question. Now, that motion that the gentleman makes is a motion inferior in point of privilege to the previous question upon the resolution and the amendment, and, in the opinion of the Chair, it can not be that the gentleman, having the floor, could cut out a motion of higher privilege by simply demanding the previous question upon a motion of lower privilege. Therefore it seems to the Chair that the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] takes precedence of the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that the gentleman from Minnesota can not cut me off from debate on my amendment by moving the previous question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman himself has moved to postpone consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not commence debate, nor attempt to take the floor for debate. On the contrary, upon being recognized, he proceeded to offer an amendment and to make a motion to postpone consideration. Therefore, so far as the Chair knows, the gentleman did not desire to take the floor for debate. The gentleman having made his motion, availing himself of the floor, must submit to the operation of the rule, for a motion that takes precedence of the gentleman's motion. Of course if the gentleman had commenced debate, he could not be taken off the floor.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, is the Chair willing that the gentleman from Massachusetts should instruct him on the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair, very briefly, will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have not the complete book at hand, but I have no doubt it is beside you. I am very confident that it has been decided many a time in this House that before a Member has begun debate he can not be taken off the floor by another Member moving the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman will find that the Member to whom that rule applies is the Member in charge of the bill. The gentleman must see at once that if he obtains the floor and does not proceed to debate, but, exercising his right when he has the floor, makes a motion that is inferior to another motion, that then it is the right of another Member of the House to interpose the superior motion.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The question will therefore now come on the previous question; and if the previous question is ordered, it will come on the amendment I offered?

The SPEAKER. Precisely. That would be first voted upon.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent that my amendment may be read again.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman's amendment by way of a substitute, or substitute by way of amendment, will be again reported.

The amendment of Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts was again read by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves the previous question on the original resolution and the amendment.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts) there were 23 ayes and 225 noes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken, and the yeas and nays were refused.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Contrary to my uniform custom, Mr. Speaker, as a Member of the House of Representatives, I make the point of order that that motion is dilatory. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, for he knows whether it is a dilatory motion or not.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Indiana sitting by me suggests that it is not a dilatory motion, because it is 7 o'clock and we are now hungry. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I submit that that is insufficient, for I have made that same motion at 9 o'clock and it was considered dilatory. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I must admit that the motion is dilatory.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Does not the Chair agree with me that it is beautiful to see the rules applied to a Republican Member?

The SPEAKER. So far as the Chair is concerned, the rules are like the grace of God. [Laughter.] The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BENNET of New York. And upon that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 212, nays 36, answered "present" 5, not voting 135, as follows:

YEAS—212.

Acheson	Caulfield	Foulkrod	Hubbard, Iowa
Adamson	Chaney	Fuller	Huff
Alexander, Mo.	Clark, Fla.	Fulton	Hughes, N. J.
Alexander, N. Y.	Clark, Mo.	Gaines, Tenn.	Hull, Iowa
Allen	Clayton	Gaines, W. Va.	Hull, Tenn.
Ames	Cole	Gardner, Mich.	Humphreys, Miss.
Andrus	Cook, Colo.	Gardner, N. J.	James, Ollie M.
Anthony	Cook, Pa.	Garner	Johnson, S. C.
Ashbrook	Cooper, Pa.	Garrett	Jones, Va.
Barchfeld	Cousins	Gill	Jones, Wash.
Barclay	Cox, Ind.	Gillespie	Kahn
Beale, Pa.	Craig	Glass	Keifer
Beall, Tex.	Cravens	Godwin	Kitchin, Claude
Bell, Ga.	Dalzell	Goebel	Kitchin, Wm. W.
Bingham	Darragh	Gordon	Knapp
Bonynge	De Armond	Graff	Knopf
Booher	Denby	Greene	Lafean
Boutell	Denver	Gregg	Lamb
Bowers	Diekema	Griggs	Law
Bradley	Dixon	Hackney	Lawrence
Brodhead	Draper	Haggott	Lenahan
Broussard	Durey	Hamilton, Iowa	Lever
Brownlow	Dwight	Hamilton, Mich.	Livingston
Brundidge	Edwards, Ga.	Hamlin	Lloyd
Burgess	Ellerbe	Hardwick	Lorimer
Burke	Ellis, Oreg.	Harrison	Loudenslager
Burleson	Estopinal	Haskins	McCall
Burnett	Fairchild	Hawley	McCreary
Burton, Del.	Fassett	Hay	McDermott
Butler	Favrot	Heflin	McGuire
Calder	Ferris	Helm	McHenry
Caldwell	Fitzgerald	Henry, Tex.	McKinley, Ill.
Candler	Flood	Hill, Miss.	McKinney
Capron	Floyd	Holliday	McLachlan, Cal.
Carlin	Fordney	Howard	McLain
Carter	Foss	Howell, N. J.	Macon
Cassel	Foster, Ind.	Howell, Utah	Madden
Mann	Payne	Slayden	Thistlewood
Marshall	Perkins	Small	Thomas, N. C.
Maynard	Peters	Smith, Cal.	Thomas, Ohio
Miller	Porter	Smith, Iowa	Tirrell
Mondell	Pujo	Smith, Mich.	Tou Velle
Mudd	Rainey	Smith, Mo.	Underwood
Murphy	Ransdell, La.	Smith, Tex.	Volstead
Needham	Rothermel	Stafford	Vreeland
Nicholls	Rucker	Stanley	Waldo
Nye	Russell, Mo.	Steenerson	Wallace
O'Connell	Sabath	Stephens, Tex.	Wanger
Olmsted	Scott	Sulloway	Weeks
Overstreet	Sheppard	Talbott	Wheeler
Padgett	Sherley	Tawney	Williams
Page	Sherwood	Taylor, Ala.	Woodyard
Parker	Sims	Taylor, Ohio	Young

NAYS—36.

Bennet, N. Y.	Foelker	Küstermann	Pollard
Campbell	French	Landis	Pray
Chapman	Gardner, Mass.	Langley	Prince
Cocks, N. Y.	Guernsey	Laning	Reeder
Cooper, Wis.	Hayes	McLaughlin, Mich.	Reynolds
Crumpacker	Henry, Conn.	Madison	Slemp
Davis	Howland	Nelson	Townsend
Douglas	Jenkins	Norris	Washburn
Driscoll	Kinkaid	Parsons	Wilson, Ill.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—5.

Barnhart	Moon, Tenn.	Pou	Rauch
Currier

NOT VOTING—135.

Adair	Fornes	Kennedy, Ohio	Randell, Tex.
Aiken	Foster, Ill.	Kimball	Reid
Ansberry	Foster, Vt.	Kipp	Rhinock
Bannon	Fowler	Knowland	Richardson
Bartholdt	Gilhams	Lamar, Fla.	Riordan
Bartlett, Ga.	Gillett	Lamar, Mo.	Roberts
Bartlett, Nev.	Goldfogle	Lassiter	Robinson
Bates	Goulden	Leake	Rodenberg
Bede	Graham	Lee	Russell, Tex.
Bennett, Ky.	Granger	Legare	Ryan
Birdsall	Gronna	Lewis	Saunders
Boyd	Hackett	Lilley	Shackleford
Brantley	Hale	Lindbergh	Sherman
Burleigh	Hall	Lindsay	Snapp
Burton, Ohio	Hamill	Longworth	Southwick
Byrd	Hammond	Loud	Sparkman
Calderhead	Harding	Lovering	Sperry
Cary	Hardy	Lowden	Spight
Cockran	Haugen	McGavin	Sterling
Conner	Hepburn	McKinlay, Cal.	Stevens, Minn.
Cooper, Tex.	Higgins	McMillan	Sturgiss
Coudrey	Hill, Conn.	McMorran	Sulzer
Crawford	Hinshaw	Malby	Swasey
Cushman	Hitchcock	Martin	Watkins
Davenport	Hobson	Moon, Pa.	Watson
Davidson	Houston	Moore, Pa.	Webb
Dawes	Hubbard, W. Va.	Moore, Tex.	Weems
Dawson	Hughes, W. Va.	Morse	Weisse
Edwards, Ky.	Humphrey, Wash.	Mouser	Wiley
Ellis, Mo.	Jackson	Murdock	Willett
Englebright	James, Addison D.	Olcott	Wilson, Pa.
Esch	Johnson, Ky.	Patterson	Wolf
Finley	Keliher	Pearre	Wood
Focht	Kennedy, Iowa	Pratt

So the resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

For the session:

Mr. CURRIER with Mr. FINLEY.

Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. RIORDAN.

Until future notice:

Mr. CONNER with Mr. LEGARE.

Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. BRANTLEY.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut with Mr. GRANGER.

For the day:

Mr. SOUTHWICK with Mr. GOULDEN.

Mr. OLCOTT with Mr. FORNES.

Mr. BATES with Mr. LINDSAY.

Mr. CALDERHEAD with Mr. HOBSON.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania with Mr. HAMMOND.

Mr. SPERRY with Mr. AIKEN.

Mr. FOCHT with Mr. ADAIR.

Mr. LOWDEN with Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania with Mr. BYRD.

Mr. GRAHAM with Mr. MOON of Tennessee.

Mr. MCGAVIN with Mr. RAUCH.

Mr. LINDBERGH with Mr. MOORE of Texas.

Mr. BARTHOLDT with Mr. BARTLETT of Nevada.

Mr. BANNON with Mr. ANSBERRY.

Mr. BEDE with Mr. COCKRAN.

Mr. BENNETT of Kentucky with Mr. COOPER of Texas.

Mr. BIRDSALL with Mr. CRAWFORD.

Mr. BOYD with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio with Mr. FOSTER of Illinois.

Mr. CARY with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.

Mr. COUDREY with Mr. HACKETT.

Mr. CUSHMAN with Mr. HAMILL.

Mr. DAVIDSON with Mr. HARDY.

Mr. DAWES with Mr. HITCHCOCK.

Mr. DAWSON with Mr. HOUSTON.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky.
Mr. ELLIS of Missouri with Mr. KELIHER.
Mr. ESCH with Mr. LEE.
Mr. FOSTER of Vermont with Mr. POU.
Mr. FOWLER with Mr. KIMBALL.
Mr. GILHAMS with Mr. LAMAR of Florida.
Mr. GILLETT with Mr. LAMAR of Missouri.
Mr. HALE with Mr. LASSITER.
Mr. HAUGEN with Mr. LEAKE.
Mr. HEPBURN with Mr. LEWIS.
Mr. HINSHAW with Mr. PATTERSON.
Mr. HUBBARD of West Virginia with Mr. PRATT.
Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia with Mr. RANDELL of Texas.
Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington with Mr. REID.
Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa with Mr. RHINOCK.
Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio with Mr. RICHARDSON.
Mr. LONGWORTH with Mr. ROBINSON.
Mr. LOUD with Mr. RUSSELL of Texas.
Mr. LOVERING with Mr. RYAN.
Mr. MCKINLAY of California with Mr. SAUNDERS.
Mr. MCMILLAN with Mr. SHACKLEFORD.
Mr. MCMORRAN with Mr. SPARKMAN.
Mr. MALBY with Mr. SULZER.
Mr. MOUSER with Mr. SPIGHT.
Mr. PEARRE with Mr. WATKINS.
Mr. ROBERTS with Mr. WEBB.
Mr. RODENBERG with Mr. WEISSE.
Mr. SNAPP with Mr. WILEY.
Mr. STERLING with Mr. WILLETT.
Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota with Mr. WOLF.
Mr. WATSON with Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. FINLEY, recorded as voting?

The SPEAKER. He is not.

Mr. CURRIER. Then I desire to withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The name of Mr. CURRIER was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, before we adjourn I desire to state to the House that I was called away on an important matter and intended to return before debate closed in order that I might state briefly to the House the reasons why I could not vote for this resolution in the shape it was reported by the committee. Debate had closed before I returned, and I now ask unanimous consent that I may insert in the RECORD those reasons.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, this morning I obtained unanimous consent that the consideration of pension bills in order to-day be made in order on Tuesday next. At that time it was my understanding that this debate just closed would occupy to-morrow. I now ask unanimous consent that their consideration be in order to-morrow instead of Tuesday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then Tuesday next is not to be devoted to the consideration of pension bills?

Mr. SULLOWAY. No.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 13649. An act providing for the hearing of cases upon appeal from the district court for the district of Alaska in the circuit court of appeals for the ninth district.

EXTENDING REMARKS IN THE RECORD.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object. I am compelled to do this because I am going to object to every request of a similar character on this particular question.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. PERKINS (at 7 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a list of leases granted under authority of the act of July 28, 1882 (H. Doc. No. 1298)—to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation for purchase of land for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing (H. Doc. No. 1299)—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a recommendation for the reimbursement of Ormsby County, Nev. (H. Doc. No. 1300)—to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 200) granting to the Fifth Regiment Maryland National Guard the use of the corridors of the court-house of the District of Columbia upon such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the marshal of the District, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1827), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MOORE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 22239) to regulate the conduct of the laundry business in the District of Columbia, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1828), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ROBERTS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6252) to promote the administration of justice in the navy, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1831), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PARKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6164) to revise and amend the United States statutes relating to the commitment of United States prisoners to reformatories of States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1829), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8277) placing M. H. Plunkett, assistant engineer, United States Navy, on the retired list with an advanced rank, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1830), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24396) granting a pension to John Alexander, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 25674) for the relief of certain employees of the United States during the civil war whose wages were withheld and used for other purposes—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BARTHOLDT: A bill (H. R. 25675) to establish and construct a national highway from the southern limits of the city of St. Louis to the national cemetery at Jefferson Barracks, Missouri—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FULLER: A bill (H. R. 25676) for the erection of a public building at Sycamore, Ill.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. FOULKROD: A bill (H. R. 25677) authorizing the Secretary of War to purchase certain land adjoining the Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa.—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. GREENE: A bill (H. R. 25678) to require life-preservers on motor vessels—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 25679) for the extension of Columbia road NW., in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MADDEN: Resolution (H. Res. 479) requesting the Interstate Commerce Commission to send to the House certain information—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HULL of Tennessee: Concurrent resolution (H. C. Res. 49) providing for the printing in one volume of all United States Statutes relating to duties on imports and taxes on incomes—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. LARRINAGA: Concurrent resolution (H. C. Res. 50) for the survey of Arecibo Harbor, in the island of Porto Rico—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, concurrent resolution (H. C. Res. 51) for a survey of Ponce Harbor, in the island of Porto Rico—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAIR: A bill (H. R. 25680) granting a pension to John H. Ashbaugh—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25681) granting a pension to William A. Orr—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25682) to remove the charge of desertion against William H. Shafer and grant him an honorable discharge—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BARNHART: A bill (H. R. 25683) granting an increase of pension to Harrison Horner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25684) granting an increase of pension to Jeremiah Reynolds—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25685) granting an increase of pension to Ezra K. Barnhill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BOYD: A bill (H. R. 25686) granting an increase of pension to Florence F. Stewart—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRODHEAD: A bill (H. R. 25687) granting an increase of pension to Simeon Flory—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25688) granting an increase of pension to Theodore Brodt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25689) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Mann—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25690) granting an increase of pension to William B. Schock—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25691) granting an increase of pension to David G. Williamson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CAMPBELL: A bill (H. R. 25692) granting an increase of pension to William Goodwin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CANNON: A bill (H. R. 25693) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Hingson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DAWES: A bill (H. R. 25694) granting an increase of pension to William H. Barnes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25695) granting an increase of pension to Charles L. Campbell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25696) granting an increase of pension to Jackson Kindsman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25697) granting an increase of pension to Fenton Bagley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25698) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Beisser—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 25699) granting an increase of pension to John H. Turpin, jr.—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HOUSTON: A bill (H. R. 25700) granting an increase of pension to John S. Herriman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOWELL of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 25701) granting a pension to Matthew M. Finch—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25702) granting an increase of pension to Max Sekel—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KIMBALL: A bill (H. R. 25703) granting a pension to Frank Thompson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25704) granting a pension to Martha J. Newton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25705) granting a pension to James Stafford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25706) granting an increase of pension to Uriah Bickers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KNAPP: A bill (H. R. 25707) to provide American register for the steamer Robert McDonald—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. LANING: A bill (H. R. 25708) granting a pension to Charles T. Wolfe—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEVER: A bill (H. R. 25709) granting a pension to Alice S. Sturgeon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McKINLAY of California: A bill (H. R. 25710) granting an increase of pension to Andrew McClory—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOON of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 25711) granting a pension to Sarah E. Harvey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RAINEY: A bill (H. R. 25712) granting an increase of pension to John H. Horn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RHINOCK: A bill (H. R. 25713) granting a pension to William Fortner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUCKER: A bill (H. R. 25714) granting an increase of pension to John Burton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 25715) granting an increase of pension to Morgan M. Lane—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THISTLEWOOD: A bill (H. R. 25716) granting an increase of pension to Amzi F. White—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNSEND: A bill (H. R. 25717) granting a pension to August Pfefferle—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25718) granting a pension to Harry E. Wood—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25719) granting a pension to Charles E. Barry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD: A bill (H. R. 25720) granting an increase of pension to Alice V. Barber—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25721) granting an increase of pension to Samuel K. Galbaugh—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WATSON: A bill (H. R. 25722) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Evans—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURNETT: A bill (H. R. 25723) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Driskell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25724) granting a pension to Mrs. W. S. Kirby—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25725) for the relief of Nathan Whitaker—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CHAPMAN: A bill (H. R. 25726) granting an increase of pension to John F. Ornts—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 25727) granting a pension to Annie Oleson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25728) granting an increase of pension to Arthur B. Carr—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of Washington: A bill (H. R. 25729) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Sager—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LANDIS: A bill (H. R. 25730) granting an increase of pension to James M. Blankenship—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25731) granting an increase of pension to Theodore Lawrence—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25732) granting an increase of pension to Henry Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25733) granting an increase of pension to John M. Keeler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LANING: A bill (H. R. 25734) granting an increase of pension to Marcus Billstein—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25735) granting an honorable discharge to Marcus Billstein—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McKINLEY of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 25736) granting an increase of pension to Albert Bell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MARSHALL: A bill (H. R. 25737) for the relief of the estate of Alexander C. McGillivray, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PARSONS: A bill (H. R. 25738) making an appropriation for the payment of certain judgments against the collector of internal revenue of the United States for the first district of New York—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. POLLARD: A bill (H. R. 25739) granting an increase of pension to Jerome De Vriendt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25740) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin H. Bailey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHERWOOD: A bill (H. R. 25741) granting an increase of pension to James Bennett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOOD: A bill (H. R. 25742) granting an increase of pension to Cornelius S. Abrahams—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Petition of St. Louis Typographical Union, protesting against judgment of the United States court in cases of Samuel Gompers and others—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Lake Mohonk Conference of Friends of the Indian, praying for legislation to prevent the production, manufacture, importation, sale, or distribution of opium—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Humboldt Chamber of Commerce, of Eureka, Cal., praying for the restoration of the jetties of Humboldt Bay, California—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of the executive committee of the Prison Association of New York, praying for an appropriation in aid of the International Prison Congress to be held in Washington, D. C., in 1910—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the East Columbia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent Sunday banking in post-offices and handling registered letters—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of the East Columbia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, praying for legislation requiring individuals and corporations engaged in interstate commerce to give to each of their employees who work on Sunday a full 24-hour rest day—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Board of Trade, praying for legislation relating to the transportation by sea of material and equipment for the construction of the Panama Canal—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Los Angeles (Cal.) Chamber of Commerce, praying for an increase in the salaries of United States circuit and district judges—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Los Angeles (Cal.) Chamber of Commerce, praying for the restoration of the jetties at Humboldt Bay, California—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of Arthur Sewell & Co. and the Bath Iron Works (Limited), of Bath, Me., praying for the passage of legislation to provide for the transportation by sea of material for use in the construction of the Panama Canal—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of F. M. Gourley, of Neoga, Ill., and 1 other protesting against the passage of the so-called "Sunday observance bill"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of William Eames and 18 other citizens of Colorado Springs, protesting against the passage of the so-called "observance of Sunday bill for the District of Columbia"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of the Portland (Oreg.) Chamber of Commerce, praying for the restoration and building of the jetties at Humboldt Bay, California—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of the state board of charities, of New York, praying for legislation to provide proper entertainment for the International Prison Congress to be held in Washington, D. C., in 1910—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Northeast Washington Citizens' Association, protesting against further agitation of the question of a change in the form of government for the District of Columbia, and praying for legislation to regulate the manufacture and sale of gas in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of Giles H. Bush and other officers and members of the Danville Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, praying for the passage of the bill to establish a so-called "volunteer retired list"—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of C. A. Wright and 112 other citizens, praying for legislation to establish a parcels post and postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. ANSBERRY: Petition of Elm Grove Grange, No. 644, of Pulaski Township, Williams County, Ohio, favoring parcels-post and postal savings banks laws—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, memorial of Chicago, Toledo, and Cincinnati Deep Waterways Association, passed at Defiance, Ohio, December 28, for construction of canal between Toledo and Chicago—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Petition of Charles Wagner and others, of Ohio, against passage of Senate bill 3940—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of Orrville Savings Bank, against parcels post on rural free-delivery routes and postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of Chicago, Toledo, and Cincinnati Deep Waterways Association, for canal between Toledo and Chicago—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BINGHAM: Petition of Atmore & Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CALDER: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Stephen A. Barber—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Harriet J. Morris (H. R. 22416)—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Concord, N. H., praying for the creation of a national highways commisssion (S. 15837)—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., for legislation pensioning members of the United States Telegraph Corps in the civil war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CALDWELL: Petition of Francis E. Green Camp, United Spanish War Veterans, favoring retirement of petty officers and enlisted men of the navy after twenty-five years of actual service—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. COOK: Petition of American Prison Association, for suitable appropriation for entertainment of the Congress of the International Prison Commission—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DAVIS: Petitions of citizens and teachers of Hale County, Tex., favoring Davis bill for national cooperation in technical education—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. DE ARMOND: Paper to accompany bill for relief of George W. Wolfe—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Jacob S. Young—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FAIRCHILD: Petition of George E. House and others, for the creation of a national highways commission (H. R. 15837)—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. FOCHT: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Henry G. Chritzman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FULLER: Petition of National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, for highway improvement (H. R. 15837)—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of G. W. Da Cunha, of Upper Montclair, N. J., favoring salary of $100,000 for the President of the United States—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. GILHAMS: Petition of W. L. Lamb and others, against the passage of S. 3940 (proper observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. GRANGER: Petition of Providence Board of Trade, favoring S. 6973 (increasing salaries of United States judges)—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan: Petition of citizens of St. Joseph County, Mich., favoring a parcels-post law and savings banks law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HASKINS: Petition of H. S. Norcross and others, of West Dummerston, Vt., Grange No. 401, favoring postal savings banks and parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HAYES: Petitions of citizens of San Francisco, Cal., as follows: Charles A. Manert, Joseph V. Ducoring, E. Calmhardt, R. I. Wirbs, Frank E. Maxwell, Andrew J. Gallagher, H. Sagor, Jacob Bauer, James Burlan, C. W. Peck, Patrick O'Brien, John J. Breslin, John O'Fallon, H. E. Lubden, Charles L. Schilling, William Doud, S. J. Gardner, J. S. Slattery, George Robertson, L. Strickland, Theodore B. Ketelson, William P. McCabe, John O. Walsh, Oscar H. Hinten, N. L. Hanley, William McIntosh, Anton P. Wohl, F. Q. Jackson, Patrick Carroll, F. W. Zimmerman, A. J. Beck, and John Wagner; of Fred W. Brandie and J. J. Mullaly, of San Jose, Cal.; of T. Harton, Dennis Coffee, Walter Dalton, Thomas Mason, W. Pence, and Thomas Lord; of Frank Zergler and 22 other citizens of Sacramento, Cal.; of J. R. Bowden and 95 other citizens of San Jose, Cal.; and of L. M. Mullinix and 46 other citizens of Louin, Miss., favoring an exclusion law against all Asiatics save merchants, students, and travelers—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. HOUSTON: Paper to accompany bill for relief of James B. Prosser (H. R. 23919)—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HOWELL of New Jersey: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Ferdinand H. Wurdemann—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KAHN: Petitions of W. H. Smith and 95 other residents of Sparks and Reno, Nev.; O. B. Anderson and 115 other residents of Seattle, Wash.; M. Garfinkle and 149 other residents of San Francisco, Cal.; and J. A. Sopp and 143 other residents of San Francisco, Cal., favoring an exclusion law against all Asiatics save merchants, students, and travelers—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. KIMBALL: Paper to accompany bill for relief of W. W. Alcoke—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KNAPP: Petition of Sandy Creek Grange, No. 127, of New York, for a parcels-post law and postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. MARSHALL: Petition of B. W. Schouweiler, of Fairmount, N. Dak., favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of citizens of North Dakota, against passage of Senate bill 3940—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of residents of Morton and Oliver counties, N. Dak., for appropriation to protect west bank of Missouri River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of citizens of North Dakota, favoring S. 5117 and H. R. 18445 (to investigate and develop methods for treatment of tuberculosis)—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. NORRIS: Petitions of citizens of Kearney County, citizens of Harlan County, and citizens of Nuckolls County, all in the State of Nebraska, against a parcels-post and postal savings banks law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of citizens of Nebraska, against S. 3940 (Sunday observance in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. NYE: Petition of Trades and Labor Assembly of Minneapolis, Minn., against delivery by the United States Government of Jan Pauren and Christian Rudowitz as prisoners to the Russian Government—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of American Prison Association for suitable provision for the preparatory work of the International Prison Commission and for the entertainment of the congress—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. OVERSTREET: Petition of Indiana Conference of Seventh Day Adventists, against passage of Senate bill 3940—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. POLLARD: Petition of Lincoln Commercial Club, of Lincoln, Nebr., favoring a tariff commission to deal with tariff legislation—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. PUJO: Memorial of the general assembly of Louisiana in 1908, favoring legislation to construct a dam across Bayou Courtableau on west bank of Atchafalaya basin levee district to protect by levee its arable territory from overflow, legislation granting to the State of Louisiana the public lands of United States in the State, legislation establishing a national standard of classification of the marketable grades of cotton, and legislation for national park on site of the battle of New Orleans—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Mrs. H. L. Slack, heir of Benjamin Temple—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RHINOCK: Paper to accompany bill for relief of William Fortner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of citizens of Kentucky, favoring parcels-post system and postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Henry B. Fenton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBERTS: Petition of American Prison Association, for suitable appropriation for the Congress of the International Prison Commission—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of National Woman's Christian Temperance Union convention at Denver, Colo., for legislation to protect prohibition States from the liquor traffic through interstate commerce—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SULZER: Petition of James Post, George L. Miles, and J. H. Rice, of New York, favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TOWNSEND: Petitions of citizens of Blissfield, Springfield (Grange No. 45), Auburn, North Adrian (Grange), Ousted, and North Rome, all in the State of Michigan, favoring a parcels-post and a postal savings bank law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. VREELAND: Petition of residents of Alfred, N. Y., for parcels post on rural delivery routes and a postal savings-banks law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WANGER: Petitions of Western Electric Company, of Philadelphia; Felton, Sibly & Co., of Philadelphia; and Philadelphia Creditmen's Association, favoring S. 6975 (increase of judges' salaries)—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WOOD: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Gershom C. Hires—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of A. H. Friedmann and S. T. Karne, of Boundbrook, N. J., favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Cornelius S. Abrahams—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, January 9, 1909.

The Chaplain, Rev. Edward E. Hale, offered the following prayer:

These men were honored in their generation; and they were a glory in their day.

These were men of mercy, whose righteous deeds have not been forgotten.

The peoples will declare their wisdom; and the congregation shall show forth their praise.

Let us pray.

Father, to-day we thank Thee for the men who have served Thee, and served this people, and served this Nation in the days which have passed, in the days which are here. Thou hast been pleased to answer the prayer of this people. From year to year and from century to century Thou hast sent us men who loved the Nation more than they loved themselves, who served this people and served Thee. Going and coming—in the field, on the sea—in the wilderness and in this Senate Chamber Thou hast sent Thy servants to do Thy perfect will.

Teach this Nation to-day what it is when men and women and children live for others, when they forget themselves for the common good, when they are strong in Thine almighty strength, when they do not ask to be praised of men, but seek the praise of God.

Bless us in this Congress; bless us in these States; bless us in this Nation; and make of this people that happy Nation whose God is the Lord. We ask it in Christ Jesus.

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom, Thine is the power, and Thine is the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. M. C. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On January 5, 1909:

S. 3125. An act for the relief of Jabez Burchard;

S. 1162. An act to correct the naval record of Alfred Burgess; and

S. 5263. An act for the relief of William Parker Sedgwick.

On January 6, 1909:

S. 534. An act to reimburse George W. Young, postmaster at Wanship, Utah, for loss of postage stamps.

On January 7, 1909:

S. 2027. An act for the relief of Philip Hague, administrator of the estate of Joseph Hague, deceased.

On January 8, 1909:

S. 3388. An act to correct the military record of William A. Hinsch;

S. 4749. An act for the relief of Dewitt Eastman; and

S. 6189. An act granting a right of way to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company across the Fort Mason Military Reservation in California.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had appointed Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania, Mr. YOUNG of Michigan, and Mr. GAINES of Tennessee as members of the committee on the part of the House on the inauguration of the President.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill:

H. R. 22306. An act to authorize the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company and the Lackawanna Railroad Company of New Jersey to construct and maintain a bridge across the Delaware River from a point near the village of Columbia, Knowlton Township, Warren County, N. J., to the village of Slateford, Northampton County, Pa.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PLATT presented a memorial of sundry citizens of New York City, N. Y., and a memorial of sundry citizens of Schenectady, N. Y., remonstrating against the enactment of any legislation inimical to the railroad interests of the country, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of Local Grange No. 905, of Jackson Corner; of Milton-on-Hudson Grange, No. 884, of Milton; of Local Grange No. 354, of Camden; of Pomona and Rushford Grange, No. 1004, of Rushford; and of Sandy Creek Grange, No. 127, of Lacona, Patrons of Husbandry; and of sundry citizens of Albany, all in the State of New York, praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. PILES presented a petition of Mountainside Grange, No. 190, Patrons of Husbandry, of Van Zandt, Wash., praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DIXON presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 8273) to amend an act approved May 30, 1908, entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana," which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SCOTT presented a petition of Unity Grange, No. 358, Patrons of Husbandry, of Charleston, W. Va., praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DEPEW presented petitions of sundry citizens of Mahopac, Milford, Alfred, Binghamton, Syracuse, Clarksville, Pleasant Plains, De Kalb Junction, Vega, Rushford, Ulster Park, Sandy Creek, Clintondale, Elba, Berkshire, Rochester, Warwick, Mountainville, Poughkeepsie, Rathbone, Greenville, Manlius, Brocton, Hermon, Hornell, Ellenburg, Frewsburg, Hammond, and Granville, all in the State of New York, praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Supervisors of Columbia County, N. Y., praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of the public highways of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a memorial of the Merchants' Association of New York, remonstrating against the enactment of any legislation inimical to the railroad interests of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. McCREARY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5273) for the relief of Andrew Whitley, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 727) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 8298) granting a pension to Joshua I. Cooksey, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (S. 8299) authorizing the widening and extension of Minnesota avenue SE. from its present terminus near Pennsylvania avenue SE. to the Sheriff road; and

A bill (S. 8300) for the widening and extension of Massachusetts avenue SE. from its present terminus near Fortieth street SE. to the Bowen road.

Mr. WETMORE introduced a bill (S. 8301) granting an increase of pension to Thomas L. Stone, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BULKELEY introduced a bill (S. 8302) to incorporate the "Descendants of the Signers," which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (for Mr. GALLINGER) introduced a bill (S. 8303) for the extension of Columbia road NW., in the District of Columbia, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. DIXON introduced a bill (S. 8304) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to cause allotments to be made to children on the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. McCREARY introduced a bill (S. 8305) granting a pension to William A. Butner, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CLAPP introduced a bill (S. 8306) to amend the act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat. L., p. 876), entitled "An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 8307) granting a pension to Emily A. Horsefield, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FORAKER introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8308) granting an increase of pension to John A. Baughman;

A bill (S. 8309) granting an increase of pension to James C. Brown;

A bill (S. 8310) granting an increase of pension to Israel S. Dean; and

A bill (S. 8311) granting an increase of pension to R. M. Wosk.

Mr. FOSTER introduced a bill (S. 8312) appropriating $250,000 for extending the investigations of the Bureau of Plant Industry in connection with the boll weevil, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. DOLLIVER introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8313) granting an increase of pension to John E. Gilmore;

A bill (S. 8314) granting an increase of pension to Henry B. Rose; and

A bill (S. 8315) granting an increase of pension to Loren G. Robinson.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 113) granting to the Fifth Regiment Maryland National Guard the use of the corridors of the court-house of the District of Columbia, upon such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the marshal of the District, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DILLINGHAM submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,500 for the salary of the chief justice of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, and $10,000 each for two associate justices, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I gave notice a few days ago that on next Monday I would make some remarks on the Brownsville matter, if the Senate would so indulge me. I desire now to change that notice to Tuesday, the day following,

Tuesday the 12th. I shall address the Senate, with its indulgence, at that time on that subject.

THE UNITED STATES VERSUS THE AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask leave to have printed as a Senate document the opinions of the circuit judges of the United States court for the southern district of New York in the case of the United States of America v. The American Tobacco Company and others (S. Doc. No. 646), the opinions having been filed November 7, 1908.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR REDFIELD PROCTOR.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, pursuant to previous notice, I offer the following resolutions and ask unanimous consent for their present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That it is with deep regret and profound sorrow that the Senate has heard the announcement of the death of Hon. REDFIELD PROCTOR, late a Senator from the State of Vermont.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay fitting tribute to his high character and distinguished services.

Resolved, That the Secretary transmit to the family of the deceased a copy of these resolutions, with the action of the Senate thereon.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the senior Senator from Vermont.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, if time permitted and I followed the impulses of my heart, I should speak of the man, REDFIELD PROCTOR, as he appeared to me during an unbroken friendship of nearly forty years, the memory of which is rich in associations, all of them hallowed by faith and confidence, most of them made bright by the many-colored lights of agreeable companionship, while some were of that serious, earnest nature through which alone are revealed the deeper and more sacred elements of one's character. But this is neither the time nor the occasion for such an indulgence. A strong man has fallen; an influential member of this body has suddenly ceased his labors and entered into rest. It is to him as a public servant that we must more particularly direct our attention on this occasion.

It would be a fitting tribute to the high character and to the commanding influence of Senator PROCTOR to say that at the age of 20 he was a graduate of Dartmouth College; that at 23 he received from that institution the degree of Master of Arts; that at 28 he graduated from the Albany Law School, and was admitted to practice in the highest courts of his State; that at 34 he returned to civil life after a distinguished service in the army, first as quartermaster of the Third Vermont, later as a member of the staff of Gen. "Baldy" Smith, still later as major of the Fifth Vermont, having served in front of Washington and on the peninsula, and finally as colonel of the Fifteenth Vermont, a part of the Second Vermont Brigade, whose brilliant service at the battle of Gettysburg has given it an enviable place in history; that at the age of 37 he had twice served the town of his residence in the general assembly; that at 43 he was representing his county in the state senate, of which body he was president pro tempore; that at 45 he was lieutenant-governor of the State, and at 47 he was occupying the gubernatorial chair; that at 48 he was Secretary of War in the Cabinet of President Harrison; and at 60 he became a member of this body, remaining continually in service until he passed from this life to the life eternal.

But such a tribute would be incomplete without the further statement that during a single period of twenty years this remarkable man placed himself in the front rank of those men of genius who have led our nation in its triumphal march to industrial and productive supremacy. Such a record could only be made by one who, in character and achievement, represented the best element in the social, business, and political life of both State and Nation during the period covered by his activities.

In seeking the source of those strong and rugged but safe and sane characteristics, which enabled him to distinguish himself along so many different lines in life's work, we find that he drew his inspiration from an ancestry, all of whom had part in the great movements among the English people toward a larger liberty, during the seventeenth century; who assisted in the development of the great principles of constitutional liberty during the splendid colonial period of American history; who, in every stage of state and national development, have been active and prominent in the maintenance of representative government, and who, during the later period, have been among those who helped to lay the foundations of our unprecedented industrial development.

In his veins ran the blood of Robert Proctor, a freeman of substance and position, who, within ten years after the founding of the historic town of Concord, in the old colony of Massachusetts Bay, became one of its residents, and of Jane, the daughter of Richard Hildreth, the founder of the illustrious family of that name in America. They belonged to that remarkable body of English emigrants who, between 1630 and 1645, found their way to Massachusetts, and of whom Fisk says that "in all history there has been no colonization so exclusively affected by picked and chosen men." They represented all that was advanced in English life and liberty and "came mainly," as Campbell tells us, "from that middle class, the class which, always encouraged by Elizabeth, had in her days filled her universities, given England her literature, and made her glorious on sea and land." They were men who, foreseeing the storm which shook the foundations of the throne a little later, provided for themselves a refuge in New England, where, during the period when the English people were breaking the chains of absolutism, they were laying the foundations of States in which the principle of liberty under law was to find its highest expression.

It was from his grandfather, Leonard Proctor, the head of the family in Vermont, that he inherited his spirit of veneration for those to whom the late Senator Hoar was wont to refer as the "greatest nation builders in the world's history," and his lifelong devotion to the principles of free, representative government; for it was this ancestor who, with his two eldest sons, was active in the war of independence, taking part in the fight at Lexington, and in the battles of Trenton and Monmouth, and who was chosen by his fellow-patriots as one of the committee of correspondence in 1780, as well as one of the committee "to take under consideration the new form of government." But it was from his parents, Jabez and Betsy (Parker) Proctor that he derived that rare combination of personal characteristics which enabled him to reach the high pinnacle of success in the establishment and development of great industrial interests and, on the other hand, that unusual mental endowment which enabled him to engage in the broader fields of statesmanship, clearly to analyze every proposition, industrial or political, and by logical processes work out to a right conclusion the most difficult problems. The father was a man of vigor and full of resources, a farmer, merchant, and manufacturer, a prominent citizen in his community, standing for all that was best in town and state life; the mother, a woman of unusual character, belonging to a family noted for its strong mentality, and to which Vermont is indebted not only for her great Senator, but for his two distinguished cousins, Isaac F. and Timothy P. Redfield, one chief justice and the other an associate justice of her supreme court.

With such an ancestry, with such connections, and reared among a people whose lives found expression in high thinking and right living, whose ambitions were tempered with reason, but nourished by a belief in the gospel of honest effort, it is not surprising that Senator PROCTOR'S life, from youth to old age, was one of marked achievement.

It not infrequently happens that an individual is wholly unconscious of powers which, lying dormant, need only time and opportunity to assert themselves with a commanding and controlling force, a force which gives breath to new conceptions, develops new ambitions, which directs his energies along new lines of effort and, eventually, to a career brilliantly successful, though wholly unanticipated. So it was with Senator PROCTOR. In his youth and young manhood all his ambitions centered in a professional career. It was his settled purpose to devote his life to the practice of the law, and after his admission to the bar he spent two profitable years in the office of his distinguished cousin, Isaac F. Redfield, who had laid down his work as chief justice to open an office in Boston, where he was engaged in practice and in authorship.

This relation was only severed that he might serve his country in her hour of need, and upon his return to civil life he made haste to reengage in the practice of his profession, this time through a partnership with his comrade in arms, Col. W. G. Veazey, who afterwards distinguished himself as an associate justice of the supreme court of Vermont and as a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission. They opened offices at Rutland, the seat of the marble industry in Vermont, then in its infancy, and their practice was of such a character as to bring Colonel PROCTOR into professional touch with its promoters and into some knowledge of its conditions. His inherited business instincts led him to a closer investigation of such conditions, and he soon became profoundly impressed with the vast possibilities of the industry if properly managed and energetically pursued; and he was subsequently led to assume the management of a plant where ten gangs of saws did the work of a bankrupt corporation. In this work he became conscious of powers and inclinations theretofore lying dormant, the exercise of which gave birth to new ambitions and new purposes which dominated his future life. In short, he discovered himself—his ability as an organizer, a director, a financier of unerring judgment and undaunted courage. In a single decade of time he advanced from the position of superintendent of a small plant to that of president of the Vermont Marble Company, a corporation which he organized and which is now undoubtedly the largest producer of marble in the world. The management of this rapidly growing industry taxed his strongest powers and called into action all the resources of his naturally strong character. Here was developed the aggressive force, the marked executive ability, the sound judgment, the sagacity and farsightedness, and the stubborn courage which marked his career. Under his direction every department of the business was thoroughly organized with a responsible head; new properties were purchased, new quarries opened, improved methods of operation instituted, and new markets sought and found. Under his forceful and farsighted direction its business increased by leaps and bounds, so that at the end of twenty years of effort he stood prominent among those whose genius has contributed to the Nation's industrial greatness.

It was during this period of twenty years, when time and energies were taxed with exacting cares along the lines already indicated, that he found time to serve his town, his county, and his State in every elective position, from that of selectman in the town of his residence to that of governor of the Commonwealth. In legislative halls and in the executive chamber he met the fullest expectations of the people, making a marked impress upon the thought and progress of the State. From 1880, when his term as governor expired, until 1888 he was admittedly the leader of his party in Vermont, and in the last-mentioned year was chairman of the Vermont delegation to the national Republican convention, which nominated Benjamin Harrison for President. In the election of that year ended the first period of his activity, and in his acceptance of the portfolio of war in the Cabinet of President Harrison the second began.

He brought to the discharge of his duties as the head of the War Department a rare combination of qualifications. To his knowledge of military affairs, acquired by actual service in the field during the civil war, he added the training of a lawyer and the long experience of a notably successful business and political career. The period of his service was short, but it was marked by the adoption of many measures that have resulted in great and permanent benefit to the department itself and to the army at large. One only may be now mentioned as an illustration of his administrative capacity.

When Secretary PROCTOR entered the War Department he found that one of the most important branches of its work—that of furnishing information from the military and medical records for the adjustment of pensions, pay, bounty, and other claims of soldiers, their widows, and orphans—was hopelessly in arrears. He found an accumulation of more than 40,000 cases of this kind scattered through many different divisions of the department and in various stages of delay, ranging from a few months to as many years. None of his subordinates responsible for this state of affairs was able to suggest any remedy for it other than an appeal to Congress for an enormous increase of clerical force. But Secretary PROCTOR thought that a simpler and more easily attainable remedy would be effectual, and he applied it with magical results. In July, 1889, he consolidated into one fourteen different divisions of the department, with all of their employees and with all of their records and business relating to the volunteer armies of the wars, and placed the consolidated division under his own immediate direction, but in charge of a single officer, in whose ability to bring order out of chaos he had confidence.

This radical action met with a storm of objections, protests, and prophecies of disaster both within and without the department, but the results speedily attained silenced the objectors and confounded the prophets. In just three months from the date of the consolidation the enormous accumulation of cases was disposed of, the work was brought up to current date, and from that day to this the claims of soldiers, their wives and orphans have never suffered delay in the War Department, substantially all of them being disposed of within twenty-four hours from the date of their receipt.

The consolidated division created by Secretary PROCTOR was subsequently established by Congress as a permanent bureau of the War Department under the name of the Record and Pension Office. The history of that office is too well known to require mention here further than to say that the business methods originated and adopted in it while it was under Secretary PROCTOR's direction were adopted by succeeding Secretaries of War for the other branches of the departmental service. The adoption of these methods resulted in a permanent annual saving of more than half a million dollars in the Record and Pension Office alone, in addition to the great acceleration of work made possible by them, and similar beneficial results have followed their adoption elsewhere. The public owes a heavy debt of gratitude to REDFIELD PROCTOR for the revolutionary and far-reaching measures of reform that he courageously set on foot. And the War Department's collection of more than fifty millions of index record cards, by means of which the crumbling muster rolls and other invaluable records of the various wars in which the country has been engaged were saved from destruction and the historical information that they contain made ready for instant use whenever required, now stands as a monument to him and to his wisdom and courage that made the completion of this great work possible.

Senator PROCTOR took his seat in the Senate in December, 1891, having been appointed by my present colleague, then governor of Vermont, to fill a vacancy caused by the resignation of Hon. George F. Edmunds, and by successive elections by the legislature continued to occupy it down to the time of his death. As a prominent member of the Committee on Military Affairs and for a considerable time its acting chairman, he brought to that service the wealth of information derived from his administration of the Department of War, and in the consideration of the army and fortification appropriation bills and of all important legislation affecting in any way the organization of the army and the national defense his strength and influence were strongly felt both in the committee and on the floor of the Senate. The possibility of a war with Spain stirred him deeply and roused him to characteristic action. The debates preceding the declaration of war against Spain showed such lack of authoritative information of existing conditions in Cuba and, as a consequence, such wide differences of opinion among Senators as to the policy which ought to be adopted by the Government that he was filled with apprehension, and with characteristic forethought and following a lifelong practice to seek the fullest knowledge of underlying conditions upon which to base his judgment and action, he, on his own responsibility, at his own expense, sought by a personal visit to Cuba to ascertain the real conditions there existing. When, upon his return, he gave to the Senate a cold, bare, plain statement of what he had seen and what he had learned, unaccompanied either by argument or recommendation, he did it with such gravity and such impressiveness that the facts stated burned themselves into the minds of every Senator present, and, being heralded by the press, roused the nation to action. As chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry he found an especially congenial line of work, and seconded with enthusiasm the efforts of the Secretary of Agriculture to extend the work of that department. It was under his leadership that much of the legislation was adopted which has so marvelously extended the scope of its operations during the last decade, and made it such an important factor in the development of the national resources, in the protection of the public health, and in the individual prosperity of so many of the people.

Time forbids any extended notice of his service in this body. Speaking generally, however, it may be said that it was marked with the same strong characteristics which enabled him to distinguish himself in every position to which he had been previously called. His knowledge of the general field of legislation was broad, his opinions upon public measures pronounced. He approached the consideration of every question from the standpoint of reason, good sense, and the public good. While candid in spirit, open to conviction, and tolerant of the judgment of others, his opinions, once formed, ripened rapidly into convictions, which invariably found expression in action. While he never posed as a public speaker, he was, in fact, strong and effective when he engaged the attention of the Senate. His addresses indicated patient research, deep thought, and strong convictions, and his grave and earnest spirit gave emphasis to all his utterances. In debate he was clear, strong, and insistent, but tactful and winning. Those who differed from him recognized in him not only an antagonist of strong purpose, but one of strong resources as well.

Politically and socially Senator PROCTOR belonged to the revolutionary period of thought. As a statesman he entertained a profound reverence for the character and the wisdom of the men who framed the Constitution and for the provisions of that memorable document. No one realized more clearly than he the necessity for a strong central government of clearly enumerated and delegated powers, and no one opposed more resolutely any tendency on its part to encroach upon the reserved rights of the States. These were, in his judgment, the foundation upon which our liberties were established and upon which their preservation depends. In the operation of the General Government he had always in mind the admirable system of checks and balances contained in the Constitution to preserve the independence of each of its coordinate branches, and resented with indignation any attempted encroachment of one upon either of the others. He had always in mind Washington's injunction:

> Let there be no change by usurpation, for this, though it may in one instance be the instrument of good, is the ordinary weapon by which free governments are destroyed.

He agreed also with John Stuart Mill that—

> Evil for evil, a good despotism in a country at all advanced in civilization is more noxious than a bad one, for it is more relaxing and enervating to the thoughts, feelings, and energies of the people.

He was so strongly impressed with the strong temptation which comes to occupants of the executive chair to make a selfish use of the powers which attach to that position when seeking a second election and to the dangers attending their exercise that as long ago as 1897 he introduced a joint resolution providing that the Constitution be so amended that the President shall hold office for six years and shall not be eligible for reelection. This resolution he supported in a speech rich in material and of commanding force.

As a citizen he belonged to the same school of thought. He accepted as a boy and retained as a man the principles of equality as they were taught by the fathers and embodied in the daily life of those about him. He loved the plain people and mingled with them upon a common plane. His dislike for display was only equaled by his aversion for cant and pretense. Genuine and true in his own character, he was attracted to others by what they were rather than by what they possessed. His strong, serious nature responded to every worthy call, and this, modified by his abundant humor and quaint wit, drew men to him and held them in loyal, devoted, and lasting friendship. During the whole period of his active life his benefactions were numerous and constant, though for the most part individual and private in character, but during the last year of his life he entered upon a new field of benevolence. Not far distant from his own home there stands, in the midst of a great natural park, the Vermont Sanatorium for the treatment of tuberculosis, the gift of Senator PROCTOR. In its grand proportions, its perfect design, and in the completeness of its provisions for the purpose intended, it is an expression of his broad sympathy for the afflicted ones among the people whom he loved so well.

Vermont mourns the loss of a son who honored her as a citizen and as her servant both in state and national life. His memory is fondly cherished by all her people, and his name will be held in honor by succeeding generations.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, the interesting discourse of Senator PROCTOR'S associate in this body [Mr. DILLINGHAM] has admirably depicted his remarkable career, and I, who knew him from a different standpoint, may properly be less comprehensive. But I am gratified to pay my tribute to his acknowledged worth, which I well realized and honored.

After a long, busy, and achieving life, REDFIELD PROCTOR, senior Senator from Vermont, ended his days in this city on the 4th day of March, 1908, in the seventy-seventh year of his age. In the fullness of time, amidst the fruits and honors of his labors, he passed to the last account.

"The glory of man is strength." So it hath been and so it will be in all generations, for it is only by strength of one sort or another that the higher performances of man can be accomplished. The healthy mind in the healthy body is the instrument of Providence by which man's best achievements are secured.

Senator PROCTOR was a strong man. He stood straight and tall and possessed a well-knit and shapely frame. His high, broad forehead and the outlook of his face betokened the strength of intellect that was in him. He was strong of limb, of will, and of purpose, as he was of brains. His was not a nature to beat itself against the bars with restless and aimless fervors, or to indulge in hesitating fancies and fitful and indecisive undertakings. While in no wise a sentimentalist, he had an honest mind and sound sentiments that gathered around them brave and good purposes.

"Good thoughts are only as good dreams," said Francis Bacon, "unless they be put to act."

PROCTOR was not a dreamer, except of things that might be put to act and come to pass for good. He made ceaseless efforts for self-development, and for improvement and advancement of State and country in all directions.

His life indeed was a straight line of action from reflection to design; from design to preparation; from preparation to objective effort; and from effort to consummation.

It was a siege with a city before him to be taken, and he advanced with the regularity, skill, and precision of the engineer the encircling lines that brought him conqueror to the citadel.

His mind was eminently practical. He was a man of business capacity, and as such he scanned the face of environments and measured with them his just ambition. He succeeded because he looked at facts as they were without the extravagancies of imagination and without illusion.

We can not analyze a man as we can a mineral, nor measure him like a yard of cloth, nor weigh his fine subtle quality like some material substance, but we may discover the governing faculties and principles of his life, and we found them in Senator PROCTOR in his well rounded and equipped mind, illumined with the clear white light of common sense and in his ceaseless application to the tasks which he undertook.

We may not label all of a man's talents or attainments or accomplishments, for many will appear dwarfed or be obscured by the necessity or concentration in his chosen occupations. Jefferson might have made as great a fiddler as Ole Bull could he have subsided in the peaceful pursuits of inclination, but he heard before him the trumpet of his life, and to that trumpet call he responded in assiduous and unremitting toil for liberty and country. "How sweet an Ovid was in Murray lost," sighs the poet; but the world has found consolation that the muse was neglected by him who will live in jurisprudence as the great jurist, Lord Mansfield.

PROCTOR laid the foundation of a broad, enlightened career by his graduation at Dartmouth College and his course afterwards at the Albany Law School. As he planted so did he reap. A classical education is always expanding and enriching to the apt intellect, and the study of law must ever remain amongst the noblest employments of the citizens of a republic. Heredity, environment, and education mold and direct character. The product of a venerable and worthy institution which preserved its franchises and properties by the decision of John Marshall, contributed to by the logic, the eloquence, and the tears of Webster, of whom it was the alma mater; and also the product of a State which had the same tendencies of political judgment, he was naturally a Federalist, and throughout his life he was true to his convictions and direct in their expression.

For a while after he came to the bar he was the partner of his cousin, Judge Isaac F. Redfield, who, as author and jurist, made an enduring reputation with which all devotees of the legal profession are familiar.

In 1861 came the war, and with it the trumpet blast to us—the same scene at every crossroad, village, city, and town North and South. Senator PROCTOR was then 30 years of age, and like the great mass of spirited and patriotic men of his times he joined the colors and the citizen soldiers that were trooping to the battle. Lieutenant and quartermaster of the Third Vermont Regiment, major of the Fifth, and quartermaster on the staff of that distinguished officer Gen. "Baldy" Smith, he became in 1862 the colonel of the Fifteenth Vermont Volunteers and shared the fortunes and adventures of a soldier's life. Stannard's brigade, to which he belonged, became justly renowned for its steadiness and courage, and on many a field proved its valor and endurance, and won from both friend and foe the honors which are inevitably achieved by the soldier who deserves them.

The American soldiers on both sides at the close of war well understood that it destroyed its cause, and that nothing stood between them in the nature of things that should repress concord, mutual esteem, and friendship. To-day their feelings are fulfilled.

In 1869 he became the manager of a marble company near Rutland, which ultimately united with another company of the same place and became the Vermont Marble Company, with REDFIELD PROCTOR as its president.

The business was a small one when he entered it, but before he left it it had expanded to a vast enterprise and became the largest marble-producing organization in the world, with offices in all the great marts of commerce. Like the Baldwin Locomotive Works, and like indeed nearly all of the mighty organizations which have covered our land with industry, it was the product of small and persistent beginnings and long struggles with difficulty, but became a shining illustration of the maxim that "labor conquers all things."

He became a leading and important factor in the public life of his own State, and we note there, too, his gradual and unfaltering progress. A selectman of his town; the representative of his county in the legislature; a state senator, and president pro tempore of that body; lieutenant-governor of the State, and then governor thereof; Secretary of War in the administration of Benjamin Harrison; and finally a United States Senator, twice elected, he climbed thus the rounds of the ladder by dint of the capacity and fitness which made themselves manifest and proved their usefulness to the people who selected him.

Vermont has always been ably represented in the Senate; and in Senator PROCTOR'S hands that distinction was left undiminished.

On the 4th day of March, 1905, Senator William B. Bate, of Tennessee, Senator PROCTOR, and myself were together sworn in as reelected Senators. Senator Bate and myself passed out of this Hall together toward the front of the Capitol and the inaugural ceremony of President Roosevelt. On the way I congratulated him upon the honors the State of Tennessee had so often conferred upon him, and expressed the hope that he might long live to receive them. The jostling crowds passing through the Capitol separated us upon the way and, all unconsciously to us both, we were separated forever. I never saw his face again. In the damp, cold air of that bleak day he contracted pneumonia, and I had scarce heard that he was sick when the news came that he had passed hence.

Honored by the Senate by appointment as one of the committee to attend his remains, which were buried in Nashville, I there met Senator PROCTOR, and together we rode over the field of the bloody battle between Thomas and Hood and their valiant armies. We there viewed the remains and observed the relics of the decayed fortifications, where we were reminded that the weapons of war between Americans had perished. We exchanged reminiscences and observations of the great conflict in which both of us had shared on opposite sides. As we drove back to the city, he said to me, somewhat to my surprise:

I think you will live longer than I, and if I should die before you, I hope you will attend my funeral.

I had never been what might be called an intimate of Senator PROCTOR, but I had been frequently and agreeably in conference or consultation with him about the affairs of the army or other matters of interest here, and entertained for him a cordial regard, and I was glad to discover in the nature of his remark that it was not without reciprocation. I congratulated him on his strong constitution and his great power of endurance, and expressed the hope that so painful a duty might never be mine. But on the third anniversary of the day that Senator Bate had contracted the fatal disease that killed him, Senator PROCTOR ceased forever from his earthly labor and passed to rest.

At the time of his funeral I was sick in bed with an attack of grippe, which was prevalent in the city, but I recalled our conversation as imposing upon me a sacred obligation and had the mournful satisfaction of discharging it. A snowstorm raged from the time we left Washington until his body was deposited in his native dust while the winter winds and the heavy snow swept down the valley where his tomb is located.

At Proctor, the town he founded, I saw the work of his constructive genius in a thrifty community in the mills for cutting stone which he had built there; and also noted the profound respect for him which filled the hearts of his neighbors and employees, who gathered against the storm to pay to his memory the last honors which they felt were due to their benefactor. It was a picturesque and beautiful scene of industrial advancement, comfort, and adornment, as well as a mournful illustration of the last scene of all. Model houses had been furnished to the workers at low rentals; gardens surrounded them; a well-equipped hospital which provided free nursing to the employees and to their families had been established; accident insurance without cost to them had insured wages and medical attention in sickness, and in case of death $500 for the care of their families; a library and Young Men's Christian Association building had been provided, and there visible to the eye was a monument of accomplishment and a very nursery of the genius of initiative effort and labor such as PROCTOR, the founder, had himself exemplified.

Here in the Senate Senator PROCTOR had shown a character and established a reputation which were like in consonance with his antecedents. As a debater, he did not speak frequently, but whenever he spoke it was forcibly, aptly, and to the point; and when he got through, always left a strong impression upon the minds of those who heard him. It was said of an English king that he never said a foolish thing, and never did a wise one. PROCTOR never said foolish things. It was his habit to do wise ones.

I had the pleasure and honor of hearing the speech to which his associate referred upon the conditions in Cuba and our relations with Spain. It was a speech comprehensive in its statements, clear in its argument, and conclusive in the resultant good which flowed from it. I have heard many speeches in this body, but I can recall none other which was more clearly the cause of the result that followed. He was specially useful on the Military Committee, for which service both his experience as a soldier and as Secretary of War had admirably equipped him, and also on the Committee on Agriculture, to which he gave particular attention. But PROCTOR was a man who neglected no work, and whatever his hand found to do he did it with his might. Many of our recent military reforms he had brought forward and advocated. He did much good work also on other committees. He revealed no disposition to discuss those delicate questions which involve sectional relation, and are sometimes sources of pain to many, however sincerely made, and are not often of benefit. There was the dignity of reserve, as there was force of speech, evinced in his appearances. He knew not only the power and effectiveness of pertinent utterance, but he knew also, what some of us may sometimes forget, the power of silence. He was a ripe man, with a well-trained mind, and his experience in the hard struggles and accomplishments of life had rounded rather than sharpened him.

In man's fitful journey across the surface of this rugged and troubled sphere he can but seldom leave behind him durable and beneficent signs of his life work.

The myriads come and go without footprints, the worthy and useful, as well as their opposites; brilliant intellects and eloquent tongues; noble hearts and strong arms; glorious spirits, with heavenly aspiration, often rest in unknown graves side by side with those whose lives were unavailing. The man who lives long and who also has the good fortune to do something by which he may be remembered, even in one of many deeds, is the rare man; and he is likewise the exceptionally rare man who, passing through the seven ages of man, fulfills to each age of life work his worthy and appropriate part. This Senator PROCTOR did in his family, in his State, and in his country. Albeit that his name is interwoven with the texture of the history of his State and Nation, albeit he raised many by merit to high trusts, PROCTOR'S name is also identified with many tasks and durable achievements of his private enterprise worthy of commemoration, and it is a pleasure to note that an "heir to him succeeding" takes the helm of state and the responsibility of business which his father before him had held and borne.

He who makes two blades of grass to grow where only one had grown before is justly accounted the friend of and provider of the human family. How much then must be esteemed he who smites the barren rocks and pours forth from them the stream of prosperity. He built a town, and established industries in the rugged ledges and by the waterfalls of his native streams. There to-day are thrifty and happy homes, with strong and hopeful hearts, where he led the way of utility, culture, and progress. Here and there are the marble blocks brought forth by the alchemy of toil to shapeliness to be turned to gold. Forth from the hills of Vermont go the polished products to build the homes and public edifices of a great people.

Hugh Miller read, as we are told, the "Testimony of the rocks," and saw in it the work of the ages long gone by.

PROCTOR read the "testimony of the rocks" in his native State and saw in them the possibilities and auguries of fruitful days to come.

The genius of organization and the genius of labor are the distinguishing marks of our national ascendency and constant progression. Organization is the master faculty of the English-speaking people, surpassed by none of the people of either ancient or modern times. Here in America that faculty has been multiplied in its diversities.

Labor is the only king of divine right, and from it the master faculty has been led forth to unprecedented fruition.

In his faculty of organization and in his constant toil, PROCTOR proved himself to be the true interpreter of nature and the true student of her art. Above the faculties I have noted is the master public passion of our race, our country, and our motherlands before us. "We must be free or die who speak the language Shakespeare spoke." A soldier, statesman, and citizen who possessed the master faculties of his folk, and their master passion likewise, has gone to his honored rest. May his ashes rest in peace and his memory be cherished in the just honor which he won, and may the consolation which only He who made us, by deeds can give to them, bind the wounded hearts of those nearest and dearest to him.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President—

Friend after friend departs.
Who has not lost a friend?
There is no union here of hearts
That finds not here an end.

For many years I enjoyed the acquaintance and cherished the good will and friendship of the one whose memory we meet to-day to honor. From him I learned the story of his eventful life and experience.

More than three score and ten years ago, in the month of June, amid the hills of the Green Mountain State, a child was born to Jabez and Betsy Proctor. They called his name "Redfield." His boyhood was passed in the town of Proctorsville, Vt., where he attended school in the little "red schoolhouse," famous in the history of New England. I have never heard that he shone there with any particular brilliancy, but it is said that one day a phrenologist visited the school, and among all the scholars singled out REDFIELD PROCTOR as being phrenologically destined to achieve greatness.

Having received a thorough preparatory education, the youth entered Dartmouth College at Hanover, N. H., from which he was graduated in 1851, in his twentieth year. Here he "toed" the football over the campus and got into as many scrapes as most college boys.

Choosing the profession of law, he entered the law school at Albany, N. Y., was graduated in 1859, was admitted to the bar of that city and also that of Woodstock, Vt. He was taken into the office of his cousin, Judge Isaac F. Redfield, who at that time was one of the leading lawyers of Boston.

At the beginning of the civil war Mr. PROCTOR at once returned to his native State and enlisted in the Third Vermont Regiment. He served with distinction in the Peninsula campaign and suffered disabling hardships which made it necessary to resign his commission and return home. The next year, having regained his health, he was anxious to return to the front and was made colonel of the Fifteenth Vermont Regiment.

Directly after the surrender of Lee, Colonel PROCTOR returned to his home in Proctorsville and took up the occupation of farming. It is recalled that at this period he was often seen clad in a blue-and-white striped frock reaching down below his boot tops, trousers tucked in his boot legs, whip in hand, traveling beside a pair of large red and white oxen going to his farm land in another part of the village. He little knew then that he was preparing himself for the duties which devolved upon him later in his life as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the United States Senate.

Several years later he entered into partnership with Col. Wheelock G. Veazey, of Rutland, Vt. Finding the law too slow a road to wealth, he became connected with the Southerland Falls Marble Company, which in after years developed into the Vermont Marble Company, and under his management became the greatest marble center in the world.

The first public office which REDFIELD PROCTOR held was that of selectman of the town of Rutland; the last, that of United States Senator, which office he filled from October 18, 1892, until his death, March 4, 1908.

The office of selectman is a minor office, so to speak, yet the duties devolved by it subject the incumbent perhaps to a more severe ordeal than that to which some of us who to-day occupy positions in the Congress of the United States are subjected, for the friends and neighbors of a selectman are not unscathing in their criticisms of his official acts.

In the meantime Mr. PROCTOR had been selected by citizens of his State to represent them in the lower and subsequently in the upper house of the legislature; had been elected lieutenant-governor, and later governor, of Vermont. In March, 1889, President Harrison appointed him Secretary of War. His administration has been considered one of the ablest in the history of that department, as was so well stated by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] this morning.

On the retirement of Senator George F. Edmunds, in 1892, Governor Page appointed Secretary PROCTOR to fill the vacancy until the next meeting of the legislature of Vermont, which elected him to fill the unexpired and the full term, the latter ending March 4, 1899. He served the people of his State so well that he was twice returned to this body by an almost unanimous vote of his legislature.

It is said that in the lives of men who have become great some trait of character is dominant. In the case of REDFIELD PROCTOR it is difficult to say what was his leading talent, for in him nature had combined courage, patience, perseverance, endurance, aggressiveness, loyalty to State and country, intelligence, beneficence, and an intense love of nature and of nature's works.

We, his associates and friends, performed the last sad duty of accompanying his remains to his home, and laid him to rest amid the snow-covered hills of his beloved Vermont. The cortege passed between thousands of bowed and bared heads, friends from all over the State, and of the employees of the Vermont Marble Works, which, as he often said to me, he considered "his work" more than any other one thing in the world. There, in a section of country with environment and climate forbidding in every way the amassing of great wealth, he made the elements his servants and carved out of the earth a fortune and a monument in comparison with which all others dwindle in importance, for not only in one spot alone do we see the evidences of his untiring ability and financial genius, but in every city, town, and churchyard are monuments which speak in marble purity to those who knew him by the name of REDFIELD PROCTOR.

In his own little town of Proctor are hospital, church, and library, given by him to his people, while near the town of Pittsfield rises a marble sanatorium endowed by him for victims of tuberculosis, that ravaging disease which is playing such havoc, especially in the cold Northern States. And yet, while the great fortune he amassed to some represents only dollars, it really indicates his ability to think better and to see farther than others into the future. I have spoken of his military honors and those which his State and the Nation conferred upon him.

He did not begin life as a poor boy. He was not a self-made man, but came from well-to-do Vermont parents. He often spoke of his mother and her wonderful strength of mind; her New England thrift, her precepts and examples, which were the guide of his future life.

In spite of all his travels and constant intercourse with the most cultivated people, he never forsook the intermingling of New England provincialisms with his language, using those quaint words so typical of New England, which were as charming in his conversation and as characteristic of the man as is the kilt of the Highlander.

Now, I speak of what is probably considered by many to be the greatest event in his governmental career, his visit to Cuba, which has been so feelingly referred to by my distinguished colleague from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], to see for himself the conditions existing there in 1898, and his subsequent speech in the Senate, giving to our people a description of the horrors he witnessed. Those of us who heard that speech remember with what vividness he portrayed the conditions then existing in the island of Cuba. He did not intend at that time to deliver as a speech that which he had written, but when he came into the Chamber he found there such a mass of expectant and breathless auditors, the newspaper press being also represented in the gallery and on the floor, that he was impelled to speak. I relate that which I know, for he told me many times that he did not intend to make the speech, but that there seemed to be such eagerness on the part of Senators to know and to hear him tell what he had seen, to learn of his experiences on the island, that he could not resist the temptation, and so he gave us the never-to-be-forgotten story of his trip. What the result was we all know. What would have happened had he not visited Cuba and had he not given us his account in plain, simple words, with no thought of oratory or embellishment, we do not know. That he went there to ascertain the conditions was evidence of his bravery. That he gave the world what he had gained was evidence of his patriotism and public spirit. He desired to know the truth, and his ability to make others see by his words what he had seen with his eyes was evidence of his intellectual power.

His greatest pleasure and recreation were found in the use of the gun and the rod. His simple taste made a "nappee" of bread and milk in the woods a feast. He loved young people, and spent much time with his grandson, Mortimer, teaching him to hunt and fish. The haunts of the deer and the salmon will know him no more; never again with stealthy tread will he stalk the game in the Canadian wilds. His deeds are now only a memory. Their results alone live after him. The "moving finger" has ceased writing, and we are left to mourn the loss of one who, whatever else he was, was every inch a man, a statesman, and a gentleman.

May we not learn a lesson from the lives and careers of those with whom we have been for many years officially associated, but who have answered the last roll call and passed to that bourn whence no traveler returns?

As the mariner hails with confidence the beacon light that guides him safely past the rocks and shoals that menace disaster, so may we gain wisdom from the knowledge and experience of the eminent statesmen whose life work fills some of the brightest pages in the history of our country. Then, let us gird on the armor of patriotism and inscribe on our hearts the motto:

Show us the truth and the pathway of duty,
Help us to lift up our banner sublime,
Until earth is restored to its order and beauty,
Lost in the shadowless morning of time.

Teach us to sow the seed of many a noble deed,
Make us determined, undaunted, and strong,
Armed with the sword of right, dauntless amid the fight,
Help us to level the bulwarks of wrong.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, the first time I met Senator PROCTOR was in March, 1897, just before I became a member of the Senate. Of course, I knew before that time of the public services of Senator PROCTOR, for he had been governor of his State, Secretary of War, United States Senator for six years; besides he had been prominent in the counsels of his party for more than a quarter of a century. He was a delegate to the national Republican convention of 1888, which nominated Mr. Harrison for President, and was an ardent and influential supporter of Mr. Harrison and contributed materially to his successful nomination and election. The conspicuous part he bore in this convention attracted the attention of the entire country, and it was generally known that he enjoyed the confidence of President Harrison throughout his administration. But, Mr. President, I desire to speak of Senator PROCTOR only after our personal acquaintance and senatorial associations. The distinguished Senators from Vermont will doubtless go into the details of his entire life.

I remember well that when I entered the Senate the appropriation bills were referred to and considered by the Appropriations Committee. These supply bills now carry nearly a billion of dollars per annum. Senator PROCTOR insisted that the supply bills should be divided up—the post-office appropriation bill to go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, the agricultural appropriation bill to go to the Committee on Agriculture, the Indian appropriation bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs, the supply bill to support the army to the Committee on Military Affairs, and the naval appropriation bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs. This was a radical change in the policy of the Senate and necessarily took from the Committee on Appropriations nearly half of the supply bills. Senator PROCTOR insisted with great energy that no one committee ought to have to deal with all of the supply bills; that this responsibility should be divided with other committees and the committee work of Senators equalized. When he first began this fight it seemed impossible for him to succeed. But he was thoroughly convinced that he was right, and being a man of strong convictions, he knew no such word as failure. He pressed his fight energetically and continuously for weeks and months until success crowned his efforts. I sympathized with his views and gave him my humble support, and from that day to the day of his death we were warm personal friends. He was ever ready to practice self-denial when it involved the preferment of a friend. I watched his course with peculiar interest and pride. He possessed strong convictions and contended with all of his energy and powers for the views he entertained and the cause he espoused.

His judgment in business and on public questions was uncommonly good. He possessed a powerful physique, an extraordinary intellectual endowment, and was absolutely free from insincerity or affectation. He had the happy faculty of approaching men in such a manner as to impress them favorably, both as to himself and his subject. I am happy to say that the friendship which sprang up between us nearly twelve years ago was continuous until the sad day when he left us. We did not always think or act together on political questions. We belonged to different political parties. We often, however, did agree on public questions. While it is true our lives sometimes ran in different channels, I always felt for him, as I believe he did for me, a peculiar attachment. I had every assurance that he was my friend, and I never hesitated to let him know that I was his friend. In all the relations of life I found him to be genuine, sincere, and loyal—qualities which go to make up the best man can hope to attain.

I watched his public career with interest. As a Senator he was industrious, practical, and successful in whatever he undertook. He was a careful, painstaking, forceful, and conservative legislator, broad in his views and kind and considerate of others. He enjoyed in a remarkable degree the confidence of his colleagues. He was a powerful factor in molding and shaping public opinion. Before the United States declared war against Spain on account of conditions existing in the island of Cuba, Senator PROCTOR visited that island, making a most thorough examination of conditions existing in the island. He visited all sections of Cuba and made himself thoroughly familiar with the misfortunes of this unhappy people—and when he returned to the Senate he was perfectly familiar with the sufferings of this oppressed and downtrodden people, and he brought a message to the American Senate and to the American people which aroused the conscience of this Nation and resulted in bringing about war between the United States and Spain.

He delivered a most remarkable speech in the Senate March 17, 1898, describing pathetically the sufferings of the Cuban people. I quote briefly a few of his remarks on that memorable occasion.

Senator PROCTOR said:

Torn from their homes, with foul earth, foul air, foul water, and foul food or none, what wonder that one-half have died and that one-quarter of the living are so diseased that they can not be saved? A form of dropsy is a common disorder resulting from these conditions. Little children are still walking about with arms and chests terribly emaciated, eyes swollen, and abdomen bloated to three times the natural size. The physicians say these cases are hopeless. Deaths in the streets have not been uncommon. I was told by one of our consuls that they have been found dead about the markets in the morning, where they had crawled, hoping to get some stray bits of food from the early hucksters, and that there had been cases where they had dropped dead inside the market, surrounded by food. Before Weyler's order these people were independent and self-supporting. They are not beggars even now. There are plenty of professional beggars in every town among the regular residents, but these country people, the reconcentrados, have not learned the art. Rarely is a hand held out to you for alms when going among their huts, but the sight of them makes an appeal stronger than words. I went to Cuba with a strong conviction that the picture had been overdrawn; that a few cases of starvation and suffering had inspired and stimulated the press correspondents, and that they had given free play to a strong, natural, and highly cultivated imagination. Before starting I received through the mail a leaflet published by the Christian Herald, with cuts of some of the sick and starving reconcentrados, and took it with me, thinking these must be rare specimens, got up to make the worst possible showing. I saw plenty as bad and worse; many that should not be photographed and shown. I could not believe that out of a population of 1,600,000, 200,000 had died within these Spanish forts, practically prison walls, within a few months past from actual starvation and diseases caused by insufficient and improper food. My inquiries were entirely outside of sensational sources. They were made of our medical officers, of our consuls, of city alcaldes (mayors), of relief committees, of leading merchants and bankers, physicians and lawyers. Several of my informants were Spanish born, but every time the answer was that the case had not been overstated. What I saw I can not tell so that others can see it. It must be seen with one's own eyes to be realized.

I have endeavored to state in not intemperate mood what I saw and heard, and to make no argument thereon, but leave everyone to draw his own conclusions. To me the strongest appeal is not the barbarity practiced by Weyler, nor the loss of the Maine, if our worst fears should prove true, terrible as are both of these incidents, but the spectacle of a million and a half of people, the entire native population of Cuba, struggling for freedom and deliverance from the worst misgovernment of which I ever had knowledge. But whether our action ought to be influenced by any one or all of these things, and if so, how far, is another question. The large number of educated and patriotic men, the great sacrifices they have endured, the peaceable temperament of the people, whites and blacks, the wonderful prosperity that would surely come with peace and good home rule, the large influx of American and English emigration and money, would all be strong factors for stable institutions.

The Senate and the country heard this story of the cruelties and wrongs inflicted upon this helpless people, made by Senator PROCTOR, and after the delivery of that most remarkable speech there was no longer any doubt that Spanish rule must come to an end in Cuba. The United States shortly afterwards declared war against Spain, which resulted in establishing Cuban independence. Impartial history has recorded the fact that Senator PROCTOR did more than any other public man to arouse public sentiment against Spanish rule in Cuba and in favor of Cuban independence and self-government. His powerful speech describing the sufferings of the people of Cuba aroused the conscience of the American people, resulting in a declaration of war against the Government of Spain, which necessarily resulted in banishing from Cuba Spanish rule. The people of Cuba now have a free and independent government of their own, and are making rapid progress in developing the resources of that island, and doubtless have before them a happy and successful future. The cruelties practiced by the Spanish Government have ended, and a new nation has been born, clothed with the right of self-government, and who will deny to the distinguished dead the honor which he deserves for the great work he accomplished in bringing about these results? The good work he accomplished for this suffering and oppressed people has given him a fame which will never perish. All lovers of justice and liberty will continue to sing his praise.

The citizenship of Vermont is of the highest type. They are a practical people, industrious, thoughtful, intelligent, and progressive. They never act without thinking. They look far into the future, and have been great factors in building up the highest and best civilization in the world. They have shown by their history that they appreciate the value of long and faithful service by their public men. Senator Morrill was kept continuously in Congress for forty-three years and nine months. So far as I remember, such public service is without a parallel in the history of our country. Senator Edmunds served continuously for twenty-five years, until he resigned his seat in the Senate. Senator PROCTOR had been in public life for nearly a quarter of a century. Maine, Massachusetts, and Vermont have been powerful factors in the affairs of this Nation since their admission into the Union. The people of those States have always recognized the value of long and continued services in both branches of Congress. These States have sent their ablest men to Congress and kept them there, and necessarily they have had great and powerful influence in shaping the legislative policy of this country.

After an association of eleven years with Senator PROCTOR in this Chamber, I unhesitatingly say that I found him to be strong in his friendships, a broad-minded statesman, a man of unqualified integrity, and kind and gentle in all of the relations of life. Whatever he undertook to do he did well. He was a man thoroughly in earnest, bold in the execution of his plans, and successful in all of his efforts. As chairman of the Committee on Agriculture he took great pains to improve the agricultural condition of the country, and was a warm and staunch friend of the Agricultural Department. He used no surplus words in debate.

He readily grasped the strong points favorable to his side of the question and presented them with force and clearness; and he applied the same methods in business and achieved great financial success in his business operations. Before making up his mind on public questions he was slow to express an opinion. He usually went to the bottom of a question, and after becoming thoroughly convinced that he was right it was almost impossible to successfully resist his opinions.

Senator PROCTOR had passed his three score years and ten, but his mental vigor was in no way impaired, and he was recognized as one of the strong and forceful men of the Senate. His business life had been crowned with great success. I have been informed that many years ago he took charge of a remarkable industry that had been wrecked and was hopelessly insolvent. By applying close attention to this business, he made it the largest and most successful marble plant in the United States. He was plain and unassuming, free from deceit, and just and considerate in all of his dealings with others. His tastes were simple, and he lived close to nature. A perusal of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD during his service in the Senate shows that a splendid public career ended when he died.

He was a model citizen and the highest type of a successful business man.

As governor of his State, as Secretary of War, and as United States Senator he has carved his name ineffaceably upon the records of his State and country.

Senator PROCTOR possessed in a remarkable degree the genius of common sense. He was resourceful and had at his instant command all of his faculties. He believed in work and was a man of indefatigable industry. He taught the doctrine that labor is always rewarded. His life work teaches the American youth that almost any obstacle can be overcome and success achieved by industry. He was no dreamer. Things he did were real things. He was the very spirit of the practical. He believed in building, planning, and reaping. His career as a business man and as a statesman has been most remarkable, and the youth of the country can read and study his life and profit by the lessons he has taught and the success he has achieved. When the oppressed needed a friend, his voice was raised in their behalf.

It is some consolation to his friends to realize that he ran his race well to the end and that his career was crowned with usefulness and success. His manly course has given him a permanent place of high honor in the history of his country.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, on March 4 last, when the flag above the Senate Chamber was placed at half-mast, we witnessed the emblem of a Nation's grief for the loss of one of her noble, stalwart, patriotic sons—Senator REDFIELD PROCTOR—the Christian, the business man, the soldier, the statesman. It is fitting, indeed, that we, his colleagues, set apart this day to pay respect to the memory and to extol the virtues of our friend, who has passed the portals of death into a grander and better life. Death, the kind friend of man, opened the gate of paradise and God bade his son enter. We bury the body, but the immortal spirit—that spark of divinity—lives on forever. A noble and well-completed life has been transferred from this world to a more perfect sphere beyond. Senator PROCTOR is not dead; he has simply advanced to a higher life. Rather would I consider this occasion the celebration of his birth into an eternal life than one to mourn his death. All knowledge gained, all victories won, and all ideals realized in this life will be his throughout all eternity.

Thank God, no stain of dishonor rests upon the life of our departed friend. In it no compromise was ever made with falsehood. He worshiped God and loved his fellow-man. He was true to every trust. He was kind and charitable and had every respect for the opinions and convictions of others. He was true to himself, to his family, to his fellow-man, to his country, and to his God. Well may it be said of Senator PROCTOR, "He was an honest man," which is the greatest honor that can be bestowed upon any man. By honesty I mean more than mere desire or ability to meet all of one's commercial obligations. I mean more than respect for and obedience to law. Millions of men may claim these virtues, yet may not be honest in the broadest sense. These are truly desirable attributes; but honesty means more than all of them, for they may be forced virtues, or may be acquired for selfish gain and advantage. Real honesty is a God-given gift manifesting itself in every act of man toward his fellow-man. It is unselfish, loyal to principle, and true to conviction without thought of consequences. I repeat Senator PROCTOR was an honest man; honest under all conditions; honest because honesty was a part of his very being. No one ever met him who did not feel he had been in the presence of an honest man. His countenance, his voice—yes, every part of him—was typical of his noble character.

The American people have been benefited by his wisdom, which has gone forth in the laws enacted by Congress, in which he was so deeply interested. Painstaking in the discharge of his public duties, no Member rendered more faithful and efficient service to his country. We who served with him will miss his wise counsel and valuable advice. His nobility of character, his determined purpose to solve the weighty problems of human government, his zealous devotion to the duties of life, public and private, constitute a legacy that enriches us all.

His ambitions in life were realized by his patient, consistent, and untiring efforts and by his unceasing diligence and deep sense of duty. He rose from the common walks of life to the position of business man, state senator, lieutenant-governor, governor, Secretary of War, and United States Senator, the highest honor within the gift of the people of Vermont.

The life work of this splendid American has ended, and he will be missed by family, neighbors, State, and Nation. Oh, what a loving father, a devoted husband, a Christian neighbor, a true friend, an ideal American! As long as we believe in loyalty to country, in consecrated public service, in a clean and upright life, so long will the life and services of our friend be remembered and honored by his people.

To his family he has left more than a princely fortune, for he has left behind a successful life, one that will be an inspiration to thousands of young Americans, and a demonstration of the oft-repeated assertion that position, business success, and honor are open to all in this land of freedom, and may be acquired without wronging or oppressing one of God's children.

Senator PROCTOR's photograph, among others of the great men of this world, hangs in my library. I shall always point to it with pride, and tell the story of his life to my sons with a hope that it will inspire in them lofty ideals and be an example to them of business integrity. His life is the highest type of successful American citizenship, and that means the highest known to the human family. It can be truly said of our departed friend that the world is better off for his having lived in it.

In these days, when newspapers and magazines are filled with sensational stories of dishonesty and dishonor among men of all stations of life, people are being impressed more and more with the idea that the future success of our Nation depends not so much upon the culture, the brilliancy, the learning of its leaders in legislative and business life as upon the honesty and integrity of their character. Character exemplifies human nature in its highest forms. It is the corner stone of individual greatness—the Doric column of the majestic structure of a true and dignified man, who is at once a subject and a king. The true worth of an individual, a community, a nation, is measured by the strength of their character.

No taint of corruption rests on the character of REDFIELD PROCTOR. It was without blemish, firm and true, the source of his happiness. Neither wealth nor the praise nor the allurements of this world could pollute it. As long as the affairs of this Republic are directed by men of Senator PROCTOR's high character, its future welfare will be assured.

Mr. President, there is a future, as there was a past. God has withheld the recollection of our former existence for a wise purpose and mercifully hidden from us the full glory of the future. Yet ofttimes a secret something whispers, "You are a stranger here," and we feel that we have wandered from a more exalted sphere. This life is but a part of the great plan of salvation, which was laid before the foundation of the world. Our earthly bodies die and return to dust, but our spirits are immortal and live forever. No human soul is satisfied with the hopeless horror of oblivion. It can not be possible that our life is a bubble upon the ocean of eternity, to float for a moment upon its surface, and then to burst into nothingness and darkness forever! To admit such a thought is to confess that the human family is damned from birth to death. Our destiny is higher than that of earth. Death is not so terrible, properly viewed. It is the pleasant transitional stage from an earthly to a more perfect life. For centuries men have doubted the immortality of the soul. But none have approached the Throne of Grace in humble supplication who have not received hope and faith and knowledge.

Revelation and reason both assert the same glorious hope. Why, then, should we view death with terror? Ought not we rather look forward to it as the final triumph of a well-spent life? So I say that the death of our colleague is our loss, but his everlasting gain. Our hope of a resurrection is glorious to contemplate, when body and spirit will again reunite and come forth triumphantly to reap the reward of the deeds done in the body and to receive the crown of eternal life, which is the greatest gift of God. Let us feel that our friend has been given a higher and greater commission, and let us have faith that we shall again meet him and have the pleasure of his personal association. We will meet him; we will recognize him; we will know him.

I have experienced the sad separation by death of a father, and I know the grief it brings. My heart goes out in sympathy to the widow and family in this their bitterest hour of trial. God comfort them and grant His choicest blessings upon them. May they seek consolation in the unshaken belief that God is just and "knoweth best."

Some time when all life's lessons have been learned,
And sun and stars forevermore have set,
The things which our weak judgments here have spurned,
The things o'er which we grieved with lashes wet,
Will flash before us out of life's dark night,
As stars shine most in deeper tints of blue;
And we shall see how all God's plans were right,
And how what seemed reproof was love most true.

And we shall see how, while we frown and sigh,
God's plans go on as best for you and me;
How, when we called, He heeded not our cry,
Because His wisdom to the end could see.
And even as prudent parents disallow
Too much of sweet to craving babyhood,
So, God perhaps is keeping from us now
Life's sweetest things because it seemeth good.

And if, sometimes, commingled with life's wine,
We find the wormwood and rebel and shrink,
Be sure a wiser hand than yours or mine
Pours out this potion for our lips to drink.
And if some friend we love is lying low,
Where human kisses can not reach his face,
O do not blame his loving Father so,
But wear your sorrow with obedient grace!

And you shall shortly know that lengthened breath
Is not the sweetest gift God sends His friends,
And that, sometimes, the sable pall of death
Conceals the fairest boon His love can send.
If we could push ajar the gates of life,
And stand within and all God's workings see,
We could interpret all this doubt and strife,
And for each mystery could find a key.

But not to-day. Then be content, poor heart!
God's plans, like lilies, pure and white, unfold,
We must not tear the close-shut leaves apart,
Time will reveal the calyxes of gold.
And if through patient toil we reach the land
Where tired feet with sandals loose may rest,
When we shall clearly know and understand,
I think that we will say, "God knew the best."

Mr. CRANE. Mr. President, the death of REDFIELD PROCTOR caused genuine sorrow not alone within the State of Vermont, where he had lived and where his career had been such a source of pride and satisfaction to his fellow-citizens, but throughout the country. The passing away of such a man is a distinct loss to the Nation he has served with so much ability for so many years. I esteem it a privilege to give public expression of my regard for him and of my deep appreciation of his many good qualities.

His was indeed a remarkable career. If any man ever successfully stood the test of service, it was Senator PROCTOR, who, through a long and very active life, let no opportunities for usefulness pass by him. Placed in many positions of great responsibility, he always gave the best that was in him. Essentially a man of affairs and possessed of great executive ability, he was ever equal to the demand of the hour. After graduating from Dartmouth College and the Albany Law School he became for a time a resident of my own State and practiced law in the city of Boston. It was while he was engaged in the practice of his profession there that the civil war began. The call of Abraham Lincoln for volunteers met with an instant response from him, and he returned to his native State for the purpose of entering the army. He served with distinction through practically the entire war, during the latter part being colonel of the Fifteenth Vermont Volunteers. He early showed an intense love of country, which was characteristic of him to the end.

With the close of the war he returned to Vermont, and for forty years was an important figure in its public life. It was in 1867 that he was first chosen a member of the state legislature, and from that time honors crowded rapidly upon him. He became lieutenant-governor. He made a strong and popular governor, and his administration was marked by much important legislation passed upon his recommendation. He was an efficient Secretary of War under President Harrison, and became a United States Senator in 1891. From that time until his death he was a hard-working, influential member of this body, and impressed himself not only upon his fellow-Senators, but upon the country as a man of sturdy common sense, strength of intellect, and honesty of purpose. Always alert to promote the interests of his State, he was not one who was actuated by sectionalism, and his efforts were directed toward the progress and development of the whole country. The effect of his speech upon conditions in Cuba, after personal inspection on the island, will not soon be forgotten. His plain, straightforward recital of the dreadful suffering there made a profound impression upon his countrymen, and undoubtedly exerted great influence in bringing about American intervention.

The industry, thoroughness, and painstaking effort which were so evident in all of his public life were also shown in his business affairs, and under his management the marble works at Proctor, Vt., grew from small beginnnigs to be the largest of the kind in the world. Indeed, few men have been able to accomplish so much or have worked in so wide a field. Success crowned his labors to an unusual degree. United with great ability was an attractive personality. Cordial, hearty, and approachable, he was a delightful companion, and he will be greatly missed by his associates.

As we extend our deepest sympathy to his stricken family, we can rejoice in the inspiring memory he has left to them and to us.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President, I desire to add a few words of tribute to the memory of a great and good man. Senator REDFIELD PROCTOR. My acquaintance with him extended over a period of twenty years, and the more intimately I knew him the stronger my friendship for him became. He was a man to be trusted and loved, and throughout his public career no one could point to any act of his that did not reflect credit upon him and upon the State which he represented.

I met Senator PROCTOR first at the Republican national convention at Chicago in 1888. He headed the Vermont delegation and cast the vote of that State for Benjamin Harrison. For this the people of Indiana have always felt grateful to him, not only because he supported our candidate for the Presidency, but also because it showed his judgment and patriotism in throwing his influence for a strong, level-headed, conservative man for the Presidency of the United States.

Harrison's administration will go down in history as one of the strong business administrations in the records of our country, and in my judgment no higher compliment can be paid a President or any other officer of the Government or representative of the people than to say he had great business ability. For, after all, this Government of ours is nothing more or less than a great business concern, and our people will prosper or fail in proportion to the extent that this Government is or is not conducted in a businesslike manner. When the history of the United States is finally written, it will give credit for results only, and good results can not be obtained except by the application of proper business methods. Judged by this standard, Harrison's administration will be pronounced a success. In this connection Senator PROCTOR, who served as Secretary of War under Harrison, will come in for a large measure of credit, because throughout the three years of this administration his strong common sense and business ability impressed themselves upon the President and all who had to do with national affairs at that time.

While a Representative in Congress it was my pleasure to become intimately acquainted with Senator PROCTOR after he had succeeded Senator Edmunds, and on various occasions I had the honor of being his guest at his Vermont home. Here I learned more of the excellent and noble qualities of this good man than I had before known. I visited the large marble works of which he was the head, and was deeply impressed with the great respect and love that all of his employees had for him.

He had built up this wonderful industry, employing hundreds of laborers, and I found absolute harmony prevailing between the employer and employee. There were no strikes, no damage suits, no discontent, no jealousies nor ill feelings in this plant. Senator PROCTOR had established it and operated it, not alone with a desire for profit, but also with a desire to benefit those who worked for him.

A large store was conducted, and at the end of each year the profits of their store were divided among the employees in proportion to their purchases. He had established a hospital and a system of trained nurses, who took care of the sick and injured. These nurses not only looked after the employees when sick or injured, but visited their homes and took care of any members of their family who might need their assistance. He had aided the employees in building a magnificent Young Men's Christian Association building, with all modern equipments and conveniences, and both by precept and example he encouraged those who worked for him to higher and better things.

When I finished my visit through his great marble works I concluded that he had solved the problem of harmony between employer and employee, and I felt that if his example could be extended throughout the whole business world it would solve this much-vexed question and result in great happiness and prosperity to those who labor and be the best possible thing in the world for those who employ labor.

Senator PROCTOR's motive in adopting this plan was not selfish alone, for he was too broad minded and generous to pursue selfish ends; but from a financial standpoint he got greater results and greater returns because of his fair, honest manner of dealing with those who worked for him. He took great pride in the fact that in his employ were many grandfathers, fathers, and sons. He had learned the great truth that honesty and generosity are their own reward.

Senator PROCTOR was a typical New Englander, and was proud of his State and her traditions, and he came from that great New England blood that has given to the United States so many of her best citizens. He was a strong Republican in politics, but cherished no hatred nor prejudice against those of opposite political faith. He gave all men credit for their honesty, and in the Senate of the United States he supported all legislation that seemed to him to be for the general good, regardless of whether it came from the Democratic or Republican side. And as long as there remains in this Senate a man who knew him he will be remembered as an able Senator, honest and patriotic in all his purposes. In his death the country and his State suffered great loss, and I, with many others, was deprived of the counsel of a strong personal friend.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, it seems to me that no Senator ever lived who was a more complete embodiment of the distinguishing characteristics of the State which he represented than the one to whose memory we to-day pay tribute. No man ever lived who was a more genuine type of the rugged strength of our Mountain State than REDFIELD PROCTOR.

It would not, in this presence, be fitting to claim for Vermont either stronger or better men than those of her sister States, but the occasion would seem to warrant a brief reference to some of the more peculiarly distinctive traits which characterize the men of our State, and to justify an expression of the great personal pride which every true Vermonter feels in those sons who possess the qualities of strength, courage, and independence so perfectly exemplified in the life of Senator PROCTOR.

The first settlers of Vermont were largely of Massachusetts and Connecticut origin; brave, enterprising men who coveted that greater measure of liberty and independence opened up to them by the new Connecticut of the North; men who were attracted to the new State by the rugged, unbroken wilderness which the pioneer spirit prompted them to subdue. To negative characters, to the cowardly, the faint-hearted, the weak, Vermont offered no attractions.

The conditions surrounding the early history of our State were absolutely unique. At no time was Vermont a province; never did she acknowledge herself the dependency of any foreign power or recognize the sovereignty of any king, prince, or potentate. It was a fact well known throughout the colonies that the same lands formerly granted by Gov. Benning Wentworth, of New Hampshire, were being regranted by Sir William Tryon, governor of New York. It required supreme hardihood and the greatest personal courage on the part of those men who, undaunted by the difficulties and dangers of a strenuous conflict, left the comparative peace and quiet of the more southern settlements of New England to seek out homes in our unbroken northern forests.

The mountain State of West Virginia has for the motto on its coat of arms the words "Montani Semper Liberi," mountaineers are always free. The strength, endurance, and freedom typified by the mountains do indeed seem to find true kinship in the hearts of mountaineers.

Vermont's chain of Green Mountains, extending from the hills of old Berkshire on the south to the forty-fifth parallel on the north and forming the physical backbone of our little State, only typifies that moral spinal column which runs through our entire state history—a spinal column which, once curved in a righteous cause, no amount of sophistry has ever been able to reduce.

Within those bold pioneer settlers who subdued our rocky hillside farms, battling with the storms and enduring the hardships of our northern winters, that inborn spirit of personal liberty and stubborn independence, that natural love of right and justice, so grew and developed that they became as fixed and unyielding as the very hills themselves.

Capt. Leonard Proctor, the paternal grandfather of Senator PROCTOR, was a pioneer of this type. Having borne a most honorable part in the war of the Revolution, he came to Vermont at the close of that war and settled on the banks of a little mountain stream, to which was given the name of Black River. Here the village, named for its founder, Proctorsville, was planted, and here REDFIELD PROCTOR was born. Here he learned to fish and trap and hunt. Vermont had no truer sportsman, and his great vigor of body and mind, as many of the older members of this Senate know, was in no small measure the result of his love of the rod and gun.

It has been said that every man is the sum of his ancestors, and if this be true, REDFIELD PROCTOR had a right to be strong. His father, Judge Jabez Proctor, was one of the foremost citizens of Vermont during the early part of the last century, having been a judge of the probate court, twice a presidential elector, and several times a member of the governor's council. His mother also came of strong ancestry. From her parents sprang those distinguished jurists and judges of our supreme court, Timothy P. and Isaac F. Redfield, the latter the well-known author of standard law works and the chief justice of the supreme court of Vermont. It is not often given to one man, as to Isaac Parker, the maternal grandfather of REDFIELD PROCTOR to be the progenitor of a judge and of a chief justice of the supreme court, two governors of States, a United States Senator, and a Secretary of War.

Of REDFIELD PROCTOR's career as a statesman, of his distinguished service in this body, of the influence of his strong personality upon legislation and in the national field of politics, it is perhaps more fitting that his brother Senators speak; but I can not forego a brief word, giving my personal estimate of a man upon whose life my own has so closely impinged for forty years.

When in 1891, after twenty-five years of distinguished service, that great constitutional lawyer, George F. Edmunds, tendered his resignation as United States Senator, it was my privilege to appoint REDFIELD PROCTOR as his successor. My opinion then formed that the mantle of Edmunds had fallen upon shoulders which would wear it with honor to Vermont and to our country has only been strengthened by the events of intervening years.

His farsighted, comprehensive grasp of affairs, as shown in the upbuilding of by far the largest marble business in the world, was surpassed by few, if any, of our great captains of industry. He was a tireless worker and a remarkable master of details. He was cool, self-reliant, and resourceful in difficulties and wonderfully fertile in expedients in every emergency calling for leadership. He formed his opinions upon public matters with excellent judgment and with an earnest purpose to promote what he believed to be the best good of the whole people, and from those opinions once ripened into convictions he was not easily swerved.

He was a generous, large-hearted comrade and friend. It seemed to those who knew him most intimately that the social side of his nature was developed to a degree rarely found in men whose lives were packed so full of strenuous effort and exacting duties. His inexhaustible fund of humor and of native wit made him a most enjoyable companion. He attached himself to those he loved with hooks of steel, and no man would fight harder to promote the welfare of a friend than REDFIELD PROCTOR.

During his many years of public service, commencing with his enlistment in 1861, his patriotic, uncompromising devotion to his country's welfare knew no limitations. As soldier, governor, Secretary of War, and Senator he served his State and the Nation with signal ability, and in his death the country suffers an irreparable loss.

One of the most commanding figures of our time has gone to his rest. He has lived his life, he has fought his fight, he has finished his work. In the midst of one of our fiercest mountain storms we bore him to his last resting place. For a mile on either side, and forming a double row as guard of honor, stood the men who labored in his workshops and in his quarries—men who had come to love him with an affection begotten of long years of generous acts and of thoughtful regard for their welfare.

In a mausoleum built of his own beautiful marble we placed his body, and there he sleeps beneath the monument erected to commemorate his name; but his life shall have a memorial more lasting than the enduring stone, in the hearts of the people of that State which he loved and served so well.

Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The junior Senator from Vermont submits a resolution, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 11, 1909, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 9, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CONSTRUCTION OF A BRIDGE BETWEEN FORT SNELLING RESERVATION AND ST. PAUL, MINN.

Mr. NYE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill H. R. 23866.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23866) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge between Fort Snelling Reservation and St. Paul, Minn.," approved March 17, 1906.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 9 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge between Fort Snelling Reservation and St. Paul, Minn.," approved March 17, 1906, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized shall not be commenced within one year and completed within three years and four months from the date hereof."

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Strike out the word "three" in line 10 and insert in lieu thereof the word "four."

Strike out the words "and four months" in line 11.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 22306. An act to authorize the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company and the Lackawanna Railroad Company of New Jersey to construct and maintain a bridge across the Delaware River from a point near the village of Columbia, Knowlton Township, Warren County, N. J., to the village of Slateford, Northampton County, Pa.

LEASE OF SAN CLEMENTE ISLAND, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. McLACHLAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill S. 4856.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the following bill and consider the same in the House at this time. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 4856) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to lease San Clemente Island, California, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized, directed, and empowered to lease and demise to the San Clemente Wool Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California, its successors and assigns, for the purpose, however, of farming, the unused light-house reservation in California known as "San Clemente Island," for and during the full period of twenty-five years, for its and their sole and exclusive use, except as hereinafter specified, at an annual rental, payable in advance, of $1,500, and an expenditure by said company, or its successors or assigns, of $25,000 (not less than approximately $1,000 in any one year of said term) in improving the said island and protecting it from devastation by accretions of sand: Provided, That in said lease it shall be stipulated that the Government of the United States may at any time during the term thereof go upon said island and construct thereon at any point light-house buildings, stone quarries, piers, landings, or other governmental structures, and may set aside certain tracts of land on the shore for fishing and camping places, and take possession of such portion or portions of said island as may be required for such purposes, and may at any time introduce game animals on said island. It shall be further stipulated in said lease that the said expenditure of $25,000 in improving said island shall be expended in developing water, constructing dams and reservoirs for the storage of water, erecting windmills, water tanks, building fences, houses, buildings, and wagon roads, reseeding the island to trees and grasses, and planting spineless cactus for the purpose of stopping the drifting of the sands and of creating additional pasturage, and such other general improvements as may be necessary for the conduct of the business of sheep and general farming, and that all ranches and buildings shall be kept in good sanitary condition. Said lease shall confer upon the said company the authority to construct on said island such reservoirs, dams, windmills, water tanks, fences, houses, barns, buildings, ditches, flumes, canals, roads, telegraph and telephone lines, trails, wharves, piers, and landings as may be necessary or proper for the uses and purposes herein set forth.

SEC. 2. That nothing herein contained shall grant or convey or be held to grant or convey to said company, its successors or assigns, during such time as it or they may hold said lands under the lease hereby authorized, any right, license, or privilege to take or remove from said island, or any part thereof, any growing timber, stone, clay, ore, metals, or minerals of any kind or nature whatsoever, save and except such timber and stone as may be necessary for the immediate use of said company, its successors and assigns, in the building, erection, or maintenance of such reservoirs, dams, windmills, water tanks, fences, houses, barns, buildings, ditches, flumes, canals, roads, telegraph and telephone lines, trails, wharves, piers, and landings.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may at any time during the said period of twenty-five years, at his discretion, terminate and cancel said lease, in case said company shall fail to pay the said rental of $1,500 per annum in advance or shall fail and neglect to expend the sum of $25,000 in the improvement of said island, as herein specified, and, in order that the Secretary may be advised regarding the expenditures made by said company, it shall be further stipulated in said lease that said company shall annually, on the 1st day of January, file with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor a statement, under oath of its president, showing in detail the expenditures made by said company during the previous year and the character and extent of the improvements made on said island by said company, which statement shall be accompanied by good and sufficient vouchers. It shall be further stipulated in said lease that government officials shall have the right to go upon said island at any time, and shall have the right to inspect the improvements made by said company under the terms of said lease. It shall also be stipulated in said lease that all improvements made upon said island by said company, and all buildings and other structures erected thereon by said company under the terms of said lease shall upon the termination of said lease, in natural term or by cancellation of the same, be and become the property of the Government of the United States. It shall also be stipulated that no part of the said island of San Clemente shall be sublet to other parties.

SEC. 4. That the money so received as rental by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor from said company shall be held by him for the use and benefit of the Light-House Service.

The committee amendments were read as follows:

On page 4, in line 2, after the word "specified," insert the following: "And well and truly perform any of the stipulations herein imposed upon it."

On page 5, in line 1, strike out all the remainder of the line after the word "be," and all of line 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Covered into the Treasury."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman a question or two, and I want to make one announcement. Inasmuch as nobody can ever find out what bills are coming up by unanimous consent, I intend to object to every one of them unless I am furnished a copy of them. That is a fair rule. Now, where is this island?

Mr. McLACHLAN of California. It is in the Pacific Ocean, about 60 miles out from the mainland.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand this island has been rented to this company before.

Mr. McLACHLAN of California. It has been rented to this company before by the Treasury Department, but under the general law the department is only allowed to lease land of this kind for a period of five years; and this company now has a lease of this same island, which lease does not expire for two years. The price paid by the lessee at the present time is $1,000 a year. This bill provides that the island be leased to the same party for a term of twenty-five years at an annual rental of $1,500 a year instead of $1,000 a year.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, does the department recommend this?

Mr. McLACHLAN of California. The department recommends it cordially; it has passed the Senate, and was unanimously reported with these amendments by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the gentleman, if the present lease does not expire for two years, what reason is there for bringing in this bill now?

Mr. McLACHLAN of California. I am very glad the gentleman asked the question. This island is about 18 miles long and averages about 2 miles wide. It is a rocky island with drifting sands. The reason the party asks a long lease is for the purpose of so treating the island that it will prevent this drifting sand, and thereby save it for some useful purpose.

Mr. HARRISON. Are there other companies that might wish to lease this island?

Mr. McLACHLAN of California. I know of none. It has been advertised at home, and it has been in the papers a long time. This proposed bill was introduced and passed in the Senate during the last session, and the fact that it was proposed to lease it to the same party has been in the public press; but I know of no one who desires to lease the island except this company.

Mr. HARRISON. What is the meaning of the proviso that permits the Government to establish fish and game reservations there? Is it the custom now for the Government to have such camps on the island?

Mr. McLACHLAN of California. It simply reserves all the rights for anyone to go there and fish or do anything they please.

Mr. HARRISON. Where is this, near Santa Catalina Island?

Mr. McLACHLAN of California. It is about 30 miles farther out.

Mr. HARRISON. And nothing there except a sheep farm and a light-house?

Mr. McLACHLAN of California. That is all.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a bill that came from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It was considered by the subcommittee on light-houses, of which I was the chairman. I hesitated a long time about favorably reporting upon a bill which provided for a lease to a specific individual or company. It seemed to me an improper practice, and I think is an improper practice as a practice. This particular island is valueless for any purpose whatever as it stands except for a sheep preserve, and valueless for that purpose without the expenditure of a considerable amount of money by the person who has it in charge. It is a light-house reservation, and set aside as such, though there is no use for it as a light-house reservation. It is an island of considerable size, most of it rocky, and the part of it that is not rocky is now being covered with drifts of sand. There is no water on this island except by saving it from rainfall. At one place they have found a little spring out in the sea, but of course that is valueless without a considerable expenditure of money to save it.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I want to ask how large this island is in the matter of acres?

Mr. MANN. It is about 18 miles in length, with probably an average of less than 2 miles in width. I think the extreme width is probably 3 miles. There is a high ridge that runs along the center of it from one end to the other, practically.

Mr. HARRISON. This is not the island which I have seen mentioned in the papers as that on which some parties wanted to erect a miniature Monte Carlo?

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

Mr. HARRISON. Is this corporation organized solely for the purpose of growing wool?

Mr. MANN. Solely for the purpose of growing sheep. This company now has a lease on the island, and has had for some time. But the island can not be properly preserved in its present status without a considerable amount of money expended in order to save the water, and the bill provides that that shall be done. No company can afford to do that on a five-year lease. They have got to construct dams across the ravines. They must save all the water that can be obtained there by rainfall, or the island will go to waste. For that reason it seemed to our committee that it was fair to make an exception from the usual practice and provide for the specific lease to this company at an advanced rental.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Will the improvements that this company proposes to make on the island improve the value of the island to the Government? I understand that will be the case.

Mr. MANN. If the improvements are on the island at the end of the term of lease, it will be worth more, of course.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Does the bill carry the proposition that the improvements ought to remain there?

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes.

Mr. McLACHLAN of California. Twenty-five thousand dollars in permanent improvements.

Mr. MANN. Whether they will be preserved to the end of the lease is another question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

FRAUDS AND DEPREDATIONS IN PUBLIC SERVICE.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following House resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 480.

Resolved, That the Speaker is authorized to appoint a select committee of five members, whose duty it shall be to inquire and report to the House at its present session, as follows:

First. What appropriations were made at the first session of the Sixtieth Congress for the fiscal year 1909 that could be used to prevent frauds in and depredations upon the several branches of the public service, including the protection of public lands and their products from fraudulent entry or appropriation, and to apprehend and punish persons charged with violation of the laws of the United States; also what increase, if any, was made in any of such appropriations over the amounts appropriated for 1908.

Second. What branches of the public service, paid for in whole or in part out of the United States Treasury, are authorized or are in existence and supported by appropriations made by Congress, whose principal duties are to detect and prevent frauds, or to apprehend and bring to trial and punishment persons charged with violating the laws of the United States; whether such branches of the public service or any persons employed therein have been or are engaged in any duty not contemplated by the law or the appropriation establishing or providing for such service; the names of the persons employed, for any period, in each branch of such service during the current and last fiscal year, the rates of compensation and allowance paid or being paid to each of them, by whom they were appointed and on whose recommendation, and a statement of the specific duty performed, or engaged upon by each of such employees, each day since the beginning of the fiscal year 1908.

The committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit during the sessions of the House; to send for persons and papers, including private or secret archives; to administer oaths; and to employ such clerical, messenger, and stenographic assistance as they shall deem necessary; all expenses incurred hereunder shall be paid on the certificate of the chairman of the committee out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

GIFT OF CONSTITUTION ISLAND.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message (S. Doc. No. 639) from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, with my approval of the recommendations contained therein, a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting draft of an item authorizing the Secretary of War to accept the donation, subject to certain conditions, of the property known as Constitution Island, opposite West Point, N. Y., containing 250 acres of upland and 50 acres of meadow, as an addition to the West Point Military Reservation, for use of the Military Academy, which was tendered as a gift by Mrs. Margaret Olivia Sage and Miss Anna Bartlett Warner under date of September 4, 1908.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 8, 1909.

ILLUMINATING GAS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message (S. Doc. No. 641) from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of the Congress, a letter from the Attorney-General and accompanying papers, and call particular attention to the copy of the communication of United States Attorney Baker under date of January 5. The situation in reference to the composition of illuminating gas furnished in the District of Columbia is one that would seem to require immediate action.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 7, 1909.

HOMES COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message (S. Doc. No. 644) from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith reports by the President's Homes Commission on improvement of existing houses and elimination of unsanitary and alley houses, on social betterment, and on building regulations, together with resolutions and recommendations adopted by the commission, and ask that they receive the careful consideration of the Congress.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 8, 1909.

GIFT OF CONSTITUTION ISLAND.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 219, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution No. 219, to accept the gift of Constitution Island, in the Hudson River, New York.

Resolved, etc., That the United States accepts with thanks and appreciation the gift of Constitution Island, Hudson River, New York, lying opposite the West Point Military Reservation, so graciously and patriotically donated to the Government by Miss Anna Bartlett Warner and Mrs. Russell Sage; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to receive a deed for the same in the name of and for the benefit of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs the day before yesterday this joint resolution was unanimously ordered to be reported to the House, and I am glad to congratulate the House that the President of the United States in a message just read also commends this acquisition on the part of Congress. I have only to say that it is a most generous gift of 300 acres of valuable ground lying very close to West Point. For many years it has been the desire of the Secretaries of War and the authorities of the United States that these lands should be purchased and become part of the United States reservation. Mrs. Russell Sage has most generously and patriotically purchased this land from Miss Warner, the present owner, who is given a price upon it undoubtedly less than one-half of what it could have been sold for for commercial purposes, believing it should belong to the United States. This resolution simply provides for the acceptance of this offer by direction of Congress for the United States. I now desire to yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY], who introduced the resolution.

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Speaker, this is a gift to the United States of Constitution Island; and in order that Miss Anna Bartlett Warner might be able to share in this gift Mrs. Russell Sage has very graciously paid her an amount of money which will justify her in joining in the gift to the United States. Constitution Island, as anyone acquainted with the history of the place knows, lies just across the Hudson River from West Point, and was a fortified point during the war of the Revolution. There are many interesting historical associations connected with the island. Its location is such as to make it of very great advantage to the United States and to the academy.

I want to say in behalf of Miss Anna Bartlett Warner that she is the very gracious lady who has for more than fifty years had such an interest in West Point and the boys who go to school there that she has every year conducted a Sunday school class composed of boys at that institution, and has in every way lent her moral support and her best influence to the deportment, decorum, and morality of that very splendid institution. She has for years hoped that she might be able to see that property go to the United States, for there are no descendants of her family, and only distant collateral heirs who could share in the property, in whom she has no particular or special interest. Mrs. Sage has made it possible for the property to go to the Government as a gift. The arrangements that Miss Warner hopes to have made are mentioned by the Secretary of War in his report on the subject to the Committee on Military Affairs, and the details of the transfer will go into an item in the Military Academy appropriation bill; but it is certainly the thing for the United States to do, and this Congress especially to do, in an independent and separate resolution, to accept this very gracious and patriotic gift in a way by which she and Mrs. Sage can feel that the appreciation of the people of the United States is fittingly expressed. So it is well that we pass the resolution accepting the gift, independent of the details necessary to carry out the transfer of the title to the United States through the arrangements recommended by the Secretary of War. In this way Miss Warner and Mrs. Sage may know that the people of the United States accept and appreciate this patriotic gift. I trust that every Member of this House will enthusiastically support the resolution.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the message of the President touching the subject will go to the files.

Mr. CHANEY. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the message of the President be printed.

The SPEAKER. It will be printed. This is merely making a disposition of it. Naturally it would have gone to the Committee on Military Affairs, but it seems that a few days ago the Committee on Military Affairs reported a joint resolution relating to the matter.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the message read. There may be something in it that would be proper to go to the Committee on Military Affairs, with a view of considering it in connection with the Military Academy appropriation bill. If there is no objection, I ask to have it referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAPRON. All the facts in reference to the matter are now before the committee in the letter of the Secretary of War.

Mr. MANN. The message is printed in the RECORD.

Mr. PRINCE. Under the statement of the gentleman, I have no objection to the course suggested by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. It will be so ordered.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate on the District of Columbia appropriation bill be limited to one hour and thirty minutes, the time to be equally divided between the two sides.

Mr. PRINCE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PRINCE. I should like to ask the mover of that motion whether he desires to continue the debate on that bill this afternoon, or whether he will permit the House to go on under the rules, considering bills on the Private Calendar when this pension bill is disposed of?

The SPEAKER. This is pension day by unanimous consent for the consideration of pension bills, and so it is not in the province of the gentleman to make any agreement that would bind the House.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand the gentleman from Michigan does not intend to call up this appropriation bill until Monday.

Mr. PRINCE. Then I have no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. I will ask the gentleman from Michigan if that is so?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Probably not until Tuesday, as Monday is District day.

Mr. PAYNE. Not to-day?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Not to-day; no.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. I do not see my colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] on the floor. Is this entirely agreeable to him?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I have not been able to consult with him about it, as he is not here, but there was no application for further time when we were considering this bill.

Mr. GARNER. On this side of the House?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Not on either side.

Mr. BOWERS. I am advised that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] has agreed to yield thirty minutes——

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. To cover any contingencies I amend my request by limiting it to two hours.

Mr. BOWERS. That will be agreeable.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that general debate on the District of Columbia appropriation bill be limited to two hours, the time to be equally divided between the two sides. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that pension bills on the Private Calendar may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that pension bills in order to-day may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

At the request of the Speaker, Mr. CAPRON took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24831) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hiram E. Crouch, late of Company B, Fifty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Heiney, late of Company F, Two hundred and second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Harvey Wood, late of Company A, Twenty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Marsena H. French, late of Company A, Seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James L. McCain, late second lieutenant Company D, Thirty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John W. Pettee, late of Company H, Fifty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George R. McKay, late of Company G, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Manuel C. James, late of Company H, Twenty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Abraham Labar, late of Company K, Fifth Regiment U. S. Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles W. Murdock, late of band, Second Brigade, First Division, Sixth Army Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George Arnold, late of Company D, Thirty-eighth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Bates, late of Company G, Eighteenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Shepherd F. Eaton, late of Company A, Sixtieth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Ithamar Richards, late of Company L, Sixteenth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edward Dullea, late of Company B, Forty-fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James A. Brinkley, late of Company G, Fifty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Hutchinson, late of Company A, Twenty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David L. Sailors, late of Company K, Eighty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William L. Alyea, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles Mulvaney, late of Company I, Forty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William J. Abrams, late of Company G, Seventy-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Bartly Inkoff, late of Company C, Fifty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John P. Melchi, late of Company G, Ninety-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Martin L. Ottinger, late of Company I, Seventy-fifth Regiment, and Company I, Forty-second Regiment, Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Andrew J. Arentsen, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James G. Fiester, late of Company A, One hundred and ninety-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Baylis A. Miller, late first lieutenant of Company B, Thirteenth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Barton R. Lucas, late of Thirteenth Battery, Indiana Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James E. Lambert, late of Company G, One hundred and twentieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John M. Laurie, late of Company B, Ninth Regiment U. S. Veteran Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John W. Taylor, late of Company F, Second Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Louis N. Rollins, late acting ensign, U. S. Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George Evatt, late of U. S. S. New Hampshire, Philadelphia, and Ohio, U. S. Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mason B. Austin, late of Company M, Second Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and first lieutenant Company G, First Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Arterburn, late of Company H, Seventy-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edwin R. Elsworth, late of Company B, Fourteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James S. Porter, late of Company F, One hundred and first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John D. Robinson, late of Company B, Thirty-second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Guy S. McMickle, late of Company H, Thirtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Robert A. Hawkins, late of Company I, One hundred and seventeenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Ahi S. Loudermilk, late of Company E, One hundred and twenty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Frederick R. Wright, late of Company G, Twentieth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Boman R. Butcher, late of Company H, Second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph S. Ash, late of Company F, Nineteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry Strassner, late of Company C, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Griffith Hunter, late of Company I, Fifty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Miller, late of Company M, First Regiment California Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Robert H. Graham, late of Company F, Third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Strahly, late of Company F, Forty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Bush, late of Company F, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate fixed by the act of Congress approved February 6, 1907, the same to be paid to him under the rules of the Pension Bureau as to mode and times of payment without any deduction or rebate on account of former alleged overpayments or erroneous payments of pension.

The name of John Kolb, late of Company F, Third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Theodore Halberstadt, late of Company K, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry Bramer, late of Company C, First Regiment Missouri Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Ann Haynes, widow of Sheldon H. Haynes, late of Company I, Second Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Samuel T. Haynes, helpless and dependent son of said Sheldon H. Haynes, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Ann Haynes the name of said Samuel T. Haynes shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Ann Haynes.

The name of Lewis A. Edwards, late of Company E, Tenth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Anderson, late of Company G, Eighteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William A. Harper, late of Company E, Ninety-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas Gatings, late of Company E, Sixty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hermanus Ickes, late of Company G, One hundred and eleventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lydia J. Montgomery, widow of William P. Montgomery, late of Company B, Second Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Henry A. Wagner, late of Company E, One hundred and third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Belk, late of Company H, Fifty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James H. Ege, late of Company F, Ninety-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Andrew J. Testerman, late of Company L, Eighth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph W. B. McClintock, late of Company A, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Provisional Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Albert Witte, late of Company A, Sixteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William M. Ramsey, late of Company G, First Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Josiah Hissong, late captain Company H, Fifty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles J. Woodman, late of Company K, Seventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas Davis, late of Company C, Seventeenth Regiment, and Company D, Nineteenth Regiment, Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Leander E. Baldwin, late of Company C, Eighty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alfred M. Robins, late of Company F, Thirteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and second lieutenant Company H, Thirty-second Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Fidinger, late of Company H, Eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Lanyon, late of Company E, One hundred and fortieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Israel, late of Company B, Sixty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Powell, late of Company H, Sixth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lewis S. Whitaker, late of Company B, Sixty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Louisa Conklin, widow of Theodore Conklin, late of Company C, One hundred and forty-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Joseph Ward, late of Company H, One hundred and forty-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry J. Vredenburgh, late of Company C, One hundred and forty-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Gilbert Theal, late of Company H, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Rosina W. Ostrander, widow of James M. Ostrander, late of Company D, Eightieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry; Company K, Sixth Regiment, and Fourteenth Company, Second Battalion, Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of John M. Detrick, late of Company K, One hundred and forty-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles C. Mullen, late of Company G, Ninety-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles Somers, late of Company H, First Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sanford Jacoby, late of Company F, Seventieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles H. Moore, late of Company C, One hundred and fourteenth Regiment, and Company A, Fifty-eighth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jeremiah F. Kline, late of Company E, Twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteer Infantry, and Company B, One hundred and ninetieth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel J. Hogentogler, late of Company P, Twenty-third Regiment, and Company G, Sixty-first Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Brooks B. Martis, late of Batteries C and E, Massachusetts Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Francis Weiss, late lieutenant-colonel Twentieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles P. Lounsbury, late of Company K, One hundred and ninety-second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Alonzo Matteson, late of Company F, Second Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Ezer D. Largent, late of Independent Company, Dennison Guards, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David Koch, late of Company A, Fifty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John R. Green, late major, Fourth Regiment Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lee M. Shanefelter, late of Company F, One hundred and thirty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Levi E. Foster, late of Company E, Sixth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and Third Battery Vermont Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James H. Easley, late first lieutenant Company E, Third Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $45 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hiram Fuller, late of Company H, Thirteenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Robert J. McKee, late of Company B, Seventieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles E. Upham, late of Company G, Twenty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph Stamps, late of Company C, Fifty-second Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Morton Brandemere, late of Company A, Eighteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles N. Walker, late of Company F, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Watson C. Hull, late assistant surgeon, U. S. S. St. Marys, United States Navy, and acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George M. Rickaby, late of Company G, Thirty-second Regiment, and Company D, Sixteenth Regiment, Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Styers, late of Company B, Seventeenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Smith, late of Company A, Sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph Wittmann, late of Company B, Twenty-eighth Regiment New York State Militia, and second lieutenant Company B, Twenty-eighth Regiment New York National Guard Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John A. Walsh, late quartermaster-sergeant Twelfth Regiment, and lieutenant-colonel Fifty-sixth Regiment New York State Militia, and pay him a pension at the rate of $45 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Matthew Grau, alias John A. Smith, late of Company K, Eighty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Adam Hartman, late of U. S. S. North Carolina, Hunchback, and Iosco, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Peter Becker, late of Company K, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Jeremiah, late of Company I, Fifty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George H. Taylor, late of Company K, One hundred and thirty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Cealica Gurley, widow of Thomas C. Gurley, late first lieutenant Company D, Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Nellie A. Lovell, helpless and dependent child of J. Byron Lovell, late of Company C, Twenty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Jason Lamprey, late of U. S. S. Ohio, Princeton, and Miami, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Nahum Yeaton, late of Company C, Seventeenth Regiment U. S. Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Orale, late of Company E, Fifteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Augustus Martin, late of Company A, Third Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sarah Radcliffe, widow of William S. Radcliffe, late of Company B, One hundred and fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Jabez Smith, late of Company F, Fifty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel G. Vance, late of Company F, One hundred and forty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Aaron C. Lawrence, late of Twenty-first Battery Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob Sence, late of Company G, First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Albert A. Newman, late of Company H, Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Julia Ann Casey, helpless and dependent child of Hiram Casey, late of Company K, Sixtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of William L. Sapp, late of Company B, Sixth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Levi M. King, late of Company G, Third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel Allen, late of Company K, First Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James H. Gifford, late of Battery B, First Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Lounsbury, late of Company K, First Regiment New York Volunteer Engineers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Abraham J. Eastwood, late of Company G, One hundred and fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Silas B. Merchant, late first lieutenant of Company G, Forty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Nieland, late of Company I, Thirty-second Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry C. Miller, late of Company A, Eighty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles H. Frushour, late of Company F, One hundred and eighteenth Regiment, and Company B, Forty-seventh Regiment, Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Abram Cox, late of Company C, Twenty-third Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles E. Sackett, late of Company A, Sixteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Company D, Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Terrence McDonald, late of Company A, Ninth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George L. Ballard, late of Company A, Thirty-seventh Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Orestes L. Strong, late of Company F, One hundred and fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Patrick Cox, late of Company D, Sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Dorrance, late of Company K, Twenty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lorenz Valentine, late of Company C, Thirteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry W. Evory, late of Company C, One hundred and fifty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas E. Jacobs, late of Company B, Fourth Battalion District of Columbia Militia Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John C. Thompson, late of Company F, Fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Milton G. Harbin, late of Company C, Second Regiment North Carolina Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas G. Hendricks, late of Company A, Fifty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Milton Perdue, late of Company G, Sixth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob W. Gardner, late of Company C, Eleventh Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Harmon Colvin, late of Company F, Twenty-seventh Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles Burton, late of Company E, Ninety-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Frederic A. Hayes, late of U. S. S. Sabine, Ohio, and Dawn, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John L. Husband, late of Company C, Seventy-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John W. Ingram, late of Company A, First Regiment Potomac Home Brigade Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel Hewitt, late of Company A, First Regiment Potomac Home Brigade Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John T. Harrison, late of Company I, Third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph R. Montgomery, late of Company K, Ninety-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alvin E. Gilbert, late of Company D, Twenty-ninth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jason Kester, late of Company H, One hundred and forty-fourth Regiment Ohio National Guard Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Haun, late of Company G, Seventy-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob Rasp, late of Company C, Tenth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John J. Merrill, late of Company B, Ninety-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel S. Carmony, late of Company E, Twenty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Harmon, late of Company G, Thirty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Josiah H. Davis, late of Company I, Forty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Longdon, late of Company A, Fifth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Polhamus, late of Company B, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John H. Carpenter, late of Company I, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Morgan Burk, late of Company B, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George H. Wheeler, late of Company M, First Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Martin L. Pierson, late of Company A, Marion Battalion, Missouri Home Guards, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Levi H. Sleeper, late of Company I, Second Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and Company C, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John S. Brown, late of Company G, Ninety-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and One hundred and eighth Company, Second Battalion Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jeremiah Rainey, late of Company G, One hundred and sixty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William W. Hoffer, late of Company C, Seventy-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James S. Lea, late of Company D, Brackett's battalion, Minnesota Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Absalom E. Gentry, late of Company E, One hundred and forty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Newell, late of Company D, Thirteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas O'Kelly, late of Company B, Eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John C. Bean, late of Company F, Third Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George H. Peck, late of U. S. S. North Carolina and Tulip, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Christian Ankele, late of Company E, Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edwin V. Graves, late of Company F, Thirty-seventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William L. Wommack, late of Company F, First Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William A. McWhorter, late of Company F, Fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alfred B. Hicks, late of Company E, Twenty-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and Company B, Twenty-second Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in liue of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles Snyder, late of U. S. S. Vermont and Malvern, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Hubbell, jr., late of Company K, Sixteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Roselth A. Knapp, widow of Samuel Knapp, late of Company B, Fifth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John K. Todd, late of Company I, Fifty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Chapin, late of Company I, Twenty-seventh Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in liue of that he is now receiving.

The name of Adelbert Jones, late captain Company B, Ninety-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Chamnes S. Burks, late of Company D, Third Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob L. Parker, late of Company A, Tenth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James A. Hedges, late of Company H, Tenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Weeks, late of Company D, Sixteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

This bill is a substitute for the following House bills referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

H. R. 1065. Hiram E. Crouch;
H. R. 1471. William Heiney;
H. R. 2361. Harvey Wood;
H. R. 2465. Marsena H. French;
H. R. 2540. James L. McCain;
H. R. 2563. John W. Pettee;
H. R. 2813. George R. McKay;
H. R. 2823. Manuel C. James;
H. R. 2847. Abraham Labar;
H. R. 2997. Charles W. Murdock;
H. R. 3245. George Arnold;
H. R. 3262. George W. Bates;
H. R. 3266. Shepherd F. Eaton;
H. R. 3484. Ithamar Richards;
H. R. 3793. Edward Dullea;
H. R. 4093. James A. Brinkley;
H. R. 4313. William H. Hutchinson;
H. R. 4687. David L. Sailors;
H. R. 5426. William L. Alyea;
H. R. 5454. Charles Mulvaney;
H. R. 6570. William J. Abrams;
H. R. 6834. Bartley Inkoff;
H. R. 7428. John P. Melchi;
H. R. 7496. Martin L. Ottinger;
H. R. 7535. Andrew J. Arentsen;
H. R. 7850. James G. Fiester;
H. R. 7890. Baylis A. Miller;
H. R. 7976. Barton R. Lucas;
H. R. 8005. James E. Lambert;
H. R. 8065. John M. Laurie;
H. R. 8147. John W. Taylor;
H. R. 8253. Louis N. Rollins;
H. R. 8255. George Evatt;
H. R. 10162. Mason B. Austin;
H. R. 11416. John Arterburn;
H. R. 11944. Edwin R. Elsworth;
H. R. 12025. James S. Porter;
H. R. 12564. John D. Robinson;
H. R. 13408. Guy S. McMickle;
H. R. 14504. Robert A. Hawkins;
H. R. 15005. Ahi S. Loudermilk;
H. R. 15148. Frederick R. Wright;
H. R. 15406. Boman R. Butcher;
H. R. 15949. Joseph S. Ash;
H. R. 16160. Henry Strassner;
H. R. 16686. Griffith Hunter;
H. R. 16704. John Miller;

H. R. 16715. Robert H. Graham;
H. R. 17238. John Strahly;
H. R. 17368. John Bush;
H. R. 17623. John Kolb;
H. R. 17659. Theodore Halberstadt;
H. R. 18191. Henry Bramer;
H. R. 18405. Ann Haynes;
H. R. 18545. Lewis A. Edwards;
H. R. 18546. John Anderson;
H. R. 18647. William A. Harper;
H. R. 18719. Thomas Gatings;
H. R. 19755. Hermanus Ickes;
H. R. 19777. Lydia J. Montgomery;
H. R. 20040. Henry A. Wagner;
H. R. 20492. John Belk;
H. R. 20744. James H. Eage;
H. R. 21238. Andrew J. Testerman;
H. R. 21380. Joseph W. B. McClintock;
H. R. 21448. Albert Witte;
H. R. 21551. William H. Ramsey;
H. R. 21677. Josiah Hissong;
H. R. 21789. Charles J. Woodman;
H. R. 21798. Thomas Davis;
H. R. 21831. Leander E. Baldwin;
H. R. 22225. Alfred M. Robins;
H. R. 22342. John Fidinger;
H. R. 22343. John Lanyon;
H. R. 22352. John Israel;
H. R. 22353. George W. Powell;
H. R. 22371. Lewis S. Whitaker;
H. R. 22373. Louisa Conklin;
H. R. 22374. Joseph Ward;
H. R. 22376. Henry J. Vredenburgh;
H. R. 22377. Gilbert Theal;
H. R. 22381. Rosina W. Ostrander;
H. R. 22382. John M. Detrick;
H. R. 22383. Charles C. Mullen;
H. R. 22390. Charles Somers;
H. R. 22392. Sanford Jacoby;
H. R. 22422. Charles H. Moore;
H. R. 22460. Jeremiah F. Kline;
H. R. 22463. Samuel J. Hogentogler;
H. R. 22512. Brooks B. Martis;
H. R. 22513. Francis Weiss;
H. R. 22516. Charles P. Lounsbury;
H. R. 22518. Alonzo Matteson;
H. R. 22519. Ezer D. Largent;
H. R. 22523. David Koch;
H. R. 22529. John R. Green;
H. R. 22545. Lee M. Shanefelter;
H. R. 22569. Levi E. Foster;
H. R. 22576. James H. Easley;
H. R. 22595. Hiram Fuller;
H. R. 22597. Robert J. McKee;
H. R. 22598. Charles E. Upham;
H. R. 22610. Joseph Stamps;
H. R. 22647. Morton Brandemere;
H. R. 22648. Charles N. Walker;
H. R. 22651. Watson C. Hull;
H. R. 22659. George M. Rickaby;
H. R. 22660. William Styers;
H. R. 22669. John Smith;
H. R. 22670. Joseph Wittmann;
H. R. 22671. John A. Walsh;
H. R. 22672. Matthew Grau;
H. R. 22673. Adam Hartman;
H. R. 22674. Gabriel Muneret;
H. R. 22675. Peter Becker;
H. R. 22716. James Jeremiah;
H. R. 22717. George H. Taylor;
H. R. 22727. Cealica Gurley;
H. R. 22731. Nellie A. Lovell;
H. R. 22797. Jason Lamprey;
H. R. 22802. Nahum Yeaton;
H. R. 22803. John Orale;
H. R. 22805. Augustus Martin;
H. R. 22838. Sarah Radcliffe;
H. R. 22842. Jabez Smith;
H. R. 22843. Samuel G. Vance;
H. R. 22938. Aaron C. Lawrence;
H. R. 22940. Jacob Sence;
H. R. 22983. Albert A. Newman;
H. R. 22986. Julia Ann Casey;
H. R. 23011. William L. Sapp;
H. R. 23046. Levi M. King;
H. R. 23047. Daniel Allen;
H. R. 23054. James H. Gifford;
H. R. 23081. William H. Lounsbury;
H. R. 23082. Abraham J. Eastwood;
H. R. 23083. Silas B. Merchant;
H. R. 23106. John Nieland;
H. R. 23109. Henry C. Miller;
H. R. 23142. Charles H. Frushour;
H. R. 23145. Abram Cox;
H. R. 23157. Charles E. Sackett;
H. R. 23171. Terrence McDonald;
H. R. 23177. George L. Ballard;
H. R. 23197. Orestes L. Strong;
H. R. 23200. Patrick Cox;
H. R. 23203. William H. Dorrance;
H. R. 23232. Lorenz Valentine;
H. R. 23234. Henry W. Evory;
H. R. 23256. Thomas E. Jacobs;
H. R. 23288. John C. Thompson;
H. R. 23310. Milton G. Harbin;
H. R. 23312. Thomas G. Hendricks;
H. R. 23318. Milton Perdue;
H. R. 23325. Jacob W. Gardner;
H. R. 23336. Harmon Colvin;
H. R. 23337. Charles Burton;
H. R. 23365. Frederic A. Hayes;
H. R. 23393. John L. Husband;
H. R. 23394. John W. Ingram;
H. R. 23395. Daniel Hewitt;
H. R. 23396. John T. Harrison;
H. R. 23398. Joseph R. Montgomery;
H. R. 23440. Alvin E. Gilbert;
H. R. 23495. Jason Kester;
H. R. 23497. John Haun;
H. R. 23498. Jacob Rasp;
H. R. 23524. John J. Merrill;
H. R. 23525. Daniel S. Carmony;
H. R. 23546. William Harmon;
H. R. 23547. Josiah H. Davis;
H. R. 23568. William H. Longdon;
H. R. 23592. William H. Polhamus;
H. R. 23622. John H. Carpenter;
H. R. 23631. Morgan Burk;
H. R. 23658. George H. Wheeler;
H. R. 23662. Martin L. Pierson;
H. R. 23669. Levi H. Sleeper;
H. R. 23727. John S. Brown;
H. R. 23728. Jeremiah Rainey;
H. R. 23729. William W. Hoffer;
H. R. 23743. James S. Lea;
H. R. 23779. Absalom E. Gentry;
H. R. 23784. George W. Newell;
H. R. 23786. Thomas O'Kelly;
H. R. 23792. John C. Bean;
H. R. 23793. George H. Peck;
H. R. 23798. Christian Ankele;
H. R. 23835. Edwin V. Graves;
H. R. 23838. William L. Wommack;
H. R. 23840. William A. McWhorter;
H. R. 23879. Alfred B. Hicks;
H. R. 23880. Charles Snyder;
H. R. 23911. William Hubbell, jr.;
H. R. 23923. Roselth A. Knapp;
H. R. 23955. John K. Todd;
H. R. 23999. William H. Chapin;
H. R. 24000. Adelbert Jones;
H. R. 24018. Chamness S. Burks;
H. R. 24076. Jacob L. Parker;
H. R. 24362. James A. Hedges; and
H. R. 24749. William H. Weeks.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was read the third time and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25391) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Esau M. Shelton, late of Company A, Thirteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Wesley A. Hampton, late of Company K, Fourth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alexander H. Pierce, late of Company B, Fourth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Andrew Cofer, late of Company D, Fourteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Robert Gerking, late of Company G, Fiftieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Isaac L. Hughes, late of Company I, Forty-ninth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Altman, late of Company I, Eleventh, and Company E, Two hundredth and sixth Regiments Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Rahler, late of Company D, Twenty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David Winn, late of Company F, First Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John S. Beardsley, late of Company D, Thirteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Chauncey Barber, late of Company F, Sixth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Crane, late of Company G, Seventeenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph H. Parker, late of Companies H and G, One hundred and sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alfred McCoy, late of Company A, Seventh Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Rolland Nease, late of Company B, Fifty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James P. Waidorf, late of Company K, Seventy-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Benjamin Owen, late captain Company H, Second Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary A. Leary, widow of Daniel P. Leary, late of Company C, Third Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month: Provided, That this pension shall cease upon proof that the soldier is living.

The name of Robert Collins, late of Company K, Tenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edward Lewey, late of Company A, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Uriah D. Streeter, late of Company A, Eleventh Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edmund W. Hunt, late of Company F, Thirteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and second lieutenant Company E, First Regiment U. S. Veteran Volunteer Engineers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John E. Ault, late first lieutenant Company G, Fifty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. H. Roby, late of Company H, First Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John C. Miller, late of Battery E, Fifth Regiment U. S. Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Frederick Hercher, late of Company A, Twenty-first Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David M. Harris, late of Company K, One hundred and ninety-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John W. Resler, late of Company K, One hundred and ninety-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob Supinger, late of Company C, One hundred and seventy-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Campbell, late of Company G, Sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Oliver A. Neff, late of Company D, Eighty-second Regiment, and Company D, Seventeenth Regiment, Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William A. Smith, late of Company H, First Regiment, and captain Company C, Fortieth Regiment, Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William R. Gray, late of Company F, Eighth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Levi G. Cunningham, late of Company D, Twenty-second Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Victory T. Trail, late of Company L, Seventeenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lawson Hickey, late of Company L, First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Engineers and Mechanics, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles Carpenter, late of Company C, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Fernando A. Hackett, late of Company F, Twelfth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Dobbs, late of Company B, Fifty-second Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William J. Butler, late of Company I, Eighty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry Chase, late of Company B, First Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Nathan F. Buck, late of Company K, Two hundredth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Allen Christman, late of Company F, Third Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John B. Kelso, late of Twenty-fifth Independent Battery, Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Boulden, late of Company I, Eleventh Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Albert Brendel, late of Company L, Fourteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James S. Hardy, late of Company H, Seventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jerome B. Dann, late of Company K, Twentieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry B. Shaw, late of Company B, Seventy-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Company F, First Regiment United States Veteran Volunteer Engineers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph W. Wallace, late of Company A, Thirteenth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Cyrus Williams, late of Company F, Eighteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel M. Hilterbrand, late of Company K, Sixteenth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas R. Hoffman, late of Company I, Two hundred and third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Marion H. Motsinger, late of Company B, Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Dennis Sanders, late of Company B, First Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Isaac Wilcox, late of Company C, Twenty-first Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph B. Jones, late first lieutenant Company B, Eleventh Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Logan Loftis, late of Company B, Eighth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Martin L. Protzman, late of Battery D, First Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Milton J. Bell, late of Company I, Third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Russell, late of U. S. S. Winnebago, Potomac, and Union, U. S. Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alexander McMillen, late of Company G, Sixteenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Byron C. Bickford, late of Company I, Third Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James L. T. Sharp, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hiram D. Herd, late of Company K, Eighty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles H. Belden, late of Company A, Sixth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Madison O. Rose, late of Company F, Ninety-eighth Regiment, and Company H, Sixty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles M. Anderson, late of Company G, Thirty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Barney Eygabroad, late of Company H, Eighteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lucas B. Brewster, late of Companies L and G Eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel Swigart, late of Company D, Sixty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Abraham Blackburn, late of Company B, One hundred and forty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elcania McClure, late of Company H, Twenty-third Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Hutchinson, late chaplain Seventy-ninth Regiment U. S. Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry S. Hinman, late of Company C, One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Harrison Browning, late of Company G, Forty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Harrison Deems, late of Company B, Twenty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Aylett R. Burnett, late of Company C, Nineteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Calvin F. Walker, late of Company C, Forty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry Lamp, late of Company K, Two hundred and second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel O. Stanley, late of Company C, Fifty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry D. Hedrick, late of Company B, Fourth Regiment, and Company B, Second Regiment, West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William W. Ritchey, late of Company C, Fifty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Horace Stillman, late of Company I, Fourth Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Frederick Wolfel, late of Company I, Seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Josiah Thomas, late of Company F, Seventy-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William W. Jenkins, late of Company C, Eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Almon H. Stoner, late of Company C, One hundred and first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Frank Cullen, late of Company A, Second Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Clayton, late of Company F, Ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Mathis, helpless and dependent child of William Mathis, late of Company G, Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of James R. Armor, late of Company B, Sixth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Washington Lyon, late of Company D, Thirteenth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John W. Clem, late of Company F, Eighteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edward D. Simes, late second lieutenant Company G, One hundred and tenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel Harris, late of Company F, First Regiment Missouri Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George D. Quick, late of Company K, One hundred and fifty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Julia A. Jester, widow of Henry Jester, late of Company H, Third Regiment Delaware Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Robert McVay, late of Company K, Fifty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Company C, Twenty-third Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mathew Doyle, late of Company H, Fifty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Mechling, late of Company B, Twenty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Andrew Artman, late of Company K, One hundred and twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and Company M, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lewis W. Pond, late of Company G, First Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Andrew J. Rodgers, late of Company B, Thirty-fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elizabeth Sanderson, widow of Thomas W. Sanderson, late lieutenant-colonel and colonel Tenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Cornelius Harrington, late of Companies E and A, Forty-first Regiment, and Company K, Fifty-third Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Jordan, late of Company E, One hundred and fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary L. Colcord, widow of George F. Colcord, late of Company L, First Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Rufus Smith, late of Company C, One hundred and eleventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Erastus S. Bussell, late of Company C, Fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Calvin Shoop, late of Company K, Sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Brooks, alias Monzue Faber, late unassigned, Tenth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of William B. Douglas, late of Company A, Second Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of James P. Henderson, late of Company A, First Regiment West Virginia Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Evan H. Pritchard, late of Company E, Twenty-ninth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Frank W. Reilly, late surgeon, Twenty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Marion Carpenter, late of Company C, Seventy-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Heughs, late of Company K, Sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William A. Gibbany, late of Company C, Twenty-first Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John D. Abell, late of Company A, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph Brandle, late of Company C, Seventeenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John V. Frisbey, late of Company G, Thirtieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George D. Moore, late of Company C, Forty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles Osthelder, late of Company H, Thirty-fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry P. Heald, late of Company K, and sergeant-major, Seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob Kelley, late of Company I, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Harley Demming, late of Company G, First Regiment New York Veteran Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Eich, late of Company H, Sixty-second Regiment, and Company F, One hundred and ninety-first Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Marshall, late of Company F, First Battalion Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Garrett, late of Company A, Forty-third Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel Hunt, alias Daniel Stump, late of Company G, One hundred and fifteenth Regiment, and Company N, One hundred and ninety-eighth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Dwight H. Flint, late of Company H, Forty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Andrew J. Walker, late of Company K, Third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Isaac Wilson, late of Company F, Fifty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William F. Wallace, late of Company I, Seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Milton Harrold, late of Company H, Fourteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Gilligan, late of Company A, Third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Knight, late of Company B, Twelfth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William C. Maupin, late of Company C, First Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Matthew G. Burkholder, late of Company G, Eighty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James S. Ward, late of Company G, Fifth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Christy, late of Company C, Twenty-third Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hubert Wheeler, late of Company B, Twenty-second Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Gilbert Stickles, late of Company I, Ninth Regiment, and Company I, Second Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Allen McClure, late of Company C, Ninety-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Isaac Gage, late of Company G, Forty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Theodore Kundinger, late of Company K, Fourth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Lucien B. Doughty, late of Company E, Fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John T. Williamson, late of Company G, One hundred and third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John H. Butcher, late of Battery G, Third Regiment U. S. Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving

The name of Ira G. Kinney, late of Company I, Ninth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry C. Yetter, late of Company A, One hundred and eighteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Eldridge, late of Company E, Tenth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary Gotham, former widow of Edward Wakefield, late of Company K, First Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Valentine M. Currin, late of Company B, Fifteenth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lyman Wyman, late of Company E, Fourth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Nicholas Stuber, late of U. S. S. Vermont, New Hampshire, and Nipsic, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Franklin T. Lockhart, late of Company D, Seventeenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Hoover, late of Company H, One hundred and seventy-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Price, late of Company K, One hundred and ninety-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James H. Alexander, late of Company I, Fifth Regiment U. S. Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lydia A. Long, widow of Miller F. Long, late of Company G, One hundred and sixty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Maybelle Long, helpless and dependent daughter of said Miller F. Long, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Lydia A. Long, the name of said Maybelle Long shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Lydia A. Long.

The name of David Creger, late of Company E, Fifty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Benjamin F. Rantz, late of Company C, Eighteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas Lewis, late of Company C, Twenty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry Howe, late of Company H, Second Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and Company H, Third Regiment New York Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Absalom Cunningham, late of Company F, First Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Freeman C. Mosher, late of Company E, Twenty-fourth Regiment, and Company E, One hundred and eighty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Harrison L. Higgins, late of Company I, Thirty-third Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Washington Mead, late of Company E, Fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry A. Fisher, late of Company I, Twenty-sixth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Harrison Bryant, late of Company M, Seventh Regiment Missouri State Militia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Theodore Breckenridge, late of Company E, One hundred and seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John W. Merchant, late of Company H, Eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Michael Grogan, late of Company B, Ninth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sarah A. Hamilton, widow of Robert Hamilton, late captain Company A, Thirty-second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of John Riley, late of Company F, Fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry Horch, late of Company F, One hundred and eighty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James A. Trimble, late of Company I, Sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jasper Stewart, late of Company D, Ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Bolton, late of Company K, Eleventh Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edward Blanchard, late of Company L, Seventh Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Franklin C. Mather, late of Company K, First Regiment, and Company H, Third Regiment, Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Irving W. Tyson, late of Company C, Fiftieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Heller, late of Company A, One hundred and Fifty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Josiah Castleman, late of Company B, One hundred and Fifty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Philip Snyder, late of Company H, Forty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary Dickerson, widow of George W. Dickerson, late of Company F, First Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Thomas J. Kirtley, late first lieutenant Company A, One hundred and seventeenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Oliva Wiser, widow of Hiram Wiser, late of Company I, Thirty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and Company E, Twentieth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month: Provided, That this pension shall cease upon proof that the soldier is living.

The name of John Conrey, late of Company C, Third Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and Company D, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John M. Wood, late of Company A, Sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Dodd, late of Company G, Thirtieth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Adelbert Deland, late of Company A, Thirty-first Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John H. Mattoon, late of Company L, Twenty-first Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Rinaldine Fuller, late of Company D, Thirty-fourth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles W. Thomas, late of Company D, Seventy-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Malinda A. McMackin, widow of William H. McMackin, late of Company H, Fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Francis M. Rogers, late of Company E, First Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Karl Sander, late of Company K, Seventy-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Phillip Schwab, late of Independent Battery B, Pennsylvania Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Seymour S. Wirtz, late of Company F, Fourteenth Regiment, and Company B, Fifteenth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Madison Mosher, late of Company B, Twenty-first Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu that he is now receiving.

The name of Franklin Hinkle, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Navy, and acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Arthur L. Currie, late of Company F, Eighty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and Thirty-fifth Company, Second Battalion, Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Isaiah Ware, late of Company H, Sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David Searles, late of Company F, Nineteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Bernard V. Forshee, late of Company M, Fourth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Wallace, late of Company H, Third Battalion, Sixteenth Regiment U. S. Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry L. Penny, late of Company E, Fifty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alonzo Williams, late of Company E, One hundred and sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Julius Leffingwell, late of Company E, Sixty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Louis Etchen, late of Company B, Fifty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Isaac C. Davis, late unassigned, Sixty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John W. Tyler, late of Company E, One hundred and eighty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Robert P. Bennett, late of Company A, Forty-fourth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of August Bain, late of Company H, Thirty-fourth Regiment, and Company H, Thirty-sixth Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Harrington, late of Company C, Eighth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph H. Whittier, late of Company E, Thirty-fourth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Stephen Hamilton, late of Company K, Second Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Hindson, late of Company B, Eighty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David Meredith, late of Company A, Eighty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alfred A. Hulett, late of Company A, Thirty-third Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob Yoachum, late of Company C, Sixteenth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Francis Heath, late of Company E, One hundred and fifty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Solomon Winningham, late of Company C, Twelfth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Robert McGuire, late of U. S. S. North Carolina, New Ironsides, and Sonoma, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Robert Splane, late of Company C, Nineteenth Regiment U. S. Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph Poe, late of Company I, Thirteenth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary J. Broadstreet, former widow of George W. Brewer, late first lieutenant Company E, Second Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John E. Buffington, late first lieutenant Company C, Sixth Regiment Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob Jauch, late of Company H, Thirty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George H. Miller, alias George Hornberger, late of Company C, Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteer Infantry, and Company C, One hundred and ninetieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James K. Wesley, late of Company I, Forty-ninth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William R. Bailey, late of Company D, Forty-ninth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James W. Hoskins, late of Company E, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Harvey, late of Battery A, First Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles Kretchmar, late of Company E, Fourteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel M. Eveland, late of Company H, One hundred and ninety-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Richard H. Foord, late first lieutenant Company F, Thirty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sylvester B. Fuller, late of Company B, Fifth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John F. Frost, late of Company F, Third Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Ferdinand Fetter, late of Company I, Eleventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Byron T. Gibson, late of Company A, Fourteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Albert F. Pierce, late of Company F, Eighteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles E. Hinman, late of Company G, Thirty-sixth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and Company H, Third Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Rees, late of Company D, Eighty-fifth Regiment, and Company C, One hundred and eighty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alvin E. Nishwitz, late of Company C, Seventy-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Benajah E. Smith, late of Company A, Twenty-first Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Reinhart, late of Company G, One hundred and twenty-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Wilson, late first lieutenant Company E, First Regiment United States Veteran Volunteer Engineers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Abram Storms, late of Company K, Fourth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas Whitaker, late of Company D, Sixty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Woodson, late of Company B, Eighty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Patrick McKew, late of Company G, Two hundred and thirteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Nicholas C. Buswell, late lieutenant-colonel, Ninety-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $45 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jesse Sawyer, late of Company D, Seventy-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John S. Forbes, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mark Smock, late of Company I, First Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John T. Eason, late of Company E, Forty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Benjamin F. Moore, late of Company K, Sixty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Barnhart, late of Company A, Thirty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James H. Shackelford, late of Company H, Thirty-third Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Peter Carey, late of Company B, Second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Ambrose Goodboo, alias Goodbreau, late of Company B, Eleventh Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Stephenson, late of Company K, Second Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles C. Miller, late of Company E, Fiftieth Regiment Massachusetts Militia Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Nathaniel L. Wilson, late of Company K, Third Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Benjamin F. Bugbee, late of Third Independent Battery, Vermont Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Constantine G. Mull, late of Company F, Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John H. Lentz, late of Company F, Fourteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel Parker, late of Company B, Thirty-fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Caleb Trees, late of Company M, First Regiment Indiana Volunteer Heavy Artilley, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Eliza L. Cake, widow of Henry L. Cake, late colonel Ninety-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Orsemus Dill, late of Company E, Fourteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary A. Bowe, widow of Peter Bowe, late lieutenant-colonel Ninety-third Regiment New York National Guard Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Lydia A. Hankins, widow of David C. Hankins, late of Company D, Ninth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Lewis Carbino, late of Company G, Sixtieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and Company A, Seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Logan, late of Company B, Second Battalion Missouri State Militia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Benjamin B. Goodrich, late of Company I, Thirty-second Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Holman, late of Company D, Fifty-fifth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Joseph Wiederker, late of Company B, Thirty-fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Reuben P. Forbes, late of Company I, Sixth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charlotte Velie, widow of Edgar B. Velie, late of Company A, Battalion Engineers, U. S. Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of James E. Cook, late captain Company D, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Stephen D. Compton, late of Company E, Fiftieth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William B. Thurman, late of Company K, Forty-seventh Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month, the same to be paid to him under the rules of the Pension Bureau as to mode and times of payment, without any deduction or rebate on account of former alleged overpayments or erroneous payments of pension.

The name of James W. Ashton, late second lieutenant Company C, One hundred and fifty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Benjamin Keller, late of Company A, Forty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Simon Gabert, late of Company B, Fourth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles H. Gearhart, late of Sixth Battery, Wisconsin Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John W. Merrill, late of Company I, Thirtieth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jackson G. Cook, late of Company H, Sixtieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James R. Wiley, late of U. S. S. Grampus, Clara Dolsen, and Chickasaw, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Eliza A. Clark, dependent mother of Samuel W. Clark, late of Company C, Twenty-first Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Elick Begley, late of Company B, Forty-seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John T. Bates, late first lieutenant Company E, Seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph A. Eakin, late of Company B, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment Ohio National Guard Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Caspar Bernhard, late of Company A, Eighth Battalion District of Columbia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Granger F. Anson, late of Company B, Twenty-eighth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Gillespie, late of Company G, Fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

This bill is a substitute for the following House bills referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

H. R. 673. Esau M. Shelton;
H. R. 783. Wesley A. Hampton;
H. R. 848. Alexander H. Pierce;
H. R. 1066. Andrew Cofer;
H. R. 1067. Robert Gerking;
H. R. 1162. Isaac L. Hughes;
H. R. 1521. William H. Altman;
H. R. 1674. John Rahler;
H. R. 1948. David Winn;
H. R. 3126. John S. Beardsley;
H. R. 3155. Chauncey Barber;
H. R. 3163. William H. Crane;
H. R. 3455. Joseph H. Parker;
H. R. 3709. Alfred McCoy;
H. R. 3731. Rolland Nease;
H. R. 3746. James P. Waldorf;
H. R. 4241. Benjamin Owen;
H. R. 4353. Mary A. Leary;
H. R. 5757. Robert Collins;
H. R. 5829. Edward Lewey;
H. R. 5976. Urlah D. Streeter;
H. R. 6023. Edmund W. Hunt;
H. R. 6068. John E. Ault;
H. R. 6481. William H. H. Roby;
H. R. 6552. John C. Miller;
H. R. 6662. Frederick Hercher;
H. R. 6704. David M. Harris;
H. R. 6706. John W. Resler;
H. R. 6709. Jacob Supinger;
H. R. 6734. James Campbell;
H. R. 13934. William H. Russell;
H. R. 14071. Alexander McMillen;
H. R. 14072. Byron C. Bickford;
H. R. 14204. James L. T. Sharp;
H. R. 14469. Hiram D. Herd;
H. R. 14624. Charles H. Belden;
H. R. 14697. Madison O. Rose;
H. R. 14703. Charles M. Anderson;
H. R. 14762. Barney Eygabroad;
H. R. 14792. Lucas B. Brewster;
H. R. 14816. Daniel Swigart;
H. R. 15317. Abraham Blackburn;
H. R. 15672. Elcania McClure;
H. R. 15715. George W. Hutchinson;
H. R. 15727. Henry S. Hinman;
H. R. 15876. Harrison Browning;
H. R. 16101. Harrison Deems;
H. R. 16230. Aylett R. Burnett;
H. R. 16303. Calvin F. Walker;
H. R. 16792. Henry Lamp;
H. R. 16843. Samuel O. Stanley;
H. R. 16926. Henry D. Hedrick;
H. R. 17409. William W. Ritchey;
H. R. 17438. Horace Stillman;
H. R. 17533. Frederick Wolfel;
H. R. 17913. Josiah Thomas;
H. R. 17942. William W. Jenkins;
H. R. 17968. Almon H. Stoner;
H. R. 18143. Frank Cullen;
H. R. 18289. George W. Clayton;
H. R. 18312. William Mathis;
H. R. 18330. James R. Armor;
H. R. 18363. Washington Lyon;
H. R. 18593. John W. Clem;
H. R. 18850. Edward D. Simes;
H. R. 18965. Samuel Harris;
H. R. 19056. George D. Quick;
H. R. 19194. Julia A. Jester;
H. R. 19342. Robert McVay;
H. R. 19430. Mathew Doyle;
H. R. 19513. George W. Mechling;
H. R. 19516. Andrew Artman;
H. R. 19851. Lewis W. Pond;
H. R. 19943. Andrew J. Rodgers;
H. R. 19997. Elizabeth Sanderson;
H. R. 20286. Cornelius Harrington;
H. R. 20338. William H. Jordan;
H. R. 20459. Mary L. Colcord;
H. R. 20868. Rufus Smith;
H. R. 20981. Erastus S. Bussell;
H. R. 21069. Calvin Shoop;
H. R. 21163. John Brooks;
H. R. 21186. William B. Douglas;
H. R. 21233. James P. Henderson;
H. R. 21245. Evan H. Pritchard;
H. R. 21362. Frank W. Reilly;
H. R. 21376. Marion Carpenter;
H. R. 21465. John Heughs;
H. R. 21501. William A. Gibbany;
H. R. 21626. John D. Abell;
H. R. 21715. Joseph Brandle;
H. R. 21719. John V. Frisbey;
H. R. 21761. George D. Moore;
H. R. 21838. Charles Osthelder;
H. R. 21936. Henry P. Heald;
H. R. 22058. Jacob Kelley;
H. R. 6740. Oliver H. Neff;
H. R. 7219. William A. Smith;
H. R. 7308. William R. Gray;
H. R. 7848. Levi G. Cunningham;
H. R. 8007. Victory T. Trail;
H. R. 8149. Lawson Hickey;
H. R. 8340. Charles Carpenter;
H. R. 8750. Fernando A. Hackett;
H. R. 8835. George W. Dobbs;
H. R. 8878. William J. Butler;
H. R. 9241. Henry Chase.
H. R. 10308. Nathan F. Buck;
H. R. 10314. Allen Christman;
H. R. 10319. John B. Kelso;
H. R. 10722. William Boulden;
H. R. 10971. Albert Brendel;
H. R. 10972. James S. Hardy;
H. R. 10999. Jerome B. Dann;
H. R. 11067. Henry B. Shaw;
H. R. 11516. Joseph W. Wallace;
H. R. 11526. Cyrus Williams;
H. R. 11669. Samuel M. Hilterbrand;
H. R. 12389. Thomas R. Hoffman;
H. R. 12697. Marion H. Motsinger;
H. R. 12731. Dennis Sanders;
H. R. 12789. Isaac Wilcox;
H. R. 12845. Joseph B. Jones;
H. R. 12943. Logan Loftis;
H. R. 12963. Martin L. Protzman;
H. R. 13363. Milton J. Bell;
H. R. 22344. Harley Demming;
H. R. 22355. William Eich;
H. R. 22361. John Marshall;
H. R. 22366. John Garrett;
H. R. 22386. Daniel Hunt;
H. R. 22389. Dwight H. Flint;
H. R. 22423. Andrew J. Walker;
H. R. 22424. Isaac Wilson;
H. R. 22425. William F. Wallace;
H. R. 22494. Milton Harrold;
H. R. 22503. William Gilligan;
H. R. 22511. James Knight;
H. R. 22555. William C. Maupin;
H. R. 22586. Matthew G. Burkholder;
H. R. 22594. James S. Ward;
H. R. 22599. William Christy;
H. R. 22677. Hubert Wheeler;
H. R. 22679. Gilbert Stickles;
H. R. 22684. Allen McClure;
H. R. 22686. Isaac Gage;
H. R. 22687. Theodore Kundinger;
H. R. 22695. Lucien B. Doughty;
H. R. 22696. John T. Williamson;
H. R. 22725. John H. Butcher;
H. R. 22732. Ira G. Kinney;
H. R. 22733. Henry C. Yetter;
H. R. 22774. William H. Eldridge;
H. R. 22788. Mary Gotham;
H. R. 22804. Valentine M. Currin;
H. R. 22806. Lyman Wyman;
H. R. 22809. Nicholas Stuber;
H. R. 22866. Franklin T. Lockhart;
H. R. 22937. William Hoover;
H. R. 22939. James Price;
H. R. 22942. James H. Alexander;
H. R. 22944. Lydia A. Long;
H. R. 22960. David Creger;
H. R. 22972. Benjamin F. Rantz;
H. R. 23006. Thomas Lewis;
H. R. 23064. Henry Howe;
H. R. 23084. Absalom Cunningham;
H. R. 23105. Freemen C. Mosher;
H. R. 23114. Harrison L. Higgins;
H. R. 23120. Washington Mead;
H. R. 23130. Henry A. Fisher;
H. R. 23146. Harrison Bryant;
H. R. 25163. Theodore Breckenridge;
H. R. 23165. John W. Merchant;
H. R. 23172. Michael Grogan;
H. R. 23174. Sarah A. Hamilton;
H. R. 23182. John Riley;
H. R. 23183. Henry Horch;
H. R. 23199. James A. Trimble;
H. R. 23201. Jasper Stewart;
H. R. 23204. James Bolton;
H. R. 23205. Edward Blanchard;
H. R. 23226. Franklin C. Mather;
H. R. 23281. Irving W. Tyson;
H. R. 23283. William H. Heller;
H. R. 23294. Josiah Castleman;
H. R. 23296. Philip Snyder;
H. R. 23306. Mary Dickerson;
H. R. 23307. Thomas J. Kirtley;
H. R. 23308. Oliva Wiser;
H. R. 23342. John Conrey;
H. R. 23352. John M. Wood;
H. R. 23364. William Dodd;
H. R. 23366. Adelbert Deland;
H. R. 23367. John H. Mattoon;
H. R. 23368. Rinaldine Fuller;
H. R. 23424. Charles W. Thomas;
H. R. 23447. Malinda A. McMackin;
H. R. 23454. Francis M. Rogers;

H. R. 23461. Karl Sander;
H. R. 23490. Phillip Schwab;
H. R. 23496. Seymour S. Wirtz;
H. R. 23508. Madison Mosher;
H. R. 23510. Franklin Hinkle;
H. R. 23548. Arthur L. Currie;
H. R. 23553. Isaiah Ware;
H. R. 23555. David Searles;
H. R. 23556. Bernard V. Forshee;
H. R. 23557. John Wallace;
H. R. 23614. Henry L. Penny;
H. R. 23617. Alonzo Williams;
H. R. 23623. Julius Leffingwell;
H. R. 23624. Louis Etchen;
H. R. 23625. Isaac C. Davis;
H. R. 23632. John W. Tyler;
H. R. 23642. Robert P. Bennett;
H. R. 23645. August Bain;
H. R. 23670. John Harrington;
H. R. 23672. Joseph H. Whittier;
H. R. 23691. Stephen Hamilton;
H. R. 23696. James Hindson;
H. R. 23755. David Meredith;
H. R. 23763. Alfred A. Hulett;
H. R. 23765. Jacob Yoachum;
H. R. 23781. Francis Heath;
H. R. 23788. Solomon Winningham;
H. R. 23794. Robert McGuire;
H. R. 23797. Robert Splane;
H. R. 23806. Joseph Poe;
H. R. 23809. Mary J. Broadstreet;
H. R. 23821. John E. Buffington;
H. R. 23867. Jacob Jauch;
H. R. 23877. George H. Miller;
H. R. 23895. James K. Wesley;
H. R. 23896. William R. Bailey;
H. R. 23898. James W. Hoskins;
H. R. 23899. William Harvey;
H. R. 23904. Charles Kretchmar;
H. R. 23910. Daniel M. Eveland;
H. R. 23912. Richard H. Foord;
H. R. 23922. Sylvester B. Fuller;
H. R. 23952. John F. Frost;
H. R. 23960. Ferdinand Fetter;
H. R. 24001. Byron T. Gibson;
H. R. 24002. Albert F. Pierce;
H. R. 24003. Charles E. Hinman;
H. R. 24017. John Rees;
H. R. 24052. Alvin E. Nishwitz;
H. R. 24056. Benajah E. Smith;
H. R. 24059. William H. Reinhart;
H. R. 24068. George W. Wilson;
H. R. 24108. Abram Storms;
H. R. 24199. Thomas Whitaker;
H. R. 24200. William Woodson;
H. R. 24229. Patrick McKew;
H. R. 24233. Nicholas C. Bushwell;
H. R. 24236. Jesse Sawyer;
H. R. 24237. John S. Forbes;
H. R. 24249. Mark Smock;
H. R. 24252. John T. Eason;
H. R. 24268. Benjamin F. Moore;
H. R. 24271. William Barnhart;
H. R. 24272. James H. Shackelford;
H. R. 24273. Peter Carey;
H. R. 24294. Ambrose Goodboo;
H. R. 24346. William H. Stephenson;
H. R. 24391. Charles C. Miller;
H. R. 24392. Nathaniel L. Wilson;
H. R. 24393. Benjamin F. Bugbee;
H. R. 24403. Constantine G. Mull;
H. R. 24427. John H. Lentz;
H. R. 24446. Samuel Parker;
H. R. 24494. Caleb Trees;
H. R. 24498. Eliza L. Cake;
H. R. 24508. Orsemus Dill;
H. R. 24511. Mary A. Bowe;
H. R. 24540. Lydia A. Hankins;
H. R. 24543. Lewis Carbino;
H. R. 24544. William Logan;
H. R. 24545. Benjamin B. Goodrich;
H. R. 24549. George W. Holman;
H. R. 24554. Joseph Wiederker;
H. R. 24558. Reuben P. Forbes;
H. R. 24575. Charlotte Velie;
H. R. 24586. James E. Cook;
H. R. 24590. Stephen D. Compton;
H. R. 24592. William B. Thurman;
H. R. 24598. James W. Ashton;
H. R. 24655. Benjamin Keller;
H. R. 24691. Simon Gabert;
H. R. 24727. Charles H. Gearhart;
H. R. 24728. John W. Merrill;
H. R. 24729. Jackson G. Cook;
H. R. 24730. James R. Wiley;
H. R. 24747. Eliza A. Clark;
H. R. 24796. Elick Begley;
H. R. 24824. John T. Bates;
H. R. 24923. Joseph A. Eakin;
H. R. 24967. Caspar Bernhard;
H. R. 24972. Granger F. Anson; and
H. R. 25034. James Gillespie.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The clerk will read the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25409) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Mons E. Jerdee, late of Company A, First Regiment North Dakota Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Manwell, late of Company L, Nineteenth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Frederick H. Cook, late of Company L, First Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain.

The name of Caroline M. Marsh, widow of Charles B. Marsh, late major and paymaster, United States Volunteers, war with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of John Gallagher, late of Company G, First Regiment U. S. Dragoons, Texas and Mexico Indian wars, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Bert A. Colson, late of United States Marine Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Philip A. Work, late of Captain Walker's company, Texas Volunteers, Texas and New Mexico Indian wars, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elias M. Miller, late of Capt. John Settle's company, First Regiment Oregon Mounted Volunteers, Oregon and Washington Territory Indian wars, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Rhoda A. Rogers, widow of John C. Rogers, late of United States Marine Corps, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Robert McCall, late of Company K, Eleventh Regiment U. S. Infantry, war with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $10 per month.

This bill is a substitute for the following House bills referred to the Committee on Pensions:

H. R. 8949. Mons E. Jerdee;
H. R. 19277. George W. Manwell;
H. R. 20845. Frederick H. Cook;
H. R. 22442. Caroline M. Marsh;
H. R. 22712. John Gallagher;
H. R. 23682. Bert A. Colson;
H. R. 24364. Philip A. Work;
H. R. 24395. Elias M. Miller;
H. R. 24518. Rhoda A. Rogers; and
H. R. 24584. Robert McCall.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER a motion to reconsider the votes by which the several bills were passed was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Sunday, January 10, 1909, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Director of the Mint submitting an estimate of appropriation for protection of machinery at the San Francisco mint (H. Doc. No. 1301)—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation relating to the Indian boarding school for the Sac and Fox Indian reservation in Iowa (H. Doc. No. 1302)—to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 25622) granting a pension to Oliver T. Shepherd, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WILEY: A bill (H. R. 25743) providing for a military highway between Fort Morgan and Foley, Ala.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GOULDEN: A bill (H. R. 25744) fixing the age of soldiers, sailors, and marines entitled to pension under the provisions of the act approved February 6, 1907—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OVERSTREET: A bill (H. R. 25805) to reenact and amend sections 3646 and 3647 of the Revised Statutes—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BOUTELL: Concurrent resolution (H. C. Res. 52) providing for the printing of 2,000,000 copies of debate and proceedings in the House of Representatives concerning the message of the President in relation to the Secret Service—to the Committee on Printing.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDREWS: A bill (H. R. 25745) granting an increase of pension to Anna M. Shont—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25746) granting an increase of pension to Zaney Ann McAuliffe—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25747) for the relief of the estate of Matias Baca, deceased, and his son, Juan Rey Baca—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25748) for the relief of the estate of Francisco Montoya—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25749) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Juan Sanchez—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BARCLAY: A bill (H. R. 25750) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Scheopp—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: A bill (H. R. 25751) granting an increase of pension to George Andrews—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CALDERHEAD: A bill (H. R. 25752) granting an increase of pension to Josiah Yoder—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 25753) granting an increase of pension to Edward Chyle—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CRUMPACKER: A bill (H. R. 25754) granting an increase of pension to John Ginder—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25755) granting an increase of pension to John Cain—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25756) granting an increase of pension to William H. Ogden—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25757) granting an increase of pension to Peter Dinger—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DAVIS: A bill (H. R. 25758) granting an increase of pension to Nathaniel C. Adams—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25759) granting an increase of pension to James S. Brand—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25760) granting an increase of pension to Timothy Donahue—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25761) granting an increase of pension to Frank L. Bennett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25762) granting an increase of pension to David Hancock—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25763) granting an increase of pension to William F. Sarver—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25764) granting an increase of pension to Henry Cooledge—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25765) granting a pension to Harriet Paden—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DIXON: A bill (H. R. 25766) granting an increase of pension to Thomas C. Shewman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25767) granting an increase of pension to Noah Russell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25768) granting an increase of pension to William Luck—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25769) granting an increase of pension to George W. Owens—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FASSETT: A bill (H. R. 25770) granting a pension to Sarah Ellison Benjamin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FULLER: A bill (H. R. 25771) granting an increase of pension to David A. Sturtevant—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 25772) granting a pension to Nancy Augusta Blood—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25773) granting an increase of pension to Moses Farris—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 25774) granting an increase of pension to Samuel J. Dampman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HELM: A bill (H. R. 25775) granting an increase of pension to J. M. Adams—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULL of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 25776) granting an increase of pension to Rose F. Brackett—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KINKAID: A bill (H. R. 25777) granting an increase of pension to John T. Darr—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25778) granting an increase of pension to Ranna S. Moore—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25779) for the relief of Stephen J. Weekes—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McCREARY: A bill (H. R. 25780) granting a pension to Emma C. Homer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MADDEN: A bill (H. R. 25781) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Wells—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25782) granting an increase of pension to Alden F. Litchfield—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25783) granting an increase of pension to John Howard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOON of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 25784) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Weber—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NYE: A bill (H. R. 25785) granting a pension to Josiah G. Warner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OLMSTED: A bill (H. R. 25786) granting an increase of pension to Henry M. Reuter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25787) granting an increase of pension to John H. Butler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25788) granting an increase of pension to William Reigle—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25789) granting an increase of pension to Mattie J. Ellis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25790) granting an increase of pension to B. K. Goodyear—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REEDER: A bill (H. R. 25791) granting an increase of pension to Wellington B. McCurdy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STERLING: A bill (H. R. 25792) granting an increase of pension to William H. Jefferson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25793) granting an increase of pension to Albert S. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25794) granting an increase of pension to Joal F. Terry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25795) granting a pension to Ellen M. Davis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SWASEY: A bill (H. R. 25796) granting an increase of pension to Jerome B. Wood—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25797) granting an increase of pension to Marcellus Goddard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25798) granting a pension to Mrs. M. K Lynch—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25799) granting a pension to Georgianna Peabody—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25800) granting a pension to Margaret E. Lewis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25801) granting a pension to Rosetta J. Gould—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25802) granting a pension to Daniel P. Hobart—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WEEMS: A bill (H. R. 25803) granting an increase of pension to John D. Vail—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CASSEL: A bill (H. R. 25804) granting an increase of pension to William D. Mosser—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Petition of citizens of Coshocton County, Ohio, against S. 3940 (Johnston Sunday law)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Gifford Ramey (previously referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions)—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BENNET of New York: Petition of National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, for legislation to protect prohibition States from interstate liquor traffic—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CALDER: Petition of London Wine and Spirits Company, against reduction of tariff on foreign liquors—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Hermann Ruhe, favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CAMPBELL: Petition of United Trades and Labor Council of Pittsburg, Kans., against decision of Justice Wright—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CHAPMAN: Petition of citizens of Flora, Ill., against enactment of a parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DIXON: Petition of James W. Baldwin and other citizens of Franklin, Ind., against passage of Senate bill 3940—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. DRAPER: Petition of Federation of Jewish Organizations, for a chaplain in army and navy for Jewish soldiers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Merchants' Association of New York, against legislation inimical to railway prosperity—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. FULLER: Papers to accompany bill for the relief of David A. Sturtevant—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Emily Towne, of Streator, Ill., favoring amendment of Sherman antitrust law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of American Prison Association, for appropriation to assist work of the International Prison Commission—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GOULDEN: Petition of Federation of Jewish Organizations, praying for appointment of chaplain in army and navy for the religious comfort and well-being of Jewish citizens enlisted in the army and navy—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Federation of Jewish Organizations of New York City, favoring appointment of chaplain in Army, Navy, and Marine Corps for Jewish soldiers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Merchants' Association of New York City, favoring readjustment of railway rate law—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan: Petition of citizens of Van Buren County and Allegan County, Mich., against passage of Senate bill 3940—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of citizens of Van Buren County, Mich., favoring establishment of postal savings banks and a parcels post—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HARRISON: Petition of New York Public Library, favoring retention of all books for public libraries on free list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HASKINS: Petition of F. J. Fairbanks and others, of Newfane, Vt., for parcels-post delivery on rural routes and for postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HOWELL of New Jersey: Petition of Shrewsbury Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Red Bank, N. J., for parcels post on rural delivery routes and for postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, papers to accompany bills for relief of Matthew M. Finch and Max Sekel—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOWELL of Utah: Petitions of citizens of Eureka, citizens of Salt Lake City, and citizens of Mercur, all in the State of Utah, in favor of retention of present tariff duties on lead and lead ores—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HULL of Iowa: Petition of Alex. Barbour and others, against decision of Justice Wright—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of R. A. Bridgewater—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. JAMES: Papers to accompany bill for the relief of John A. Flanary, of Crittenden County, Ky.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of Federation of Jewish Organizations, for a chaplain in army and navy for Jewish soldiers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Merchants' Association of New York, against legislation inimical to the well-being of railways—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MOON of Tennessee: Paper to accompany bills for relief of James F. Campbell (H. R. 24262)—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Sarah A. Weber—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SULZER: Petition of American Prison Association, favoring suitable appropriation for the entertainment of the Congress of the International Prison Commission—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SWASEY: Petition of sundry citizens of Bath, Richmond, and Brunswick, all in the State of Maine, against passage of Senate bill 3940—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petitions of citizens of Auburn, Fryeburg, West Paris, Dresden, North Buckfield, Topsham, Peru, Hiram, and Andover, all in the State of Maine, for parcels post on rural free-delivery routes and for postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. VREELAND: Petitions of Fredonia Grange, No. 353, of Fredonia, Ellery Grange, No. 353, of Bemus Point, Union Grange, No. 244, of Jamestown, Portland Grange, No. 2, of Brockton, Patrons of Husbandry; residents of Cattaraugus, Arkport, and Ellicottville, all in the State of New York, against S. 3940 (Sunday observance in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of business men of Olean, N. Y., against parcels-post and postal savings banks laws—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of officers of the Men's Club of the First Congregational Church, of Jamestown, N. Y., for passage of Bacon original-package bill, etc.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, January 10, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by Hon. Alexander McDowell, Clerk of the House, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 10, 1909.

I hereby designate Hon. DAVID J. FOSTER, of Vermont, as Speaker pro tempore for this day.

J. G. CANNON, Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chaplain will offer prayer.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Almighty God, and adore Thy holy name for that spark of divinity which differentiates man from the rest of the animal creation and makes him a child of the living God, and which has ever been pushing him onward and upward from savagery to civilization, from darkness to light, from the animal to the spiritual, which brings him nearer to Thee. We thank Thee for the strong, the pure, the noble, the brave who have left the impress of their characters on their respective ages and left behind them their works as a testimonial of their worth.

We are here to-day in the memory of one who was ever found in the vanguard of that eternal march—broad in his conceptions, strong in his convictions, pure in his motives. As a business man, furthering great enterprises, he was ever found pure, honest, and upright in his dealings with his fellow-men; a soldier brave and gallant, who thought it not too much to offer his life, if need be, a sacrifice on the altar of his country; a statesman strong and wise, serving the people of his State and Nation with singular fidelity and ability wherever he was called to serve. We mourn him, but not as dead, for we shall think of him as faring on in some one of God's many mansions. "We leave this and straightway enter another mansion of the King's, more grand and beautiful."

And now, O God, our Heavenly Father, comfort, we beseech Thee, those near to him in the ties of friendship and in the bonds of love and affection, that they may look forward with bright anticipations to a meeting with him, where they shall stay in his presence forever. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EULOGIES ON HON. REDFIELD PROCTOR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the order for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the House shall meet at 12 o'clock noon on Sunday, January 10, 1909, which day and hour is hereby set apart for memorial addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. REDFIELD PROCTOR, late a United States Senator from the State of Vermont.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolutions and ask for their consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 481.

Resolved, That in pursuance of the special order heretofore adopted, the House proceed to pay tribute to the memory of the Hon. REDFIELD PROCTOR, late Senator from the State of Vermont.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished career and his great service to his country as a United States Senator, the House, at the conclusion of the memorial proceedings of this day, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The question was taken, and the resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Speaker, since I entered this Hall as a Member of the Fifty-seventh Congress the Angel of Death has so often appeared and taken from us some Member of this body or of the Senate it would seem that the mortality of its membership had been far greater than that in other occupations of life. The emblems of mourning and the beautiful flowers are scarcely removed and become withered before we behold the like upon the desk of another loved colleague and friend. But amidst our grief let us remember that—

> This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth
> The tender leaves of hope, to-morrow blossoms,
> And bears his blushing honors thick upon him;
> The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,
> And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
> His greatness is a ripening, * * * he falls—

Like autumn leaves that enrich our mother earth.

As our friends, one by one, are called to cross over "the river of human years," it is sufficient to remind us that—

> We, too, shall come to that riverside,
> One by one;
> We are nearer its waters each eventide,
> One by one;
> We can hear the noise and dash of the stream,
> Now and again through life's deep dream;
> Sometimes the floods all its banks o'erflow,
> Sometimes in ripples the small waves go,
> One by one.

On Wednesday, the 4th day of last March, as the sun was sinking behind the western hills, the Hon. REDFIELD PROCTOR, senior Senator from the State of Vermont, answered the invitation to "Come up higher," to be numbered with—

> The armies of the ransomed saints
> That throng the steeps of light.

He was here at the Capitol the Thursday previous attending to his ordinary duties; but feeling somewhat indisposed, he returned to his apartments in the Champlain about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, retired to his bed, and a physician was summoned. His condition was not considered dangerous until a day or two before he passed away. His death, therefore, was quite unexpected, except to the members of his family who attended at his bedside and those of his most intimate friends. On Friday, March 6, a committee of the Senate and House were present at Proctor, Vt., as the last sad rites were rendered by the living to the dead, and saw his mortal remains deposited in the family mausoleum, standing within the shadow of the mountains he loved so well. That he possessed the respect and confidence of the people of his native State is evidenced by his repeated elections to positions of high honor and trust. That he was well loved was fully attested by the presence at his funeral obsequies of more than 4,000 people—representative men from the different walks of life and from every county in the State. "Our grand old Senator is gone; where can we find such another one?" is an expression that was frequently heard among those there assembled.

I am not informed that he was connected by membership in any particular church organization. This much, however, I can say: He was tolerant in his views of all religious bodies, gave liberally to their maintenance and support, observed the Sabbath, and by natural instinct was religiously inclined. How fitting, then, it is that we meet to speak words in commemoration of his life, character, and distinguished services upon the quiet peace of the Sabbath day.

It had been my good fortune to enjoy the personal acquaintance and friendship of Senator PROCTOR ever since October, 1862, being officers and members of the same brigade in the civil war. That friendship, highly valued by me, became more intimate during the seven years immediately preceding his death. I found in him not friendship only, but the wise and willing counselor in all matters connected with my official duties here in Washington and as a Member of this House. I sincerely believed in him. He was faithful and just unto me, and I most deeply feel his loss.

> Oh, for the touch of a vanished hand
> And the sound of a voice that is still.

For nearly fifty years Senator PROCTOR had been prominently identified with the civil, military, and business life of his State and the Nation. Therefore, in speaking of him on this occasion I feel that little can be said that has not already been spoken or written of him since he entered upon his eternal rest.

He was of English ancestry, the first in his line coming to this country being Robert Proctor, who was a freeman of Concord, Mass., as early as 1643. His grandfather, Leonard Proctor, was an officer in the Continental Army in the war of the Revolution, and became one of the early settlers of Cavendish, Vt., where he founded the settlement in that town known as Proctorsville. He was the son of Jabez and Betsey (Parker) Proctor, and was born in the village of Proctorsville June 1, 1831. His early education was obtained in the public schools of that place, and he completed his studies at the academy in Derby, Vt., preparatory to his entrance in Dartmouth College, from which institution he graduated in 1851, and three years later it conferred upon him the degree of master of arts. Choosing the profession of the law, he entered the Albany (N. Y.) Law School, graduating therefrom in 1859; was admitted to the bar that year at Albany, N. Y., and also at Woodstock, the county seat of Windsor County, Vt. The following year found him in the active practice of his profession at Boston, Mass., in the office of his cousin, the Hon. Isaac F. Redfield, a former chief judge of the supreme court of Vermont.

In 1861, upon the secession of the 11 Southern States from the Federal Union, and war being declared by the General Government for the suppression of the rebellion, moved by that same spirit of loyalty and devotion to his country that actuated his grandfather to go to its defense, and to preserve and perpetuate that Union of States secured under the provisions of our constitutional charter, he laid aside his books, dismissed his clients, returned to his native State, and enlisted in the Third Regiment of Vermont Volunteer Infantry. June 19, 1861, he was commissioned first lieutenant and quartermaster of that regiment by the governor, and the following July was appointed to the staff of Gen. William F. (Baldy) Smith, where he exhibited great executive ability in the organization and preparation of raw troops for active service. In October of that year he was promoted to be major of the Fifth Regiment Vermont Infantry, served with them during that unfortunate and disastrous campaign of General McClellan in his attempt to reach the city of Richmond, Va., by the way of the peninsula, and here he won distinction by the excellent judgment he displayed under trying circumstances, his coolness, and bravery. In consequence of the severe hardships he endured among the miasmatic swamps through which he marched and fought in that campaign he contracted a serious illness, which compelled his resignation, and he returned home to secure restoration of health.

In the fall of 1862, with health restored, he was again ready to enter the service of his country, and by reason of his past military experience and his then recognized ability to organize, discipline, and command, on September 26, 1862, he was elected by the line officers of the Fifteenth Regiment of Vermont Volunteers to be its colonel and as such was duly commissioned by the governor. This regiment with the Twelfth, Thirteenth, Fourteenth, and Sixteenth regiments of Vermont troops composed the Second Vermont Brigade, which, under the command of Gen. George J. Stannard, a Vermonter, won imperishable renown on the third day of the battle of Gettysburg by their gallant and successful assault upon the right flank of the flower of the Confederate army under General Pickett in its splendid charge of nearly a mile across that blood-stained plain with the purpose of breaking through the federal center. Knowing Senator PROCTOR as I did, I have often thought that had he been living May 10, 1775, and had arrived at man's estate, he would either have led the Green Mountain boys or marched side by side with Gen. Ethan Allen in that ever-to-be-remembered assault upon the British fortress at Ticonderoga and compelled its surrender "In the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress."

Having served his country with bravery and distinction in the field during the civil war, he again returned to his native State, and soon thereafter entered into a law copartnership with Col. Wheelock G. Veazey, of the Sixteenth Vermont Regiment, subsequently a judge of the supreme court, and for several years preceding his death a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission. They opened their office in Rutland, Vt., secured a large and profitable clientage, and took a commanding position as a law firm at the bar. Had Senator PROCTOR continued in the practice of the law he would have ranked with the best and foremost of the lawyers of the State, but he was destined to spend the better portion of his life in other and wider fields of usefulness and labor.

In 1869 he was appointed receiver of the Sutherland Falls Marble Company, and in settling the affairs of this concern he exhibited great capacity for business, which he found more congenial than the work in a law office or the trial of causes in the courts. In 1880, the affairs of this company having been adjusted under his wise management, it was consolidated with the Rutland Marble Company under the name of the Vermont Marble Company, in which he secured an interest, became its president and manager, and under his direction its business was increased and enlarged and became, as it still is, the largest marble industry in the world. When he entered into public life he gave up his active connection and participation with its affairs, and since then his son, Fletcher D. Proctor, the last ex-governor of Vermont, has been its president and active and responsible business head.

The public career of Senator PROCTOR commenced in 1866, when he was elected one of the selectmen of the town of Rutland. In 1867 and 1868 he was a member of the state legislature, and the latter year he was a member of the committee on ways and means. In 1874 he was chosen to the state senate, and was president pro tempore of that body. In 1876 he was elected lieutenant-governor for the ensuing biennial term, and in 1878 was elected governor for the term of two years. In 1884 he was a delegate at large to the Republican national convention. In 1888 he was chairman of the Vermont delegation in the Republican national convention that nominated Benjamin Harrison, and he was also chairman of the delegation in the convention that nominated William McKinley for President. In September, 1888, he was elected the first representative of the new town of Proctor, which the previous legislature had created and named in his honor. He was unanimously recommended by the members of that legislature for a position in the Cabinet, and the following March was appointed by President Harrison as Secretary of War. In that position he won a national reputation by his conduct of the office. Under his administration that department was placed on a strictly business basis. He was painstaking and methodical in whatever he did or directed to be done by others. He was an able and trusted counselor of the President, and his opinion upon all public questions had great weight with his associates assembled about the cabinet table.

In November, 1891, he resigned his office of Secretary of War to accept an appointment to the United States Senate to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of the Hon. George F. Edmunds; was elected United States Senator by the legislature in October, 1892, and was reelected in 1898, and again in 1904, and had he lived his term would not have expired until March 4, 1911. During his senatorial career he served upon many important committees, notably those of Agriculture and Forestry, of which he was many years its chairman, Military Affairs, Post-Offices and Post-Roads, Fisheries, and Revision of the Laws of the United States. It is in the committee room that the greatest and most important legislation is done, and it was here that Senator PROCTOR performed his most laborious work, and did it with such efficiency and faithfulness that his recommendations were rarely questioned. I have often heard it remarked by conferees of the House who had been in conference with him over some disagreeing vote of the two bodies that they generally found themselves agreeing with him by reason of the clear, concise, and convincing argument he was always prepared to present in behalf of the Senate's contention.

He was not an orator according to the general acceptation of the word. He never talked to the galleries, nor was he ever known to play to the grand stand. It was but occasionally he participated in the debates of the Senate, but whenever he did he was thoroughly equipped, and spoke with deliberation and from a high sense of duty. He had made careful study of the Constitution of the United States and the debates of the able men who composed the convention that wrote and adopted it. He recognized to the fullest extent the absolute independence of each of the three coordinate branches of government, and could not brook any attempted interference by the one with the well-defined duties and prerogatives of either of the other.

On the 22d day of last February, after the Farewell Address of George Washington to the American people had been read in the Senate, at the invitation of Senator PROCTOR I lunched with him, and while waiting to be served he gave me a printed copy of that address, which I have since retained, having that portion wherein he warned his countrymen of the danger which was likely to come to the Nation from an unwarranted interference by the Executive with either of the other branches of the Government marked with heavy black pencil lines. He was a man of strong convictions, and while he was gentle in disposition as a lamb he had the courage of a lion. No one ever knew him to—

> Crook the pregnant hinges of the knee
> That thrift may follow fawning.

Whenever Senator PROCTOR addressed the Senate upon any important and far-reaching proposition his speeches were prepared with great care and delivered without the least semblance of passion, but in the most quiet manner and without any attempt at display. It was not his purpose to stir men's blood, but to appeal to their reason and better judgment. In January, 1897, the Senate having under consideration a proposed amendment to the Constitution providing for a presidential term of six years and rendering him ineligible to a reelection, he delivered a speech in favor of the proposition that gave him high rank in statesmanship. He insisted that reeligibility was wrong in theory and vicious in practice, inasmuch as it resulted in making use of the patronage of the office of the President for the promotion of his renomination and reelection, or, at the least, subjected the President to the imputation of such use; that the proposed amendment if adopted and ratified would thoroughly divorce the legislative and executive branches of the Government, so earnestly desired and fully purposed by the framers of the Constitution. He strongly insisted that—

> The very basis of the Constitution is the complete separation of the legislative and executive powers.

As a further argument in favor of the amendment, even though a President did not aspire for a reelection, the fact that he was eligible, he urged—

> Promotes captious criticism. It induces distrust of the President's disinterestedness and patriotism, and it belittles and detracts from the dignity of the office itself. And not only does it weaken the President and his administration at home, but the possibility of reeligibility actually weakens the effectiveness of our foreign policy. In the beginning of our present Venezuelan crisis the most common comment abroad upon the patriotic position taken by the President was that it was an electioneering dodge. Thus does the world discount an official expression of the patriotic sentiment of our people because, in view of the possibility of the reelection of the President, the outside world also has become accustomed to look to that fact for the deepest motives of a President's actions.

And in conclusion he said:

> In what I have said of the dangers of the present situation, I speak with great deference of the great men who have been candidates for reelection. I doubt not but that they have been as little influenced and controlled by the selfish considerations mentioned as one placed in so inconsistent a position could be. The difficulty, however, is that the position is inherently an inconsistent and antagonistic one. One person can not in the nature of things be at the same time a perfect President and a presidential candidate. I believe that the people are becoming more and more dissatisfied with having the high office of President used, or having it possible to use it, to prolong the incumbent's tenure. They are becoming more and more dissatisfied with seeing presidential campaigns run from the White House. It will be tried just as long as it is possible. It will only cease when the Congress and the States by constitutional amendment return to the spirit of the Constitution and the original plan of the framers. Then no personal ambition of a Chief Magistrate can ever compete with his ambition to serve his country well and leave an honorable record for his administration.

These are strong words and never would have been uttered by a timid, time-serving man. In this instance they came from a man of courage, one who loved his country and spoke from a sincere desire to promote its best interests in the long future.

Another speech, characteristic of him and a conspicuous instance of his power and influence, was delivered in the Senate March 16, 1898, soon after he had returned from Cuba, where he had been for the purpose of informing himself as to the true condition of affairs in that island. What he saw there he told the Senate, and through that body the whole world was made acquainted with the frightful conditions then existing. This speech thoroughly aroused the indignation of the people of the entire country, and they firmly resolved that the good right arm of the Government should be used to wipe from off this hemisphere the last vestige of Spanish cruelty and oppression. The speech was widely circulated; and while there was nothing in the least sensational about Senator PROCTOR, it created the most intense sensation throughout the length and breadth of the land, and had much to do toward hastening the beginning of that short and decisive warfare between us and the Kingdom of Spain. It has been claimed by some that this speech was his greatest effort; it was carefully prepared, and he read it from manuscript. In speaking of Senator PROCTOR the evening of his death ex-Senator Chandler, of New Hampshire, is reported to have said:

Cuban freedom owes much to REDFIELD PROCTOR. It was my happy fortune to be presiding in the chair of the Senate when he narrated in simple but powerful language his observations in Cuba, where General Weyler's cruelties were arousing the United States. This speech precipitated our declaration of war against Spain and was the great political act of Senator PROCTOR's long and useful life.

For the future stability and prosperity of our beloved country, yea, to its everlasting honor, one may well hope that our citizenship of to-day and that which shall come after us, and especially those who shall be advanced to public station, may be as thoroughly equipped with that rugged honesty, patriotic devotion to country, and courage to say and do the thing that is right as was so beautifully exemplified in the life, character, and public services of the Hon. REDFIELD PROCTOR, of Vermont.

Senator PROCTOR was married May 26, 1858, to Miss Emily J. Dutton, daughter of Hon. Salmon F. and Sarah J. Dutton, of Cavendish, Vt., and five children were born to them. He is survived by his widow, two sons, Fletcher D. Proctor and Redfield Proctor, and one daughter, Emily D. Proctor, who mourn the loss of a kind husband and indulgent father. He was fortunate in business and accumulated a large estate, but his benevolence was unlimited, as his munificent gifts to the town of Proctor and to his State fully attest.

His work is done. The trust he held so many years is at an end. He has laid aside his cares forever, and his mortal remains now rest in peace in his Green Mountain home. His spirit, the immortal part of man, has gone up on high, but the memory of him remains with us still. Who will be the next to join him none of us can say. But we feel the assurance that we shall meet in that "better land," and we can comfort ourselves with the belief that the last of earth is but the beginning of everlasting life.

We are nearer home to-day
Than we've ever been before;
Nearer our Father's house,
Where many mansions be,
Nearer the great white throne,
Nearer the crystal sea,
Nearer the bounds of life,
Where we lay our burdens down;
Nearer leaving the cross,
Nearer gaining the crown.
Father, be near when my feet
Are slipping o'er the brink,
For it may be I am nearer home,
Nearer now than I think.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, it is a common saying that in America every political career is a tragedy. Like many other broad generalizations the saying is not to be taken as literally true. And yet there are so pitifully many instances in which it is true that the exceptions, when by some happy chance they do occur, always challenge our attention. The rewards of public life—not the financial returns, for in the main they are meager, but the rewards that are found in the opportunity to serve one's friends and one's country, in the rare privilege of association with the "choice and master spirits of the age," in the intimate contact with large affairs, in the satisfaction of having a hand in the shaping of big events—all these combine to give an allurement to public life which is sufficient to attract men of the first class in character and ability to the public service. And so the ranks are always full. From every walk of life they come—because in America there is no office-holding caste—from the pulpit and the platform, from the bench and the bar, from the farm and the forge, from the store and the countinghouse and the factory, from every class and calling, from every trade and occupation, the fascination of public life draws them. Earnest, honest, high-minded men they are, with exceptions so few as to be negligible; men sincerely desiring to play their part well, to serve their fellow-men truly, to deserve well of the Republic, and to build for themselves an honorable fame.

Their work begins, and with every day of its continuance there is a consciousness of growing power that it is sweet to feel. With every year there is a broader outlook and a stronger grasp. And with every year also the lure of the life grows stronger and ambition mounts higher. And then comes the end. A new issue arises, or a new party comes suddenly into popular favor, or people get "tired of hearing Aristides called The Just," and the fair house, which the man had builded of hopes and aspirations and ambitions, comes tumbling about his ears. When he seems at the very climax of his powers, when he is nearer than ever before to doing the great things he had longed to do, or when, perhaps, the grand prize toward which for years he had been bending every ambition seems fairly within his grasp, the blow falls, and the scepter is stricken from his hand. That is the common lot; that is the average career in American politics, and who shall say it is not a tragedy?

But now and then, to one man or two in a decade or in a generation, there falls a happier lot. Now and then a career is run, even in this shifting and turbulent ocean of American politics, which seems to find throughout its entire course only smooth seas and favoring breezes. Now and then destiny seems to choose a favorite to whom it permits nothing to be denied, to whom come place and power to match ambition, to whom opportunity, instead of being a rare and haughty visitor, is a perpetual bond servant, at whose approach all doors, unbidden, stand ajar.

To this exceptional class without doubt belongs the remarkable career of REDFIELD PROCTOR. In war, enlisting as a private, commissioned almost immediately as a lieutenant, he passed easily and rapidly through the intervening grades to the head of the regiment. In peace, the record, as we have just heard it given by his distinguished colleague on this floor, is even more remarkable. Selectman in the common council of his home city, member of the state legislature, member of the state senate, lieutenant-governor, governor, Secretary of War, Senator of the United States, first by appointment and three times afterwards by election, in the intervals of public service accumulating by private enterprise an ample fortune. Forty years and more of unbroken triumph. Surely a fortunate and happy career, for the record does not disclose a single important reverse.

But because the word "fortunate" comes readily to the mind as we contemplate this long succession of unbroken victories, let it not be imagined that these victories are to be attributed to mere chance. An enlisted man, even in a volunteer regiment, does not in a single year mount to a colonelcy by chance. The old Green Mountain State, filled as it is with keen, clear-headed, well-trained men, does not trust to luck for its lawgivers, its governors, its representatives in the Senate of the United States. No, it is only remarkable qualities that can account for this remarkable career.

There was the physical endowment to begin with—the towering frame and the faultless organism handed down through long generations of men and women who worked hard and lived soberly and feared God.

And then there was the quick and powerful and finely balanced intellect, trained in the best schools of his day, trained in the study and practice of an arduous and exacting profession, trained in the transaction of great business affairs, trained in the incessant clash and conflict of a mighty forum.

And then there was the steadfast soul, to which doubt and fear were equal strangers, which the terrors of battle could not shake, nor the luxuries of peace debase, which disappointment could not embitter, nor success unduly exalt. The soul of—

One who never turned his back, but marched breast forward;
Never doubted clouds would break;
Never dreamed, though right were worsted, wrong would triumph;
Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better.

And crowning all there was integrity, so native to the man, so ingrained with every fiber of his being, so clearly a part of him that men never thought to inquire about it. So far as I can learn, throughout all the long years during which he walked in the white blaze of public life it was never questioned, even by those who might have profited by such questioning, had there been the least basis upon which it could rest.

Physical strength and courage, a trained and powerful mind, a soul captain always of itself and without fear, a character spotless and unassailable—that was the superb equipment with which this friend of ours, this great man, was panoplied. What wonder is it that in war and in peace victories came easily. He conquered by the inevitable operation of the implacable law which gives to him that hath, even as some are doomed to defeat by that same law which taketh away from him that hath not. He understood well the apparent paradox of the Master, "He that would be chief among you, let him become the servant of all." His life was given to the service of his fellow-men, and because he could render the greatest service he took his place among those who sit in the seats of the mighty.

My association with Senator PROCTOR was for the most part purely official, brought about through our membership on corresponding committees in the House and Senate, and therefore I can not claim that intimate acquaintance which would authorize me to speak of his home life or the qualities which have their source in the heart rather than in the head of a man. And yet I recall one glimpse into this sacred inner chamber which I can not but believe revealed qualities and characteristics which had their permanent abiding place there.

It was when I offered him my congratulations upon the election of his son to the governorship of Vermont, remarking as I did so the satisfaction a father must feel when one of his children is so honored. Instantly there came a look of tenderness into his eyes that I had never seen there before. The rugged rough-hewn face, which I could never look upon without thinking of the granite hills among which he was born, softened into a smile that transformed it, and with a voice which made no attempt to conceal his emotion he thanked me and added:

> My own career has been a fortunate one; but I can say with all candor that no honor that ever came to me, no political victory of my own, ever brought me a tithe of the satisfaction I have felt in the success of my son.

And so he was thrice fortunate—fortunate in the possession of rare faculties, fortunate in finding his way easily into just that department of public life which afforded the best field for the exercise of those faculties, fortunate in realizing to the full a father's hope and pride. Surely life was kind to him.

But may we not say also that death was kind to him?

> O eloquent, just, and mighty death—

Apostrophizes Sir Walter Raleigh—

> O eloquent, just, and mighty death! Whom none could advise, thou hast persuaded; what none hath dared, thou hast done; and whom all the world hath flattered, thou only hast cast out of the world and despised. Thou hast drawn together all the far-stretched greatness, all the pride, cruelty, and ambition of man, and covered it all over with these two narrow words, "Hic jacet."

That is the common conception of death—grim, relentless, terrible.

But to this friend of ours surely he was not so.

Senator PROCTOR had lived his life—a long life, filled with triumphs, but filled also with many labors. In war and in peace he had served his country well. The climax of his powers and of his achievement had been reached, and while his interest in life had not flagged nor his mental grasp appreciably weakened, yet he could not but realize the abatement of his bodily strength. Had even another decade been granted him he could hardly have hoped to build any higher the fair temple of his fame, while the added years might have brought him, almost certainly would have brought him, added infirmities and the grief which can not but oppress the man who has been strong when he is forced to realize that the days of his strength are gone. How could death have been kinder to him than to come when it did, swiftly and with little pain, while the sun was still shining, while he was still surrounded with "honor, love, obedience, troops of friends," while large affairs were still within his grasp, while the harness of duties which long use had made essential to his happiness was still upon his shoulders? To such a man, coming at such a time, Death was a friend and not an enemy, bearing in his hand, not the sickle of destruction, but the scepter of immortality. For "to him who meets it with an upright heart," death is—

> A quiet haven, where his shattered bark
> Harbors secure, till the rough storm is past.
> Perhaps a passage, overhung with clouds
> But at its entrance; a few leagues beyond
> Opening to kinder skies and milder suns,
> And seas pacific as the soul that seeks them.

Remembering, therefore, the quality of his life and the manner of his death, may we not say of REDFIELD PROCTOR, as Bunyan said of Valiant-for-Truth—

> And so he passed over; and all the trumpets sounded for him on the other side.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, in the death of Senator PROCTOR the Commonwealth of Vermont lost one of her most useful and distinguished citizens; the Senate of the United States one of its efficient and active members, and the country at large a statesman who had served his country well and faithfully.

As member of the house of representatives of his State, and state senator, and president of the body; as lieutenant-governor and then governor of Vermont, he measured up to every duty and responsibility imposed by a loyal and confiding people. Appointed Secretary of War by President Harrison in March, 1889, he discharged the duties of this high position with great credit until 1891, when he resigned from the Cabinet to accept the appointment as United States Senator to succeed George F. Edmunds. In October, 1892, he was elected by the Vermont legislature to fill both the unexpired and the full terms; was elected October, 1898, to succeed himself, and reelected October, 1904.

Our colleague, after a long and useful life, fell asleep with his harness on.

I can testify that he was vigilant, active, and efficient. For several years I was thrown with him in conference of the two Houses on the agricultural bill.

Everything affecting the various interests of the farmer was carefully considered. The Department of Agriculture had in Senator PROCTOR an earnest supporter, who looked carefully into every provision of the bill for its maintenance. His strong, practical mind and business habits enabled him to grasp the salient points in every problem with perfect ease. His large experience in life gave him a breadth of view that made him agreeable and pleasant in conference, as well as liberal and fair-minded in settling all differences between the conferees of the House and Senate.

Senator PROCTOR was a soldier as well as a statesman. He was deeply interested in everything pertaining to the heroic struggle of 1861–1865. He held in memory interesting reminiscences of that period and related the same with zest and earnestness. He was a staff officer, and held the rank of major and then of colonel in the Federal Army. I did not have the honor of his acquaintance during those days, although I was doubtless often close to him in a sense. It would have been a pleasure then to entertain him, as I often did some of his comrades.

On one occasion this hospitality was reciprocated, and I was reminded of this at Proctorville when I attended the funeral of our colleague, for there I met the aged General Howard, of the Eleventh Corps, whose guest I was at Harpers Ferry. It was a great pleasure to see him again under circumstances not quite so embarrassing.

The cordiality and friendship between the surviving officers and soldiers of two contending armies years after the conflict had ended is something unique in the world's history. Could the settlement of the conflicting interests of the sections have been committed entirely to the citizen soldiery of the two armies, a perfectly amicable adjustment would have been made within a few years after the termination of the struggle.

Senator PROCTOR was a soldier from necessity, and his environment placed him in the federal column. Had he been a native of Virginia or Mississippi, with his strong convictions and high sense of duty and devotion to his State, he would have been with the vanquished instead of the victors on the heights of Gettysburg.

Life is full of compensations, Mr. Speaker, and one of the many that comes to a patient and self-denying Representative here is the firm and fast friendships formed with our colleagues. Men of different sections, raised under entirely different environments, differing in thought and sentiment, are thrown together and learn to respect the opinions and admire the qualities of mind and heart of those whom they had previously misjudged or looked upon with indifference. Respecting Senator PROCTOR for his manly qualities, I soon learned after being thrown with him closely that he possessed virtues of mind and heart that easily accounted for his rapid promotion in political life as well as his exceedingly prosperous business career.

I happened to be one of the House committee to attend his funeral at Proctorville, Vt. It was a sad and impressive scene. A great concourse of people were gathered, including jurists, statesmen, lawyers, civil-war veterans, and business associates. The church was too small to accommodate the hosts of friends who wished to attend the services. Three thousand employees of the Vermont Marble Company were there to pay their respects to a departed friend and benefactor. They stood with uncovered head in the face of a New England blizzard that sung a mournful dirge as if in sympathy with the King of Terrors, who had struck down Vermont's foremost citizen.

The services were very simple, but impressive. Included in the pallbearers were two sons, one of them the governor of the State. This custom, unknown in my section, impressed me deeply. To my mind came the thought that better than honors and riches he had won; better than large wealth such as he had acquired; yea, better than the benefactions he had been able to bestow upon the hardy yeomanry who lined up on the roadside to pay their last respects, was the deep satisfaction he enjoyed in these devoted sons, who, holding up his hands in life, piously bore his remains to their last resting place.

I can not better close this brief tribute to my friend and colleague than by quoting a just and eloquent tribute paid him by one of the Vermont papers at the time of his death:

> In the fullness of years, crowned with honors seldom bestowed on any man, beloved throughout his native State that he has so ably and faithfully served, honored and respected by his countrymen and the whole world, he has entered into that rest prepared for the faithful of earth's mortals, and his works shall live after him as a fitting and everlasting memorial.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I feel it my duty to take the floor to speak a word of tribute to the memory of a friend whom I loved, and to express also my sense of the loss which the country sustained by the departure of a statesman who had rendered her distinguished service. It was my good fortune to be well acquainted with REDFIELD PROCTOR. He and I were graduated from the same college, and it was to this circumstance, doubtless, that my opportunity to know him well was due, for he had a way of extending a species of kindly and genial guardianship over all who bore to him any of the ordinary relations of life. We were separated, however, in college by a good many years, for he graduated in the year in which I was born; but his was one of those rare spirits endowed with perennial youth, and disparity in years made no difference with him. He had that quality of freshness and kindliness in his intercourse with men, that fountain of gayety that made him attractive to those who were younger as well as to those who were older than himself.

I was able to understand him better, because I had been much in the State, the ideal little Commonwealth which he represented here. Upon a landscape of unsurpassed beauty there dwell in Vermont a people of heroic mold. Her population is made up perhaps in larger proportion of the old Revolutionary stock, of men who were identified with the first settlement of this country, and who fought the war which established our independence than that of any other State of the North, and possibly of any other State in the Union. She has a history of remarkable charm—worthy of the race which inhabits her noble hills and beautiful valleys. We admire the heroism of those men of Vermont, who, in 1775, asserted their independence, not only of Great Britain, but also of the other colonies, and especially of the two or three neighboring ones which claimed sovereignty over her territory. Vermont was a little republic in herself, independent of all the rest of mankind, and when it seemed best to join with the other colonies to fight the common foe her people did not even stop to pass the code of laws which were necessary for governing their territory, but they first devoted themselves, and with supreme effect, to the great struggle out of which the Nation came.

REDFIELD PROCTOR was the very fitting product, I might say the fine flowering out, of that race. He had conspicuously the qualities which it had displayed. He had great intellectual power, a talent for affairs, good sense, good humor, and, above all, a kindly heart. I remember well his service in the Republican national convention in 1888, when he was chairman of the delegation from his State and displayed his characteristic political sagacity. There were many candidates before that convention, and there was no candidate who commanded the undivided support even of the delegation from his own State; but I remember distinctly how Mr. PROCTOR on each vote, as chairman of the delegation, announced that Vermont cast her eight votes for Benjamin Harrison. It was the only State that cast its vote solidly upon every ballot for Benjamin Harrison, and he was finally the nominee of the convention. It was very fitting and proper that REDFIELD PROCTOR should be made a member of Harrison's Cabinet, and he served there with great distinction and with great benefit to the country.

His colleague in this House, who has just spoken, has referred in his eloquent address to some of REDFIELD PROCTOR'S notable speeches in the Senate. I recall another speech which made a deep impression upon my mind, and I believe made a deep impression upon the country. It was his speech in favor of free trade with Porto Rico. Senator PROCTOR did not believe that there should be any tariff barriers imposed between one part of American territory and another part, and he was especially strong in that speech in recalling the old spirit which prevailed at the time of the establishment of this Government and in portraying the ideal wrong of our Republic imposing taxation upon an unrepresented people.

He was not a spectacular, but he was a safe leader—a quiet and effective manager of things and men. He left a permanent impress upon his State. I believe his influence was more comprehensive and far-spreading and that it can fairly be said that he left a permanent impress upon the history of his time.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, among the cherished recollections of my association with Senator REDFIELD PROCTOR is the memory of a visit I had with him one Sunday afternoon. It was one of many which it was my privilege to enjoy near the close of his long and eventful career. The evening shadows were rapidly gathering about him. Calm and serene, conscious of a life well lived, a work well done, in full possession of his every mental faculty, he awaited the call which he knew he would soon hear. With that perfect self-poise with which he had faced every crisis in his life, he discussed the mystery which we call death, and declared that for him it had nothing of dread, nothing from which he shrank. He was indeed glad to live, but no Grecian philosopher or Hebrew prophet ever approached the inevitable fate of man with more of the spirit of one "who wraps the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant dreams" than did he.

In the course of his conversation on that occasion he recalled his mother and related many striking incidents in her life illustrative of those qualities of heart and mind which made her the remarkable woman that she was. He described how, a motherless child of ten, she assumed and discharged toward her younger brothers and sisters, including a babe in arms, a mother's responsibility. He dwelt upon her character, her masterful spirit, her broad vision. He recalled her last words to him when, at the end of a long and faithful life, her mental vision undimmed by the more than four score years of devoted service, she, too, recognized the approach of the inevitable guest and, like a victor, calmly went forth to greet him. Then he spoke of Queen Victoria, of Elizabeth, of Catherine the Great, and, in those deep tones familiar to all who knew him, he declared that it was his profound judgment that there was no place in all the world, however exalted, ever occupied by a woman which his mother could not have filled and would not have adorned.

So REDFIELD PROCTOR came honestly by those qualities of mind and heart which were the source of his strength, his power, his greatness. And surely he was a great man. We may not always agree as to what constitutes greatness. We may sometimes find it difficult to form a definition of it. And it is true that sometimes we fail to recognize it when in our very midst. But no one familiar with his character and career, through association with him, no one permitted to sound the depths of his life, to discern his motives, to note his keen insight, his comprehensive grasp, his profound knowledge of men, his rare judgment, his broad sympathies, his rugged integrity, his devotion in peace and war to the best interests of his State and Nation, could question his title to leadership. But greatness is a comparative term. And to assign him the place among his fellow-men to which he is justly entitled would be difficult to-day even for those who knew him most intimately. But that which we hesitate to declare to-day will be apparent to-morrow. Time sifts the sands of human life and preserves for remembrance the fine gold of the right motive, the high purpose, the noble deed. As we look back through the mists and shadows of the past, we see figures that seem to rise to heroic stature, and we exclaim "There were giants in those days." And as Killington and Pico, those gems of the Green Mountains, which he loved so well, tower majestic above the valley as one recedes from them, so with the passing years, our perspective corrected, we shall see REDFIELD PROCTOR in his larger and truer proportions as citizen, soldier, statesman, and patriot.

There are certain characteristics which, if not necessarily the badge of greatness, indicate wherever found true nobility of soul. Perhaps the first of these is simplicity. Like mercy, it becomes the monarch better than his crown. Lincoln possessed it; and so did Grant. History is full of the story of men who have risen to place and power only to exhibit the ignoble, the ostentatious, the vainglorious.

But Lincoln, the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief of the vast Union forces, clothed with the extraordinary powers which result from war, and surrounded by pomp and circumstance, remained the same plain Abraham Lincoln who split rails to fence his father's farm. And this simplicity of character was strikingly exemplified in the man whom we commemorate to-day. Never from him was there the slightest suggestion of the proverbial "insolence of office." He had, indeed, a keen sense of the exalted positions with which he was honored; but he was moved rather by the responsibility which accompanied them than by the dignity and authority with which he chanced to be clothed. As colonel of his regiment, as governor of his State, as Secretary of War, as United States Senator, at all times and under all circumstances, he was the same plain REDFIELD PROCTOR. He was the spirit of democracy incarnate.

"Not that I am as good as you, but that you are as good as I"— was the spirit which permeated his being, dominated his life, and shaped his conduct of men. He was not merely born among the common people. He was of them. He was continually drawn to them. He was never exalted above them. And at the hour of his death he was enthroned in the hearts of the people of his State.

His was a life of service. This is the key to his character. He was serving his country at the head of his regiment at the age of 31. And the grizzled survivors of that regiment will tell you that by word and deed he plainly indicated that that which was ever uppermost in his mind was the errand upon which he was sent and the sacred duty imposed upon him. Industry and frugality, those good old-fashioned New England traits, characterized his entire life. During those years when he was organizing and building up his vast business, succeeding where others failed, he was not so absorbed in his private affairs as to neglect the duties of his citizenship.

He took his part in the deliberations of the town meeting; he served as selectman in administering the affairs of the town; he represented his town and county in the legislature; he served the State as lieutenant-governor and as governor. In all of these capacities he was the public-spirited citizen and the faithful public servant, jealous of the rights and watchful of the interests of those he served. And throughout his wider public career this desire to serve his people, his State, the Nation, humanity, was the controlling impulse of his nature. He was no dreamer, no doctrinaire. He was severely practical. His voice was seldom heard in debate. But while he laid no claim to oratory, often, when he did speak, as when he described to the Senate the conditions he found in Cuba, he displayed in a high degree the very essence of oratory—the power to persuade by the just and forcible presentation of facts. This attractive field, however, he left to others. It was his great executive ability and his sound, practical common sense that made him the power that he was in the Council Chamber of the Nation. Thus he served his day and generation. Thus he employed the talents that were given him. Thus he fulfilled the great law of service.

He was a typical son of his native State. The jocular remark made years ago, that Vermont was a good State to emigrate from, contained a great truth. That is a good home for the young man to go out from whose choicest decorations are the simple but enduring virtues of human life. Whether that home be a costly mansion, stored with the rarest productions of art and the handiwork of man, or a humble cottage, furnishing scant protection against the winter blasts, the recollection of its faith and love and devotion will go with him farther and abide with him longer and be of infinitely more service to him than aught else he can take with him. And that is a good State to go out from whose cardinal principles are the simple but profound truths of human life and human relationship, and whose citizens see in their State the ancient torch of celestial fire handed down from generation to generation and by them to be passed on unimpaired to the generation yet to come. From its earliest history Vermont has been the cradle of human freedom. The sturdy pioneers who went thither in search of homes fell under the most potent spell of nature.

The wild freedom of the forest, the rugged strength of the hills, the beauty of the valleys, and the fierce struggle with savagery developed within them that stern love of liberty, that resolute independence, and that profound respect for government and all the instrumentalities of human progress which have characterized the true sons of Vermont in all succeeding time. And he was one of those true sons. He loved her hills and valleys. He cherished her history, her traditions, her institutions, her achievements. He was jealous of her good name and fair fame, and throughout his long life his heart beat true to her every interest. He honored the State as the State honored him, and no higher tribute can be paid to his memory than the simple truth that the State is better by reason of his life, his character, his career.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, it is with feelings of much hesitation I address the House in commemoration of the life and services of the late Hon. REDFIELD PROCTOR. Senator PROCTOR was a man of marked characteristics, of great ability, of high ideals, and of marked success in every undertaking of his life. My acquaintance with him began when he was Secretary of War under President Harrison. Coming to Congress a man inexperienced, I found him most helpful to me in the line of work to which so large a part of my congressional career has been devoted. His State recognized his great ability, conferring the high honor of a seat in the United States Senate upon him, thus depriving the War Office of his great administrative capacity. As a Senator he soon reached the very responsible position of chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and at every session I was drawn in close contact with him on great measures affecting that branch of our Government. In all our meetings and discussions he proved himself the same, a man of clear views and wise counsel. He was the type of those great statesmen who wrought wisely and well for the government of our country in the past, a class of men who came up through the various walks of life step by step by the sheer power of their own ability until they reached the highest point. This type of men are rapidly passing away. Happy will it be for the Republic if the changed conditions of our social life can produce as high a type of men as the older and more meager living has given us. Senator PROCTOR's friends saw with great sorrow that in the last few years of his life his strength was broken and that but a few years more would remain for him to work out his destiny. The end came sooner than I, at least, expected, and in offering this tribute to his memory I can only say that he was a man to be trusted and a man to be loved. All hail to his memory, and peace to his ashes.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Members of the House desiring to do so have permission to print the remarks in commemoration of the life and character of SENATOR PROCTOR within twenty days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SCOTT). If there be no objection, that leave will be granted.

There was no objection.

And then, in accordance with the order heretofore adopted, the House (at 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

SENATE.

MONDAY, January 11, 1909.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Edward E. Hale.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal may be dispensed with.

There being no objection, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with, and it was approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—OREGON LANDS.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of the highest privilege, and inasmuch as the Senate to-day occupies the attitude somewhat of a court, and inasmuch as any man who is on trial wants the indictment to which he is to answer put on record, if it is not read, I ask the permission of the Senate to have published in the RECORD, verbatim, seriatim, punctuatim, even as it is paged, the document which I send to the desk, which, I will explain, is the carefully prepared article for the press sent to the acting chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. HALE], in which my integrity and character are impugned. I want the charges to precede the reply.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The communication referred to is as follows:

For publication in morning papers of Jan. 9, 1909.

[Above line in pencil on original.]

№ 593

CONFIDENTIAL.

To be held in confidence, and no portion, synopsis, or intimation to be published or given out until Monday morning, January 11, 1909. Extreme care must be exercised to avoid premature publication.

LETTER OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT TO SENATOR EUGENE HALE, DATED JANUARY 5, 1909, WITH EXHIBITS

LETTER OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT TO SENATOR EUGENE HALE, DATED JANUARY 5, 1909, WITH EXHIBITS.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 5, 1909.

MY DEAR SENATOR HALE: I have requested the different departments of the Government, not only those to whom you sent requests, but those to whom you did not, to give me all the information about the use of special attorneys, special agents, inspectors, etc., in their departments which will enable me to put before you all the facts which, as I understand it, your committee desire to have. I transmit these reports herewith. I call especial attention to the reports of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney-General.

Let me at the outset most earnestly express my cordial agreement with the view that it is not only the right but the duty of Congress to investigate the workings of the Secret Service or detective agents by which alone the Government can effectually safeguard itself against wrongdoing, punish crime, and bring to justice criminals. I am well aware of the liability to abuse inherent in any effective detective system or secret service system; for the measure of the efficiency of the system is also the measure of the seriousness of the abuses of the system if it be applied to wrong purposes or directed in an improper manner. It is eminently to the public interest that there should be vigilant inquiry into the working of this agency both by the heads of the executive departments and by Congress.

It nevertheless remains true that this system is absolutely indispensable if the popular interest is to be adequately safeguarded and wrongdoers taught to fear the law. To show how indispensable detectives are when important work of a confidential character must be done, I refer you to the experience of the Immigration Commission appointed by Congress and largely composed of Senators and Representatives, which has found it absolutely necessary to employ detectives in order to achieve the best results. In my communication of the 4th instant to the Lower House I have set forth at length the reasons why, in my judgment, it is eminently desirable that, in addition to the special detectives or inspection service of each department, there should be in some one department, preferably the Department of Justice, a service which can be used at need in any department in order to achieve the ends I have described. I would like to state here that very frequently accusations have been made to me privately by Members of the two Houses to the effect that the Secret Service has been used as a "police of morals" or to shadow Senators, Congressmen, and other public officials. Hitherto the effort to discover the basis for such allegations has always been fruitless. I should be greatly obliged if any information could be furnished me tending to show any instance where this has been done in times past.

4

Certain of the special agents, inspectors, and the like, in the several departments have a highly specialized work to perform. In the Treasury Department the secret service is especially trained to deal with counterfeiters and the special agents with customs frauds. In the Post-Office Department the corps of inspectors is especially trained and peculiarly fitted to detect criminality or abuses or fraudulent use of the mails in connection with the postal service. In the Interior Department the special agents of the land office and the inspectors of the Indian bureau are trained in similar fashion to meet special needs. In addition, it is urgently necessary, as set forth in Mr. Root's accompanying report, that there shall be a central force of secret-service men who can be detailed for work anywhere in the government service.

Of course, in the investigation of specific frauds we sometimes come across wholly unexpected phases of misconduct. The frauds in the postal department which were unearthed some six years ago, for instance, offer a case in point. My suspicions were first aroused by a report made as to the very extravagant and debauched manner of life of a certain postal employee, this report being made by an official of the secret service in connection with another transaction on which he was at work. So with cases of the abuse of the franking privilege. The post-office never of set purpose inspects any package sent through the mails by a Senator or Congressman, but sometimes through the accidental breaking of such package the contents are exposed, and if they are of a character which makes their transmission by franking privilege illegal, steps are taken by the post-office authorities to collect the full postage. Some of these instances represent real abuses, but in other cases they are due to carelessness or ignorance, and very often doubtless are entirely unknown to the Congressmen themselves, and no good purpose would be served by any publicity in the matter.

But a case has just arisen of a different kind, which it seems to me I should put before you as illustrating in striking fashion the way in which investigations begun by any of these various agents in the strict line of their duty may develop facts of high importance, which the investigators would not in the first instance have sought to discover, which when discovered ought not to be hidden or suppressed, but the devolepment of which may tend to create an erroneous impression that the agents in question were being used for purposes not within the line of their lawful duty.

On the 19th of February, 1908 (see Exhibit A) Senator Tillman called the attention of the Senate to a circular of a syndicate firm for the sale of lands in Oregon, particularly in Coos and Douglas counties, which had been granted to corporations by the Government, the circular stating that the company in possession of the lands was bound to sell them for $2.50 an acre or upon their refusal would be prosecuted by the Government, and that "among those who have spoken for a part of this land is Senator Tillman of South Carolina, the leader of the Democratic party in the Senate, a man who usually gets what he goes after." Senator Tillman denied the statements of this circular and expressed a wish for an investigation, and upon his request the Post-Office Department, through its inspectors, made such an investigation. He stated in reference to this circular:

I have not bought any land anywhere in the West nor undertaken to buy any. I have made some inquiries, as one naturally would, in roaming through the West. I simply want the people of the country to be put on notice that this swindler at Portland has no warrant whatever for endeavoring to inveigle others into his game.

I inclose the circular referred to, as Exhibit B; the report of the post-office inspectors, under date of July 27, 1908, as Exhibit C. This is a confidential report of a type usually not furnished, but in this case the matter is so serious that I feel I should put it before you. I inclose you also, as Exhibits D 1, D 2, D 3, D 4, and D 5, photographic facsimiles of letters and envelopes and telegram from Senator Tillman and his agent, William E. Lee. It appears that on October 20, 1907, Senator Tillman wrote a letter (Exhibit D 3) to Messrs. Reeder and Watkins, of Marshfield, Oreg., who were attorneys representing people who were applicants for the purchase of certain wagon road land grant land; Dorr was a land agent making his filings through Reeder and Watkins. Senator Tillman's letter runs in part as follows:

I wired you from Wausau, Wis., as follows, and write to confirm it. "Wm. E. Lee, my agent, will see you about land. I want nine quarters reserved. Will forward signed applications and money at once. Members of my family are entrymen. Letter follows. (Signed) B. R. T." I write now to say I wired Mr. Lee, who resides at Moscow, Idaho, to go at once to Marshfield and see you about the land, to locate quarters for the seven members of my family who are of age and one for my private secretary, J. B. Knight, whom I desire to let in to the deal and of course he wants a quarter for himself.

The letter continued, stating in detail what was to be done in order to enable the Senator to get the land. The William E. Lee to whom

6

Senator Tillman thus referred as his agent, wrote to Reeder & Watkins, under date of December 7, a letter, photographic copy of which is herewith submitted, marked "Exhibit D 4." In this letter Mr. Lee explains that he had written Senator Tillman fully as to the status of the land matter, advising him that it was "a good gamble," but that the Senator was lecturing, so that he did not get Mr. Lee's letter until a week and a half previously. The letter continues:

In case Senator Tillman gets in on this deal with some good land in the eight quarters we want, I am satisfied that he can be of great help in getting matters started from Washington and cause the Government to get busy and do something along the line you desire. He will set up such a howl that it will be impossible to do otherwise. This will be very important for your whole scheme to have a man of his influence here to aid you at this end of the line. By all means save a lot of good land for us, as we intend to be of more value than any one of the others in this matter.

On the 31st of January, 1908, Senator Tillman introduced in the Senate the following resolution:

Whereas, at divers times, various railroads and other corporations have receive large grants of public lands of the United States, under and by virtue of acts of the Congress, containing conditions to the effect that such lands should be sold to actual settlers only, or in quantities not exceeding for any one purchaser a limit fixed by the act relating thereto, or at a price per acre not greater than an amount mentioned in the act authorizing such grant, to the end that such lands might promptly become the homes of citizens of the United States; and

Whereas it is currently reported and widely believed that the Department of Justice has information to the effect that certain of the corporations aforesaid, or their alleged successors in title, having obtained colorable title to large tracts of land within a State or States of the Pacific slope by virtue of the grants above mentioned, and still holding considerable portions thereof, have violated or evaded the equitable and salutary conditions so as aforesaid imposed by the Congress upon such grants for the public good; yet the Senate is not advised that any action has been taken by the Department of Justice to enforce the said conditions or restore the said lands to the public domain: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the Senate what information, if any, has been received, and what action, if any, has been taken by the Department of Justice with respect to the matters and things in the preamble to this resolution set forth.

and pressed vigorously for immediate action. The resolution being laid over, Senator Tillman introduced the same day a further and joint resolution containing the same recitals, but concluding as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed, authorized, and empowered to take such proceedings or institute such suit or suits on behalf of the United States as may be necessary, appropriate, or expedient to insure a compliance with the above-mentioned conditions or to restore the said lands to the public domain, or to report to the Congress why such action as aforesaid has not been or should not be taken.

7

On February 15 Senator Tillman wrote to Messrs. Reeder and Watkins. A photograph of this letter is also attached as Exhibit D 5. In it I call your attention to the fact that he speaks again of Mr. Lee as his agent and of the correspondence carried on through Mr. Lee. He states that what he has done in stirring up the question of the Oregon land grants to railroads has been done entirely apart from any personal interest he has in the matter, and adds, "although I never would have had my attention called to it but for the investigation as set on foot in connection with the proposed purchase by me of some of the timber land in question. Of course, if I decide to make the tender and go into the lawsuit, I will bear your proposition in mind, but I would have you understand that nothing I do here in the Senate will be done because of any personal purchase of any of the land. If I can succeed in causing the Government to institute suit for the recovery of the land and make it easier for others as well as myself (the italics are mine) to obtain some of it, I shall do it without any regard to the dealings with your firm. I still want to get some of the timber land, if it is possible, and as it is probable that Mr. Lee or some other representative of mine will be in your country in the next two months we will leave the matter of payment for the initiatory steps and subsequent proceedings in abeyance for the present. Any contract we might make will be entirely apart from, and independent of, my work here in the Senate. I will be glad for you to hold in reserve eight of the best quarter sections of which you have definite information and I will in the meantime press the investigation and other work here which will facilitate the final purchase, and in effect obviate the necessity of your making any case in the courts at all.

This letter in which Senator Tillman requested that eight of the best quarter sections be held in reserve for him was written just four days before he announced in the Senate that he had not undertaken to buy any land in the West. It is unnecessary to comment upon his proposal, made in this letter, to use his influence as Senator to force the Government to institute a suit which would make it easy for him personally to obtain some of the land. This letter, purely pertaining to Mr. Tillman's personal and private business, was sent in a franked envelope, of which I attach photographic copy marked "Exhibit D 5."

The assault by Senator Tillman upon Mr. Dorr was, according to the report of the inspectors, a wanton assault made to cover up Senator Tillman's own transactions.

I call your attention to the letter of Mr. Dorr to the Postmaster-General, under date of November 22, 1908 (Exhibit E), in which he asks for relief from the cases which Senator Tillman had brought against him, saying that he had no knowledge that Senator Tillman desired his operations to be kept hidden and secret from general public knowledge. The report of the inspectors seems to indicate that this young man, Mr. Dorr, acted in good faith, but that he used Senator Tillman's application for land as an advertisement.

8

Very truly, yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Acting Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

EXHIBIT A.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator rise to morning business?

Mr. TILLMAN. I rise to a question of privilege, if that be in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, in the last day or two I have had my attention called to a scheme of swindling in which my name is used rather unpleasantly and without the slightest warrant. I feel it of such importance that I want to give as wide publicity to it as possible, so as to stop the rascals from getting any more money.

I have in my hand a circular which has been sent to me from Connecticut, and I have letters from Virginia and from Wisconsin, and one or two other States, all relating to the subject of land grants in Oregon, and mentioning this circular—the circular headed, "How to make $5,000 out of $200." In reading it I find that those responsible for it are using my activity here in calling attention to these land grants and endeavoring to have the Senate investigate and take action in regard to them to advertise a scheme to sell some of these railroad lands. In one place it is stated that "Senator Tillman takes eleven quarters," and in another place is it stated that the lawsuits to be instituted in order to recover these lands are promised to be pressed with great vigor, because I am behind them. As a matter of fact, I have not bought any land anywhere in the West, nor undertaken to buy any. I have made some inquiries, as one naturally would in roaming through the West. I simply want the people of the country to be put on notice that this swindler at Portland has no warrant whatever for endeavoring to inveigle others into his game.

I have telephoned to the Post-Office Department to ask the official in charge of the fraud-order bureau to come down here so that I can present the evidence and endeavor to block this rascal as much as I can. I ask that the circular be printed in the Record in order to give it publicity.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina asks that the communication submitted by him be printed in the Record without reading. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The circular referred to is as follows:

[St. Paul and Pacific Timber Syndicate, 525 Chamber of Commerce Building, Portland, Oreg. Capital, $3,000,000. Bryan R. Dorr, president. Depositories, American National Bank, St. Paul; United States National Bank, Portland. Phones, Main 8550, A 5580. Codes, Western Union, McMullen.]

FEBRUARY 5, 1908.

DIVIDEND NOTICE AND REPORT OF STOCKHOLDERS.

We are presenting herewith to our correspondents and stockholders an unusual opportunity to make a quick profit of about 2,500 per cent, if they are willing to act at once. All the particulars are contained in the circular inclosed, and I urge that you read it carefully.

10

A dividend of 10 per cent was paid on January 2 upon all the preferred stock which has been paid for and issued by December 16, 1907. This dividend was paid out of the earnings on the sale of timber bonds, of which we have an aggregate of nearly $20,000,000 for sale. Dividends are payable twice each year, and we hope materially to increase the dividend rate shortly, owing to the establishment of this Portland office and to the connections which we have formed in New York to represent us there.

During the financial stringency there was a temporary slump in the price of standing timber on the coast, but with the recovery of confidence lumber camps are reopening everywhere and shipments by rail and water are daily increasing in volume. Meanwhile the temporary lower level in timber prices will enable us, being on the spot with ready cash, to secure bargains which will seem absurd six months from now. The large syndicates forming the so-called "lumber trust" are buying as fast as money can be secured and timber located. From this office we shall buy and sell timber and timber bonds, and shall in a few weeks commence the cutting of logs. Our New York representative will be Mr. Clarence M. Smith, of 74 Broadway, banker and broker, and we are very fortunate in securing a firm of such reputation and standing.

Remember, I told you I intended to make a great success of this business. Now, I am going to do it. In fact, I am doing it. Since coming out here I have become convinced that our opportunity is absolutely unlimited. People all over the world are realizing that when the Panama Canal is completed and the wonderful lumber of the Pacific coast, with its Port Orford cedar, sugar pine, and Douglas fir, can be delivered in New York by sailing vessel at low cost and in reasonably short time the price of this stumpage will be higher than it is now in the Central States. In Minnesota mixed stumpage sells at from $10 to $13 per 1,000 feet, and the price for better timber here now is about $2 per thousand. If you can buy timber now, by all means buy it! We have dozens of bargains on our list, costing from $2,000 up per quarter section. Otherwise, by all means take some of the preferred stock in this corporation at $100 for each 100 shares, payable at the rate of 10 per cent down and 5 per cent per month.

Or take up the opportunity offered in the inclosed circular. Read it carefully every word, and wire us at once.

Very truly, yours, BRYAN R. DORR, President.

EXHIBIT B.

[St. Paul and Pacific Timber Syndicate, 525 Chamber of Commerce Building, Portland, Oreg. Capital, $3,000,000. Bryan R. Dorr, President. Depositories, American National Bank, St. Paul; United States National Bank, Portland. Phones, Main 8550; A 5580. Codes, Western Union, McMullen.]

HOW TO MAKE $5,000 OUT OF $200.

To Our Stockholders and Correspondents:

I have just unearthed an opportunity whereby each of my correspondents can obtain a quarter section of the most valuable timber on the Pacific coast with an initial expenditure of $200. This timber is located in Coos and Douglas counties, Oregon, close to tide water, and each quarter section of 160 acres is valued at $5,000 to $15,000 on a very conservative basis. The particulars, including a tale of gigantic greed on the part of the notorious timber thieves, grafters, and land-grabbers of Oregon, are as follows:

Shortly after the civil war the United States Government found it necessary to construct a military wagon road from Coos Bay to Roseburg, in Oregon. In order to obtain a builder for this road they agreed to turn over more than 100,000 acres of the finest government timber land to the State of Oregon, for the Coos Bay Wagon Road Company, on condition that the land should be sold to any one person in quantities of not greater than one quarter section (160 acres) and for a price not exceeding $2.50 per acre. Therefore, in order to make the cost of the road fall upon those persons living along the road and receiving the benefit of its construction, the Congress of the United States, at the session beginning on the 7th day of December, 1868, passed an act donating land to the State of Oregon, which act is hereby set forth, to wit:

COOS BAY WAGON ROAD GRANT.

"An act granting land to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from the navigable waters of Coos Bay to Roseburg, in said State.

"Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and hereby is, granted to the State of Oregon, to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from navigable waters of Coos Bay to Roseburg, alternate sections of public lands, designated by odd numbers, to the extent of three sections in width on each side of said road: Provided, That the lands hereby granted shall be exclusively applied to the construction of said road, and to no other purposes, and shall be disposed of only as the work progresses.

"Provided further, That the grant of lands hereby made shall be upon the condition that the lands shall be sold to any one person in quantities not greater than one quarter section, and for a price not exceeding $2.50 per acre.

"And be it further enacted, That said road shall be constructed with gradation and bridge so as to permit its regular use as a wagon road, and in such other special manner as the State of Oregon may prescribe.

"And be it further enacted, That the United States surveyor-general for the district of Oregon shall cause said lands so granted to be surveyed at the earliest practical period after the State shall have enacted the necessary legislation to carry this act into effect."

Shortly after the legislature of the State of Oregon confirmed this grant on the same terms to the Coos Bay Wagon Road Company, who in course of time did actually construct a very defective road between the points mentioned, and which exists to this day. However, they have steadily refused to dispose of this valuable timber to individual persons "in quantities not greater than one-quarter section" to each, "and for a price not exceeding $2.50 per acre," nor for any other price. They did illegally and in direct violation of law, and for the purpose of evading it, transfer all the lands in one lump to the so-called "Southern Oregon Company"—that is, presumably to themselves under another name—and this corporation fraudulently holds this land to this very day in defiance of the law and the rights of the people under the grant.

THE PROSECUTION OF THE GRAFTERS.

But the day when this sort of knavery goes unpunished is at an end. No longer are State and nation sitting idly by while the people are being robbed of their birthright by the rapacity of corporations too large to be attacked by any single individual. Francis J. Heney, the great United States district attorney, has been sent out to prosecute the grafters and land thieves of California and Oregon on their own ground, and after having run Ruef and Schmitz to earth in San Francisco and uncovered gigantic steals in Oregon, securing wholesale convictions reaching even as high up as that of United States Senator Mitchell, is here in Portland now prosecuting a government official for conspiracy with the land thieves to defraud the Government.

12

Realizing that the time to act has come and that only by concerted action can anything be accomplished, representative business men of Coos Bay, Portland, and elsewhere, including myself, have employed Reeder and Watkins, the leading attorneys of Marshfield, Coos County, Oreg., to make a legal tender for us of $2.50 per acre, or $400 per quarter section of 160 acres, to the Southern Oregon Company, and to take care of our interests there.

With each application they are offering to the duly authorized officials of the Southern Oregon Company, in the presence of witnesses, the sum of $400 for a certain specified quarter section. The corporation refuses this tender, thereby violating the terms of the grant and laying itself open to suit. There is no doubt in the minds of Messrs. Reeder and Watkins or ourselves as to the outcome of the suit, for the law is plain and has no mercy for grafters and land thieves nowadays.

SENATOR TILLMAN TAKES ELEVEN QUARTERS.

The illegal and outrageous robbery on the part of the Southern Oregon Company is notorious in this State, but until now it has been impossible to secure the necessary concerted action. That the right men are behind this movement will be appreciated at once when I state that among those who have spoken through our attorneys for a part of this land is Senator Tillman, of South Carolina, the leader of the Democratic party in the United States Senate, a man who usually gets what he goes after. So sure is Senator Tillman of our success that he has subscribed and paid the necessary fees for a quarter section for himself and ten other quarter sections for ten of his nearest relatives.

WHAT THE OREGONIAN HAS TO SAY.

The Oregonian, the leading newspaper of Portland, Oreg., speaks as follows in a long article relative to this suit:

"It will be seen that there was no intention of allowing all the lands thus set apart to pass into the hands of one person or company. The act set up guards against creation of a land monopoly that has been created. The act of 1869 laid specific injunction on the trustees, which became a part of the land laws of the United States.

"In 1870 the legislature passed an act donating the land to the Coos Bay Wagon Road Company, under the conditions and limitations set forth in the act of Congress of the preceding year.

"Congress did not intend the road company to acquire all or any of the lands of the grant, for the State, in execution of the trust, 'shall sell the same to any one person only in quantities not greater than one quarter section.' It is contended in behalf of the State that the State could not grant the entire trust estate to the road company, for the latter could not be the party entitled to them. The parties entitled to them were individuals of a numerous class or the public. Consequently it is contended that the road company was excluded as the sole beneficiary entitled to the lands.

"Instead of selling the lands to individuals at $2.50 an acre, in tracts not larger than 160 acres to one purchaser, the Coos Bay Wagon Road Company transferred the title to the lands to the Southern Oregon Company, which refuses to sell to individuals, thus barring great areas from settlement.

"This is in violation of the act of Congress providing that 'anyone' might acquire the land by paying $2.50 an acre, the money to be devoted to building the road. The idea that one company or person could acquire all the lands is expressly negatived by the provision of the act of Congress limiting sales to 160 acres to any one person. Only by disposing of the lands to many persons could the trustee discharge the trust and relieve the lands of the trust imposed upon them."

13

YOU MAY JOIN US.

Now, we will allow you to join us in this proposition if you care to do so, and if you have read this circular carefully you surely will. You must act at once, as only about fifty quarters are left. Our terms are as follows:

TERMS.

You must pay a preliminary fee of $200 per quarter section. This includes cruising and locating fee, legal retainer fee to our attorneys, court and filing fees, and all other expenses incident to the prosecution. Upon receipt of your remittance we will instruct our attorneys as above to make application to purchase from the Southern Oregon Company the best quarter section not already spoken for, and will notify you at once, giving you the legal description of the tract and stating the amount of timber thereupon. We and our attorneys will do the rest. As soon as the suit is decided and the timber wrested from the hands of the land grafters, we will pay you in cash for your timber at the rate of $2 per thousand feet, amounting to at least $5,000 cash for each quarter section, or we will send you the deed upon payment of the specified sum of $400 ($2.50 per acre for 160 acres, as provided by law) plus a commission of 25 cents per thousand feet for the timber to which the St. Paul and Pacific Timber Syndicate will be entitled by right of negotiating these matters. Thus your $200 will obtain for you $5,000 in cash or, by the additional payment upon termination of the suit, as above, a deed to 160 acres of the finest timber land on the Pacific coast.

This timber consists of about 30 per cent white or Port Orford cedar and the balance Douglas fir. Port Orford cedar is the most valuable wood in Oregon, being used extensively for shipbuilding purposes and for match wood. Douglas fir is the most valuable all-purpose wood in North America. A full description of these two valuable woods may be found in the article "Lumbering in Oregon," pages 8 and 9, of the booklet The Richest Land in America, which was sent you some time ago. Suffice it to say that the ownership of one quarter section of this timber represents a tidy sum and that it increases in value with every year.

INSTRUCTIONS.

Simply sign your name in ink to the inclosed form entitled "application to purchase," leaving all other spaces blank, and return to us at once with your check for $200. Wire us without fail as soon as you have sent the money, in order that we may reserve you the very best timber not already spoken for.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

1. Can I obtain more than one quarter section? Answer: Not for yourself, but you can obtain extra quarter sections for any or each of your relatives or friends by the payment of $200 per quarter section; in that case, for each additional application cut out a piece of good white paper the same size and shape as the "Application to Purchase," and have the applicant sign in ink in the lower right-hand corner. We will fill in on the typewriter. Send $200 with each application and be sure to wire at once.

14

2. How long will it take to decide the suit? Answer: Can not say. It may take six months, but it will be pushed with the utmost vigor, of course, as it is greatly to our interest, including that of Senator Tillman and the other persons associated with us, to have it settled at once. The lawyers will do their best, for we have agreed to pay them an additional fee of $100 per quarter out of our commissions upon the successful termination of the suit.

3. Is it necessary for me to reside on this land? Answer. No. This grant has nothing to do with the "homestead" laws or the "stone and timber act," and any person is entitled to purchase 160 acres whether or not he has used his "homestead" and "stone and timber" rights. He need not even see the land.

4. What if the land is all spoken for by the time you receive my application? Answer. Then we return your money at once. You must hurry, as there are only about fifty quarters left, which we have reserved for our stockholders and correspondents. Therefore remit and wire at once to

BRYAN R. DORR, President.
525 Chamber of Commerce Building, Portland, Oreg.

EXHIBIT C.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF INSPECTOR, SPOKANE DIVISION,
Portland, Oreg., July 27, 1908.

Mr. G. D. LINN,
Inspector in Charge, Spokane, Wash.

SIR: We have the honor to return this case, which relates to alleged violation of section 1617, Postal Laws and Regulations, at Portland, Oreg., by Bryan R. Dorr and the St. Paul and Pacific Timber Syndicate, with report, as follows:

This case is based on request of the Hon. B. R. Tillman, United States Senator, that the actions of Bryan R. Dorr be investigated in connection with his use of the mails in soliciting applications to purchase certain wagon road lands in the State of Oregon.

It appears that some time last winter the St. Paul and Pacific Timber Syndicate was organized in St. Paul, Minn., and that early this year Bryan R. Dorr came to Portland as its western representative.

It is claimed by Mr. Dorr, who is a young man just starting on a business career, that the purpose of his company was to buy and sell timber lands, promote sawmilling industries, etc., and to do a general brokerage business in timber and lumber securities.

Soon after arriving in Portland, Dorr's attention was called to the operations of certain agents who were taking applications to purchase land held by the Coos Bay Wagon Company, in Coos and Douglas counties, this State.

The land in question was granted by an act of Congress, December 7, 1868, to the State of Oregon, to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from the navigable waters of Coos Bay to Roseburg, in the said State. The land granted was each unoccupied odd-numbered section for 3 miles on each side of the said road.

It was also provided that the land was to be sold as the work progressed, at a price not exceeding $2.50 per acre and not more than 160 acres to any one person. In this grant the "actual-settler" clause was omitted.

15

The above grant of lands embraces more than 100,000 acres, some of it being among the best timber and coal land in the State, and is now held by what is known as the Southern Oregon Company. It seems the State of Oregon, instead of holding the land in trust and disposing of it for the benefit of the Coos Bay and Roseburg Wagon Road Company, by act of the legislature turned it over to the company in a lump sum. That company in turn deeded it to the Southern Oregon Company, which now holds the lands and refuses to sell according to the terms of the original grant.

It is the opinion of many that the Southern Oregon Company is a trustee of the land and may be compelled to sell 160 acres to any one person at $2.50 per acre. Acting upon this belief hundreds of applications have been made to the company to purchase the land.

Among the most active agents in this matter is the firm of Reeder & Watkins, of Marshfield, Oreg. Mr. Reeder is a real estate agent and Mr. Watkins an attorney. They have associated themselves together in locating applicants on these lands.

James M. Conro, of Marshfield, and George J. Schaefer, of Portland, real estate agents, also had an arrangement with Reeder & Watkins to secure applicants for the wagon-road land.

Dorr made an arrangement with Schaefer whereby he was to send his applications to Reeder & Watkins through Schaefer, with whom he was to divide the commission. Dorr then had printed the inclosed circular (Exhibit A), which he mailed to correspondents in the East. In this circular Dorr makes the announcement that Senator Tillman has made application to purchase 11 quarter sections.

For his services Dorr proposed to charge a commission of $200 per quarter section, out of which he would pay necessary location, attorney's fees, etc. Upon conveyance of the land by the Southern Oregon Company Dorr pledged his company to buy the land at an estimated stumpage value of not less than $2 per thousand feet, or if the purchaser did not wish to sell, then he was to pay to the St. Paul and Pacific Timber Syndicate an additional commission of 25 cents per thousand feet.

When we questioned Mr. Dorr concerning his authority to state that Senator Tillman had made application to purchase some of the lands referred to, he said that he had been so informed by Mr. Schaefer, and later produced a letter written to him by the latter, dated February 21, 1908, in which is used the quoted language:

"Got an application from Senator Tillman, of Washington, D. C. [Pitchfork Tillman], of the South."

The letter quoted was from James M. Conro, Schaefer's partner at Marshfield.

We later visited Marshfield in the investigation of this case and called upon Mr. Conro, who stated that he had not personally seen the Senator's application, but was given to so understand by Reeder & Watkins.

We then visited the office of Reeder & Watkins, with whom we discussed their proposition in detail. We were shown the original of certain letters and telegrams addressed to Reeder & Watkins, Marshfield, Oreg., from Senator Tillman and his agent, Mr. Wm. E. Lee. Messrs. Reeder & Watkins declined to surrender the originals, but permitted us to make copies of them, which we did, and same are inclosed herewith, marked "Exhibit C." These copies were each compared with the original after being made, and we are certain that they are correct.

We also inclose, as Exhibit D, form of application, tender to the company, and agreement with clients, used by Reeder & Watkins. As will be seen therein, their plan was to make application to the local representative of the Southern Oregon Company, who resides at Empire, Coos County, Oreg., an application to purchase, and tender of the purchase price, which is $400 for each quarter section, in the name of each individual applicant. Upon refusal of the offer an affidavit setting forth these facts is filed in the public records in the office of the county clerk in the county in which the land is located. The fee charged by Reeder & Watkins is $21 as a retainer and to cover costs of making the tender, etc., and an additional commission of $100 on each quarter section when the holding company has made conveyance of the land to the client. They also agree to join the United States in a test case against the company "or to take such other action, or institute such proceedings as may be deemed proper" to require the Southern Oregon Company to dispose of the lands in accordance with the terms of the grant.

16

We found on the records of the clerk of Coos County at Coquille that Reeder & Watkins had filed several hundred applications. In connection with the case against Leavengood (135932–C), recently returned with report, we made a diagram showing the location of each application in the several townships. (The diagram was returned with the case referred to.) With very few exceptions, we found no duplications, and only one or two where the application appeared to cover deeded land. This condition is so greatly in contrast with what we found in the other case that we are inclined to give the locaters the benefit of the doubt and assume that it was done by mistake.

We presented these facts to the United States district attorney, who gave it as his opinion that the operations of Reeder & Watkins, if carried out in good faith, was not necessarily fraudulent, especially as the terms of the grant do not require actual settlement upon the land, but specify that it must be sold to anyone in quantities not to exceed 160 acres to one person, and at a price not exceeding $2.50 per acre.

We found no evidence that Reeder & Watkins were not acting in good faith. Their proposition is set forth in plain terms. They require a retainer of $21 to be paid when the application is made. They also agree to endeavor to compel the company to sell the land to their clients, and require an additional fee of $100 in case they are successful. In view of the resolution passed by the last session of Congress authorizing the Attorney-General to bring suit, as we understand it, against the wagon-road company, as well as the O. & C. Railroad Company, to compel compliance with the terms of the respective grants, they are no doubt very properly awaiting the result of such action as may be brought by the agents of the Government.

As to the action of Bryan R. Dorr, against whom this case is more specifically directed, we find that he was unwarrantably extravagant both in his statement of conditions and his terms. As heretofore stated, he is a young man just starting in business, of a slight build and nervous temperament, brimful of energy and enthusiasm; just landed in the West, heralded as the land of opportunity, and carried off his feet by his eagerness to make his initial effort a phenomenal success, he brought into action all his imaginative and descriptive powers and produced a circular far beyond the conservative. However, we are convinced that he had no criminal motive in his actions and sincerely believed he would be able to make good his promises. We are further strengthened in this opinion by his efforts to cancel all business under way and to make restitution to those who had remitted money to him in response to his appeal.

The action of the department in preventing delivery of mail to him had the effect of hastening the end of his transactions in Coos Bay Wagon Road lands and has virtually put him out of business in this community. He has removed to the vicinity of White Salmon, Wash., where he is engaged in fruit culture.

As to the use of Senator Tillman's name by Bryan R. Dorr, we would invite your attention to the letter of February 21, 1908, addressed to him by George

J. Schaefer, which will be found in the files of Exhibit B, in which it is stated that no injunction having been placed upon the facts concerning the applications of Senator Tillman and family to purchase nine quarters of this land, Dorr was at liberty to use the information in obtaining applications if he chose to do so.

We traced this information concerning the application of Senator Tillman to secure some of this land grant land through Shaefer and Conro to Reeder and Watkins who produced the original letters and telegrams as their authority for the statements that had been made, and we inclose herewith compared copies of each. (See Exhibit C.)

From the contents of these exhibits it will be seen that Bryan R. Dorr did not state an untruth in his circular in referring to the Senator as an applicant for some of this land. He is therefore guilty of no fraud insofar as that feature of his advertising is concerned. While we believe he has been over-enthusiastic in his statements and by his exaggerated statements has probably held out a false hope that his applicants would come into immediate possession of the land, we do not find that he has made any misrepresentations that could be used as the basis for criminal action. This is also the opinion of the United States district attorney.

We therefore recommend that the action of the Post-Office Department in instructing the postmaster at Portland, Oreg., to withhold from delivery mail addressed to Bryan R. Dorr and the St. Paul and Pacific Timber Syndicate be rescinded.

Very respectfully,

O. C. RICHES,
E. C. CLEMENT,
Post-Office Inspectors.

EXHIBIT D 1.

Envelope.

UNITED STATES SENATE.
OFFICIAL OR DEPARTMENTAL BUSINESS.
FREE.

B. R. TILLMAN,
U. S. S.

MESS. REEDER & WATKINS,

MARSHFIELD,

OREGON.

Above envelope postmarked Pocatello and Port. R. P. O. train 6, October 4, 1907. Contents, a letter as follows:

NAMPA, IDAHO,
October 5, 1907.

Messrs. REEDER & WATKINS,
Marshfield, Oreg.

GENTLEMEN: A friend in Seattle gave me some information about timber lands in Coos County, Oreg., which you are interested in wresting from a corporation which holds them as a bonus for building a military road, etc. I would like to buy some of the land if his statement is correct and would be glad to have you give me all the facts if you are so inclined. I will be at Butte, Mont., on 9th and a letter there, care of Chambers & Smith, will find me. A prompt reply will oblige,

Yours, respectfully, B. R. TILLMAN.

EXHIBIT D 2.

[Telegram.]

THE WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY, ETC.

Received at 1 KD. FO. 30 D. H.

WAUSAU, WIS., October 19–20, 1907.

REEDER & WATKINS,

Marshfield, Oreg.:

W. E. Lee, my agent, will see you about land. I want nine quarters reserve; will forward signed application and money at once, members of my family are entrymen; letter.

B. R. TILLMAN.

EXHIBIT D 3.

Envelope.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, LIBRARY.

MESS. REEDER & WATKINS,

MARSHFIELD,

OREGON.

Above envelope postmarked at Chicago, Ill., Oct. 20, 8.30 p. m., 1907; and returned for postage Oct. 21, 1907, a. m., by M. D. No. 9.

On account of the delay occasioned by holding this letter for postage it did not reach Marshfield, Oreg., until Oct. 26, 1907, at 9 a. m.

Postage was not paid, however.

Contents of envelope: A letter as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., Oct. 20, '07.

MESS. REEDER & WATKINS,

Marshfield, Ore.

GENTLEMEN. I missed your letter sent to Butte and it only overtook me last night at Wausau, Wis. I wired you from there as follows and write to confirm it:

Wm. E. Lee, my agent, will see you about land. I want nine quarters reserved. Will forward signed applications and money at once. Members of my family are entrymen. Letter follows.

(Signed) "B. R. T."

19

I write now to say I wired Mr. Lee, who resides at Moscow, Idaho, to go at once to Marshfield and see you about the land, to locate quarters for the seven members of my family who are of age, and one for my private secy., J. B. Knight, whom I desire to let into the deal, and of course he wants a qr. for himself. If this quantity can be had (9 qrs.) in one body or nearly so (2 sections) it will make it easier for us to handle it by milling ourselves, or in whatever way would pay best.

When Lee writes me he has completed the locations I instructed him to draw for the money needed to make the payment of $21 on each application & I have sent the blank applications to my home to be filled out & forwarded to Mr. Lee at Marshfield. When the matter reaches the stage of signing the contracts for your services (the $100 for compelling the S. O. Co., to convey), you can send me the papers & I will have them signed & returned to you. Send to Trenton, S. C., my home. I will know by to-morrow whether Mr. Lee has or can go to see you & will then, if necessary, communicate further.

Yours truly, (Signed) B. R. TILLMAN.

(Over.)

P. S. In case applications have been filed to cover all the land before I can get in of course I want the quarter section you said in your letter you had reserved for me. If there are still good qrs. left when this reaches you, will be pleased to have you wire me at one of these places where I will be on dates mentioned.

Denver, Colo., 25th Oct.

Hobart, Ok., 28 Oct.

Boswell, Ok., 30 Oct.

Will you tell me whether any parties are locating & tendering payment to S. P. R. R. on homesteads now?

EXHIBIT D 4.

Envelope.

UNITED STATES SENATE.
WASHINGTON, D. C.

U. S. Postage.
2 cent stamp.
2 2

MESSRS. REEDER & WATKINS,
REAL ESTATE DEALERS,

MARSHFIELD,
OREGON.

Above envelope postmarked at Washington, D. C., December 7, 4 p. m., 1907. Contents, a letter as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., December 7, 1907.

REEDER & WATKINS,
Marshfield, Oreg.

GENTLEMEN: I have been intending to write to you for some time, but on account of having to make the trip to Washington I was so busy getting ready and have been so busy since I got here that it has been impossible for me to write until now.

20

Upon leaving Marshfield I wrote Senator Tillman very fully as to the status of the land matter, telling him my opinion of the chances of securing the land and finally advising him that it is a good gamble and that I was willing to take my chances on it. Unfortunately the Senator did not get my letter until about a week and a half ago, and this has caused the delay in writing to you. You remember the Senator was lecturing, and it was very hard to get in touch with him.

I had a very short talk with the Senator yesterday, and he told me to write you and say that we are intending to get in touch with you again in a very short time. Things are in such a rush here now that it is impossible for him to give any attention to outside matters. In a few days, however, we will have time to talk more about it and I will then write to you again.

In case Senator Tillman gets in on this deal with some good land in the eight quarters we want, I am satisfied that he can be of great help in getting matters started from Washington, and cause the Government to get busy and do something along the line you desire. He will set up such a howl that it will be impossible to do otherwise. This will be very important for your whole scheme to have a man of his influence here to aid you at this end of the line. By all means save a lot of good land for us, as we intend to be of more value than any of the others in this matter.

I shall be glad to hear from you.

Yours, truly, (Signed) WM. E. LEE.

EXHIBIT D 5.

Envelope.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES OF INDIANS.

B. R. TILLMAN,
U. S. S.

MESSRS. REEDER & WATKINS,

MARSHFIELD,

ORE.

Above envelope postmarked at Washington, D. C., February 15, 9.30 p. m., 1908.

Contents, a letter, as follows (and a copy of S. R. 48, introduced in the Senate of the United States by Mr. Tillman):

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1908.

Messrs. REEDER & WATKINS,
Marshfield, Oreg.

GENTLEMEN: Mr. Lee handed me your letter and in reply to it I beg to say that what I have done here in stirring up the question of Oregon land grants to railroads, etc., has been done entirely apart from any personal interest I have in the matter, although I never would have had my attention called to it but for the investigation I set on foot in connection with the proposed purchase by me of some of the timber land in question. Of course, if I decide to make the tender and go into the lawsuit, I will bear your proposition in mind, but I would have you understand that nothing I do here in the Senate will be done because of any personal purchase of any of the land. If I can succeed in causing the Government to institute suit for the recovery of the land and make it easy for others as well as myself to obtain some of it, I shall do it without any regard to the dealings with your firm. I still want to get some of the timber land, if it is possible, and as it is probable that Mr. Lee or some other representative of mine will be in your country in the next few months, we will leave the matter of payment for the initiatory steps and subsequent proceedings in abeyance for the present. Any contract we might make will be entirely apart from and independent of my work here in the Senate. I will be glad for you to hold in reserve eight of the best quarter sections of which you have definite information and I will in the meantime press the investigation and other work here which will facilitate the final purchase and in effect obviate the necessity of your making any case in the courts at all.

21

Very truly, yours,

B. R. TILLMAN.

EXHIBIT E.

[St. Paul and Pacific Timber Syndicate, 512 New York Life Building, St. Paul, Minn. Capital Stock $3,000,000. Depository, American National Bank. Office of Bryan R. Dorr, President.]

NOVEMBER 22, 1908.

To the honorable the POSTMASTER-GENERAL,

Washington, D. C.

SIR: Some time ago I learned that Senator Tillman, of South Carolina, was interesting himself in Oregon timber lands covered by the Coos Bay Wagon Road grant, while he was openly aiding in the prosecution of those who claimed to be the actual and rightful owners of the property. Not knowing that Senator Tillman desired his operations to be kept hidden and secret from general public knowledge, I scattered the information broadcast in a series of circulars which I issued to persuade others to apply for land under the terms of the grant, as Senator Tillman did. I made the statements about Senator Tillman on what I considered to be the best of authority and it was the influence and prominence of his name and position which led me to interest myself in the matter. At the time I issued these circulars I supposed the opportunity was a fine one, and I acted entirely in good faith when I advised my clients to go into it.

On February 19, 1908, my circulars having come to the knowledge of Senator Tillman, he denounced me on the floor of the United States Senate as a liar and a fraud, and denied that he was in any way interested in lands covered by the Coos Bay grant, and instituted a postal investigation which all but ruined my business and destroyed much of the confidence which my clients had reposed in me. Pending this inquiry my mail was withheld and the Associated Press reports made the affair notorious throughout the length and breadth of the country.

The postal investigation conducted by Mr. Riches, of Portland, showed clearly that I was innocent of any attempt to deceive or to defraud anyone, and Mr. Riches at once recommended that there be no prosecution either of me or of anyone else implicated in the charge. The harm had been done, however, as no note of this fact was made in the papers to counteract the effect of Senator Tillman's speech. Part of my mail was turned over to me at once, and the balance a few days ago.

22

Mr. Riches now tells me confidentially that his investigation clearly showed that Senator Tillman HAD interested himself in the Coos Bay lands as stated by me, and that the denial was unwarranted and false. The injury which Senator Tillman did me, taking advantage of his official position, is almost irreparable, and will be lifelong in its consequences to my business prospects, and also to my political future if I attempt at any time to enter the field of politics. There is only one way by which I may obtain reparation; that is by publishing the facts in full. The only thing which will enable me to do this is a copy of the report of Postal Inspector Riches, whose subordinate position prevents him from giving me the truth in writing.

In the interests of justice and of fairness to me, therefore, I urgently request you to instruct the proper authorities to forward me a complete copy of the inspector's report on the case, so that I may publish it and so recover my good repute and the respect or confidence of my clients and customers.

Respectfully yours,

BRYAN R. DORR.

O

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to say, Mr. President, that it is very irksome to me, a habit which I have never contracted, to read any speech. I would not depart from my custom to-day but for the fact that I fear I might omit, if I attempted a reply extemporaneously, some important matter.

For the first time in the history of this Government, as far as I have been able to learn, a member of this body has been brought to the bar of public opinion, before the Senate itself, to be judged under indictment by no less a person than the President of the United States. The manner of the doing of it and the animus and zeal displayed by the Chief Executive are worthy of consideration.

The papers in the case were sent to Senator HALE as acting chairman of the Committee on Appropriations late on Tuesday last. I had no intimation in regard to it until after the Senate met on Thursday. By that time the air was thick with rumors, evidently coming from the White House, directly or indirectly, that a southern Senator was in the toils of the Secret Service; and soon it was understood that Senator TILLMAN was the man.

Having been informed by Senator HALE of the character of the charges Thursday afternoon, and that he would call a meeting of the Appropriations Committee on Saturday to consider the papers relating to the Secret Service sent him by the President, I expected to have opportunity to examine fully into the case and make such defense or explanation in the Senate itself as I thought proper. I understand the President had notified Senator HALE that there was no need for hurry, and that he would not give the papers to the press before Monday; but on Friday morning he changed his mind and notified Senator HALE that he had determined to give all the facts to the newspapers that evening, and they appeared Saturday morning. It is well to remember that the universal custom heretofore, and the courtesy due by any executive to a legislative body demanded that having sent the papers to the most important committee of the Senate, they were in the possession of that body, and it was a gross breach of propriety to make them public. This well illustrates the executive attitude towards this body. He gave the communication to the press before the committee had seen the papers and examined into the matter.

It is well understood that the President is an adept at advertising and that he has used the press with more skill than any man in American politics. He realizes the importance of "getting in the first blow," though it was below the belt and might well convict him of cowardice. But he cared nothing for either courtesy, custom, or decency, thus treating the committee and the Senate with that contempt which has been his wont.

Another probable reason for his great haste was that he sought to distract attention from the action of the House of Representatives on Friday, in laying part of his message on the table, by the sensational accusations against a man who has had long service in the Senate. I could have made my statement to the Senate and to the country just as easily on Saturday as I make it now, for I have nothing to conceal and there was no great need for delay or preparation; but realizing that the great influence and power of the Chief Executive was being exerted to the limit of his ability to blacken my name and destroy my character, and that his words and the exhibits which he sent would be given the widest publicity, while my own statement would probably be epitomized on account of the pressure on the wires, I decided to wait until to-day, with the hope that my defense, without being unavoidably mutilated, would reach the people in good time. This, the newspaper men tell me, would not have been possible on Saturday. This is sufficient explanation, I trust, for the delay.

An examination of the President's letter to Mr. HALE, which might just as well have been a special message of the type with which we are so familiar, will show that the President's charges, boiled down, amount to two in number.

First. He promotes me to membership in the "Ananias Club," and charges, in effect, that I have deliberately lied to the Senate.

Second. He charges that I have exerted my official influence and worked as a Senator for my personal benefit alone to secure the passage of a resolution and to press the Department of Justice to bring suit against the corporations which hold so much of the public domain in the West and will not sell it to settlers under the terms of their grants from the Government.

He has prepared his indictment with consummate ability and skill. He is even cunning in the apparently innocent pretense that in making a search through the Secret Service for one kind of malefactor he had run down another, and the case of that one of such serious importance that his sense of official obligation compelled him to prompt action. Mark you, he has been in the possession of all the facts in this case since July last, and men will be curious to know why, if his zeal was honest, he did not make them known then.

The President announced in his special message to the House on January 4:

> I have made no charges of corruption against Congress nor against any Member of the present House. If I had proof of such corruption affecting any Member of the House in any matter as to which the Federal Government has jurisdiction, action would at once be brought.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> This would simply be doing my duty in the execution and enforcement of the laws without respect to persons. But I do not regard it as within the province or the duties of the President to report to the House "alleged delinquencies" of Members, or the supposed "corrupt action" of a Member "in his official capacity."

It therefore follows that he has found no grounds for indicting me in the courts, which, no doubt, would have rejoiced him overmuch, and all this fuss, fury, and fustian about the seriousness of the case and the gravity of the offense with which he charges me can be attributed to personal malice alone.

On January 4 the President declared what he conceived to be his relationship to the House and that he would not do certain things. On January 5 he wrote a letter to Senator HALE, doing the very thing in regard to a Senator which he had declined to do toward a Member of the House. Why this difference? In my public work here I have not hesitated to criticise and comment on the official actions and utterances of President Roosevelt, and I have doubtless given him good cause to seek revenge. I have at various times arraigned him in the Senate for tyrannical invasion of the rights of Congress, for usurpation of authority not given him by the Constitution, for disobedience of the law and neglect of duty, and particularly in the case of Mrs. Morris, for brutal and cruel conduct toward a helpless woman. I was not aware that these darts of mine had quivered in the Executive hide and stung him so, but the eagerness and intensity with which he has presented his case against me, his making a precedent where none has existed heretofore, his taking from the committee to which he had forwarded them the papers and giving them to the press before that committee had considered them, indicate that Theodore Roosevelt enjoys to the limit the feeling of getting even with BEN. TILLMAN, and lays on the big stick with the keenest relish, doubtless believing that the pitchfork has gone out of business. [Laughter and applause in the galleries.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina will suspend. The Chair will inform the occupants of the galleries that under the rules of the Senate applause is not permitted. The Chair hopes it will not be necessary further to admonish the occupants of the galleries. The Senator from South Carolina will proceed.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, in his letter to Senator HALE I find on page 3 the following:

> But a case has just arisen of a different kind, which it seems to me I should put before you as illustrating in striking fashion the way in which investigations begun by any of these various agents in the strict line of their duty may develop facts of high importance, which the investigators would not in the first instance have sought to discover, which, when discovered, ought not to be hidden or suppressed, but the development of which may tend to create an erroneous impression that the agents in question were being used for purposes not within the line of their lawful duty.

It is well to note that the President recognizes the extraordinary character of his action as well as the unlawful use he has made of the Secret Service. He pretends that his case against me has been worked up by accident, by reason of the discoveries of the inspectors in investigating the fraudulent transactions of one Bryan R. Dorr, and that the facts "ought not to be hidden or suppressed." The President says:

> Senator TILLMAN denied the statements of this circular, and expressed a wish for an investigation; and upon his request the Post-Office Department, through its inspectors, made such an investigation. He stated in reference to this circular:
>
> "I have not bought any land anywhere in the West nor undertaken to buy any. I have made some inquiries, as one naturally would, in roaming through the West. I simply want the people of the country to be put on notice that this swindler at Portland has no warrant whatever for endeavoring to inveigle others into his game."

The President then goes on to state:

> This is a confidential report—

He alludes here to the report of the post-office inspector—> of a type usually not furnished, but in this case the matter is so serious that I feel I should put it before you. I inclose you also as exhibits D1, D2, D3, D4, and D5, photographic facsimiles of letters and envelopes and telegram from Senator TILLMAN and his agent, William E. Lee.

I do not deny the authenticity of the letters or the telegram, of which photographs were made. I presume the letter from William E. Lee is also a correct copy, but I was not aware of its existence until now, and I am not in anywise responsible for Mr. Lee's ideas expressed in it. The President says:

> On October 20, 1907, Senator TILLMAN wrote a letter (Exhibit D 2) to Messrs. Reeder & Watkins, of Marshfield, Oreg., who were attorneys representing people who were applicants for the purchase of certain wagon-road and grant land; Dorr was a land agent making his filings through Reeder & Watkins. Senator TILLMAN's letter runs, in part, as follows:

"I wired you from Wausau, Wis., as follows, and write to confirm it: 'William E. Lee, my agent, will see you about land. I want nine quarters reserved. Will forward signed applications and money at once. Members of my family are entrymen. Letter follows. (Signed) B. R. T.' I write now to say I wired Mr. Lee, who resides at Moscow, Idaho, to go at once to Marshfield and see you about the land, to locate quarters for the seven members of my family who are of age, and one for my private secretary, J. B. Knight, whom I desire to let into the deal, and, of course, he wants a quarter for himself."

The letter continued, stating in detail what was to be done, in order to enable the Senator to get the land.

There is the end of the quotation from the President's document. I now resume.

It will be noted that I accused Dorr in the Senate of being a swindler, and asked the Post-Office Department to issue a fraud order against him. Dorr declared in his circular:

So sure is Senator TILLMAN of our success that he has subscribed and paid the necessary fees for a quarter section for himself and 10 other quarter sections for 10 of his nearest relatives.

It was this bold and outrageous falsehood, mainly, that caused me to denounce Dorr as a swindler, as well as to declare in the Senate that he had no warrant for the assertion. The sleuths which the President put upon my trail have made their report, and a perusal of it will show to any fair mind that so far from endeavoring to justify the fraud order against Dorr, they were really put to work to investigate me, and endeavor, if possible, to discover something to my discredit, while the President directed the investigation. I say this because it is hardly possible that a post-office inspector would set about getting photographic copies of the letters of a United States Senator and trying to convict him of lying if the orders did not come from a high source. In other words, this inspector would never have dared do what he did unless Theodore Roosevelt had ordered it.

Let us suppose for a moment that I was guilty of a falsehood in declaring that I had not undertaken to purchase any land. What did that have to do with Dorr's transparent and open use of the mails to induce men to send him money to purchase land? Dorr's declaration that I had paid the fees is an absolute falsehood, and the post-office inspectors, while they searched the records for entries at Coquille and noted that Reeder & Watkins had filed "several hundred applications," nowhere mentioned that any had been filed in my name or for me. Therefore the falsehood is proven on Dorr, and yet the President declared:

The assault which Senator TILLMAN made upon Mr. Dorr was, according to the report of the inspector, a wanton assault made to cover up Senator TILLMAN'S own transactions.

I say that no such statement was made by the inspector, and I cite you to the report of the inspector, which is published in the document which I sent to the desk.

In fact, so earnestly intent on convicting Senator TILLMAN is the President, he actually commits himself to this proposition, to wit: TILLMAN, voluntarily and without any compulsion from any source and with nothing to conceal, brought up a matter in the Senate which he need not have done to cover up transactions which were absolutely unknown to anyone except himself and his correspondents, Reeder & Watkins, and were entirely honorable and clean. My exposure closed out the swindlers. Dorr, when his mail was not delivered, retired from the land business and became a fruit grower, as reported by the inspectors.

The swindlers had secured a good many thousands of dollars before the exposure in the Senate stopped people from being duped, and yet Theodore Roosevelt, who poses as the only remaining honest man in public life, in the face of these facts has felt called upon to attack the character of a man whose integrity has never before been questioned, and whose official position is second only to his own.

In doing this he makes a false declaration, for the inspectors nowhere say any such thing as above quoted, which can be easily proven by an examination of their report.

Now, about the lying: My letter of February 15, of which the President secured a photographic copy, antedates by four days my statement in the Senate that I had not bought any land, or undertaken to buy any, and the President considers this positive proof of falsehood.

He fails absolutely to consider the sentence which immediately follows, which clearly shows that I said to the Senate, while I had not bought any land or undertaken to buy any, I had made inquiries with reference to the purchase of land in the West, which, when all the facts are considered, is the extent to which I have gone. I did not say I had not considered the purchase of land; I did not say I had not contemplated the purchase of land, because I had done both. In my conversation with the Attorney-General in regard to the resolution which I introduced, and which he himself prepared after we had talked over the whole land situation, I distinctly remember telling him that my interest in the matter had been first aroused by my desire to purchase some of the timber land, and that my coming to him was due to the fact that I discovered upon investigation that I could not buy it through any agency whatsoever; that I could not buy it even by a lawsuit, because I was advised by very able lawyers in the West, among them the Hon. George Turner, of Washington, that in attacking the holders of those land grants no one would have any standing in court except the grantor, the Government itself. (See Nichols v. Southern Oregon Co., Federal Reporter, vol. 135, p. 234.)

I was perhaps not as full and explicit in my statement as I should have been, but I was not thinking about myself or my transactions and was only intent on exposing Dorr's swindle; but a moment's thought will convince any honest-minded man that—as I had not signed any papers, had not paid any money, had taken nobody's receipt, the usual processes by which one "undertakes" to buy land—I was speaking accurately and not falsely. Everything hinges on the meaning of the word "undertaken" and my use of it. Did I mean to conceal the fact that I was anxious to buy some of this land? Not at all. Did I mean to attack Dorr as a swindler when I myself was engaged in a dishonest and dishonorable transaction? That is what the President would have the people believe. Can I be justly charged with falsehood when if I had told the Senate of the entire transaction it would have made no difference whatever, while I would have been charged with intruding my private affairs into a public discussion? Just what law did I break? What wrong did I do or contemplate? According to the report of the Attorney-General, in answer to the resolution which I introduced and which passed the Senate, Harriman, the President's dear friend, possibly the relations are not so intimate now, but I speak of what the conditions used to be. His dear friend Harriman still holds upward of 2,000,000 acres of the best lands of Oregon and California and refuses, in defiance of law, to sell them at any price.

This is a good place, Mr. President, in order to enlighten the country, to ask permission to have published as an appendix to my speech the report of the Attorney-General in answer to the resolution which the Senate passed at my instance on the 31st of last January, giving the whole story of the outrageous and damnable conditions which exist in the West.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. TILLMAN. I never expected, and could not under the terms of the law as I construed it, get more than seven quarter sections for myself and family, one for my private secretary, and one for Mr. Lee, making nine in all. This, in the aggregate, would mean that I would obtain through my activity here, as the President's charge is, nine quarter sections, or fourteen hundred and forty acres, at a cost of $4,500. Will the President undertake to say that I have lost my right to buy land because I am a Senator? Can the President deny that my activity secured the passage of the resolution instructing the Attorney-General to bring suit for the recovery of this land for the use of actual settlers? If Harriman and others like him are made to disgorge by reason of these suits, shall the fact that I was endeavoring to buy a little pittance of the land be used as the basis of a charge of being a liar and a corrupt Senator—to be disgraced?

To sum up, this is a brief résumé of the entire transaction: While in Spokane, Wash., in October, 1907, I first heard that there were timber lands in Oregon which were being bought through Reeder & Watkins, of Marshfield. On October 5 I wrote to Reeder & Watkins, asking for information, telling them of my desire to purchase some of the land if possible. Desiring to find out if the conditions of the grant to the State of Oregon made it possible for "purchasers" and not "actual settlers" to buy at $2.50 per acre, I wired the librarian of the Senate for a copy of the act. Finding that that part of the statement received from a gentleman in Spokane was correct, I notified Reeder & Watkins on October 20 that Mr. Lee, whom I had seen at Moscow, Idaho, in the meantime and talked with on the subject, would go to Marshfield and investigate in person. I authorized Lee to draw on me if he found that the lands were what they were represented to be.

Lee's authority as my agent never went beyond the examination of the land and, if the application was filed, to see that I would get good timber lands instead of rocks and marshes. He wired me not to be in a hurry, as there were obstacles in the way. In the meantime I had talked with lawyers who were familiar with the military road land grants, and they informed me that under a decision of the circuit court private parties were not permitted to sue for these lands. Still doubting whether I could purchase the lands with any hope of successful litigation, I wrote to Senator George Turner, of Washington, to get his opinion, and incidentally to make inquiry about lands on the Columbia River, in that State. He gave the same opinion that I had already received from the other lawyers.

Realizing after I got to Washington, D. C., in December that it was a very doubtful proposition, I let the matter drop until Mr. Lee showed me a letter from Reeder & Watkins, which has been stolen from my desk in my committee room, along with other papers in this case—all the papers that I had gathered in my investigation, correspondence, telegrams, maps, and all that—probably by some of the secret-service sleuths, and when they indicated their desire that I should exert my influence in the Senate, I wrote the letter of February 15, of which the President obtained a photographic copy. In the meantime and before that letter was written, from my investigations and after a conference with the Attorney-General, I introduced the two resolutions of January 31, one calling on the Attorney-General for information, and the other (the joint resolution), which became a law, instructing him to institute suits.

My official activity, then, is shown to have taken form in the Senate before I knew anything about Reeder & Watkins's attitude or expectations, and I was in no way influenced by them, as I have asserted.

I was still anxious to buy some of the lands. Who would not be, if he was as poor as I am? They are valued at from $7,000 to $15,000 a quarter section, because they have on them the finest Oregon fir and red cedar in the world. They had been granted to the State of Oregon to build a dirt road, granted by the State of Oregon to a constructing company, and sold by that constructing company to a holding company, who are now in possession.

The original grant included the provision that they should be sold to "purchasers," not "actual settlers;" to anybody who sought to obtain them at not exceeding 160 acres to each person, and at a price not exceeding $2.50 an acre. Why should I not have tried to get some?

I was still anxious to obtain some of the land if it could be done legally, and wrote Reeder & Watkins to that effect, but my faith in them and in the whole scheme died when I received the circulars of Dorr, which came to me on February 17 and 18 from three different directions, showing the widespread distribution made of them. Also Mr. Lee's report to me had led me to believe that Reeder & Watkins were not of the caliber and character to be employed in a matter of such magnitude, except possibly as to their familiarity with the local conditions and their ability to locate quarter sections which were well timbered, as they were in the possession of a cruiser's map. Dorr, of whom I had never heard before, was evidently pushing his scheme of getting suckers to invest and using my name, as I have indicated, without authority, because I had not paid any fees to him or written to him or filed any applications with him or with anybody else, notwithstanding I had said I would do so.

I therefore felt it incumbent on me to expose the swindle in the Senate, which I did on the 19th of February, and asked the post-office authorities to issue a fraud order.

I pressed the passage of the joint resolution in the Senate, and on April 30 it became a law. March 18 I was taken ill, and on May 16, after a partial recuperation, I sailed for Europe, returning October 21.

The President's sleuths, set to do the dirty work of spying on a Senator when that Senator had exposed a fraud which was being perpetrated on the public, reported to him on July 27.

I had nothing whatever to do with the change in the law of which the President complains in regard to the Secret Service.

So the President's animus is not against me on the same ground for which he has attacked Messrs. TAWNEY, SMITH, and others in the House, but one of personal malice engendered by hatred because of my course in the Senate during the last seven years.

I have not attempted to deceive anybody; I have not told any falsehoods; I have not broken any law; I have not been guilty of any immoral conduct. I had the right to purchase the land if I could, but my judgment told me it was unsafe as an investment. I would like to get some of it yet, and if the Attorney-General and his successors shall not die of old age before anything is done it may be possible that I will have the opportunity to purchase some of those timber lands of which he made mention in his report (S. Doc. No. 279, 60th Cong., 1st sess.), the document which I just asked to have published. Through my action attention has been directed in a compelling way to the need of prompt action by the Department of Justice. Whether I ever get any of the land or not does not matter if Harriman and others of that ilk are made to disgorge the large holdings which they have stolen and are attempting to hold.

The President says:

> On October 20, 1907, Senator TILLMAN wrote a letter to Messrs. Reeder & Watkins, of Marshfield, Oreg., who were attorneys representing people who were applicants for the purchase of certain land-grant land. Dorr was a land agent making his filings through Reeder & Watkins.

This statement is misleading and calculated to deceive. The report of the post-office inspectors gives the actual truth. It says:

> Among the most active agents in this matter is the firm of Reeder & Watkins, of Marshfield, Oreg. Mr. Reeder is a real-estate agent and Mr. Watkins an attorney. They have associated themselves together in locating applicants on these lands.

Further, Reeder & Watkins, by circulating a shrewdly worded circular long before Dorr appeared on the scene, sought to make money by having persons pay them $21 in cash for filing an application with the clerk of the court and tendering to the company $400 per quarter section, which the law originally contemplated as the price of the land. They were to receive $100 additional whenever the Southern Oregon Company should convey the title, and they knew that no one could compel this conveyance except the United States Government, because they must have known the decision which I have already quoted, which will be found in Nichols v. Southern Oregon Company, Federal Reporter, volume 135, page 234.

I commenced to investigate on the 5th of October, and I made direct application to Reeder & Watkins, by telegram and by letter, on the 20th of October, 1907. Dorr did not appear until early in 1908, as shown by the report of the post-office inspectors, and his career as a swindler was brief, as I exposed the whole thing in the Senate on February 19. The President had the papers and knew all this. Reeder & Watkins were receiving $21 in cash, mark you, for the insignificant work of making a tender to the holding company and filing a notice with the clerk of the court. Dorr was to share in this commission, or whatever you term it, for whatever business he brought, and yet the President would convey the impression that these filings were merely such as are usual in purchasing government land, when he knew, or could have easily found out from the Attorney-General, that all such proposed purchasers could not thus bring any suit. In the light of the evidence as presented to the President himself, the scheme was a swindle to obtain $21 in cash, as must be apparent to all. But the President acquitted Dorr and convicted me.

By this time I had found out the legal status, and decided I would not sign a contract, file an application, or pay any money, and my only reason for writing to Reeder & Watkins on February 15 was to have them understand that Lee misconceived my attitude in the Senate, and that I was not to be considered as a tool, but acting in the interest of the public. Remember, I had not seen Mr. Lee's letter until sent in by the President. I gathered from Reeder & Watkins' letter to Lee that Lee had conveyed a wrong impression, which I sought to correct, as I have heretofore said. At the same time I was willing to use them in locating desirable quarter sections, if later on I found that the action of Congress would make it possible to restore the land to the public domain by the cancellation of the patents.

The President lays great stress on the statement of mine made the 15th of February in a letter to Reeder & Watkins. He italicizes the words "as well as myself," as though it were unlawful, immoral, or improper for a Senator to buy any land or to act in this Chamber on any question affecting his personal interest. I fail to see any sense or reason in this position, but I must submit that to the judgment of the Senate and the country. I had not become a party to any litigation; I was not interested except as a private individual wanting to purchase, and as a Senator desiring to enable others to have the opportunity to do so. Of course, the President is sure that I have done something very discreditable and outrageous. He hates me, and would destroy me if he could.

The President gloats over the fact that my letter was written "just four days before he announced in the Senate that he had not undertaken to buy any land in the West" as clinching his contention that I have lied to the Senate. The records show that in the interim the Dorr circular had been sent to me, for on February 19, when I made the exposure of Dorr, I said in the Senate:

> In the last day or two I have had my attention called to a scheme of swindling, etc.

Ah, Mr. President, it is easy for those who are themselves vulnerable to convict others on the most flimsy evidence, and the President seems to work on that theory.

On reading Dorr's circular the whole scheme and combination of swindlers—Reeder & Watkins, in Marshfield, and Dorr, in Portland; I did not know anything about Conro and Schaefer—flashed on my mind; and remembering Lee's somewhat dubious report as to the character and qualifications of the firm of Reeder & Watkins, I decided at once to see to it that my name should not be used to inveigle others into their game. Hence my action in the Senate.

The President dismisses with a wave of the hand any possibility of my honesty by saying:

> It is unnecessary to comment on his proposal made in this letter to use his influence as a Senator to force the Government to institute a suit which would make it easy for him personally to obtain some of the land.

I wish to God he had commented. I want to see what sort of ethics Theodore Roosevelt judges people by.

It might be well to inquire whether or not the Attorney-General has been ordered not to obey the law of Congress passed last April—which I will call the "Tillman-Bonaparte" law—ordering suit to be instituted for the recovery of these lands. My culpability is of such enormity and magnitude in contemplating the purchase of 1,440 acres of land at $2.50 an acre in the eyes of this stickler for official rectitude in others that it may be found that he is determined to block my so-called "nefarious transactions."

The man who announces to Congress that he, Theodore Roosevelt, assumed the right to permit the steel trust to absorb its greatest rival contrary to law would doubtless not hesitate to help his dear friend Harriman in holding 2,000,000 acres of the public domain, simply because BEN TILLMAN has contemplated and wanted to buy 1,440 acres.

The President having convicted TILLMAN, proceeded to clear Dorr in both cases contrary to the facts and smilingly retires from the center of the stage, which it is his greatest delight to occupy, and complacently looks to have the American people and the Senate give their approval to his verdict. I await that verdict calmly and without fear, and will gladly abide by it.

Mr. President, I court the most searching investigation. Nay, I demand it. I declare most emphatically I have never concealed my efforts to buy land. It would have been idiotic to do so in the face of the fact that the land records in Oregon, which are open to inspection, would have shown the transaction beyond the possibility of concealment. I explained to the Attorney-General my effort to purchase and my failure and my inability to do so when I went to him to discuss the land situation in the West.

I explained to the agent of the Secret Service the whole transaction when I gave him the Dorr circular and the letters which had been sent to me concerning it. I could not have made him intelligently understand the game of swindling without doing so.

The question of motive will at last control and it can not be shown that I had any reason to conceal anything. I invite comparison of my private life and my public work as a man and as a Senator with Theodore Roosevelt or any other man, and I feel absolutely sure of the ground upon which I stand.

Mr. President, I am nearly through. It has been expected and desired, for I have received numerous letters and telegrams pressing it, that having made my own defense I should turn my batteries on my assailant. I do not feel that my strength is sufficient for the double task to-day, for my physician has warned me against overtaxing myself. One of the truest and best sentiments in English literature is this from Tennyson:

> Soiling another will never make one's self clean.

Theodore Roosevelt, the President of the United States, lives in a glass house with even a glass floor in it, and caution should teach him to have some regard for the old adage. He has exerted all the power of the Government to destroy me, but I feel that I stand unscathed, because if all other arguments fail to convince men, the character for rectitude, truthfulness, and honesty which I have builded in the sixty-one years of my life would at last be my bulwark. Men who have always been clean and honorable do not suddenly become liars and hypocrites at 61 without the sternest necessity.

Later on in this session, if my strength shall permit, and God knows I hope to try to keep it so, it is my purpose to devote some time to bringing Theodore Roosevelt face to face with his true self and let the people of the United States see what character of man they have been so bowed down to. For the present I content myself with applying to him this quotation from Spenser's "Faerie Queene:"

> "So now he raungeth through the world againe,
> And rageth sore in each degree and state;
> Ne any is that may him now restraine,
> He growen is so great and strong of late,
> Barking and biting all that him doe bate,
> Albe they worthy blame, or cleare of crime
> Ne spareth he most learned wits to rate,
> Ne spareth he the gentle poets rime;
> But rends, without regard of person or of time."

APPENDIX.

[Senate Doc. No. 279, Sixtieth Congress, first session.]

INFORMATION WITH RESPECT TO CERTAIN RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in response to Senate resolution of February 3, 1908, a letter from the Attorney-General, together with a statement showing in detail the information received by the Department of Justice with respect to certain land grants. February 17, 1908.—Read; referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate:

In compliance with the resolution of the Senate of February 3, 1908, requesting the President "if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the Senate what information, if any, has been received, and what action, if any, has been taken by the Department of Justice with respect to the matters and things in the preamble to this resolution set forth," I transmit herewith a letter from the Attorney-General, together with a statement, showing in detail the information received by the Department of Justice with respect to land grants made in the act of Congress approved July 25, 1866, as amended by the acts of June 25, 1868, and April 10, 1869; also the act approved May 4, 1870, which is subject to the partial forfeiture imposed by the act approved January 31, 1885.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 17, 1908.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 14, 1908.

SIR: In accordance with your instructions, I return herewith the resolution adopted by the Senate on February 3, 1908, with a statement showing in detail the information received by the department with respect to land grants made in the act of Congress approved July 25, 1866, as amended by the acts of June 25, 1868, and April 10, 1869; also the act approved May 4, 1870, which is subject to the partial forfeiture imposed by the act approved January 31, 1885. In pursuance of these grants, patents for a very large area of public lands have been issued to the Oregon and California Railroad Company, and a smaller, but still considerable, area has been selected by the same corporation, and patents demanded but not yet issued. The history of this entire transaction is given in the inclosed statement, which represents the results of an exhaustive investigation made by order of the Department of Justice during the past year. This department is prepared to initiate suitable legal proceedings justified by the facts developed through the above-mentioned investigation, has employed suitable special counsel to conduct the said proceedings, and, unless otherwise instructed by the Congress or yourself, will institute the same in the near future.

I remain, sir, yours, very respectfully,

CHARLES J. BONAPARTE,
Attorney-General.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

OREGON AND CALIFORNIA RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Senate resolution adopted February 3, 1908, recites that "at divers times various railroads and other corporations" have received congressional land grants, containing provisions restricting the sale of the land to actual settlers in limited quantities and at a limited price; that "it is currently reported and widely believed that the Department of Justice has information to the effect" that, as to certain grants affecting lands in States on the Pacific slope, the provision restricting sales as above mentioned has been flagrantly violated and evaded. It is then—

"Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the Senate what information, if any, has been received, and what action, if any, has been taken by the Department of Justice with respect to the matters and things in the preamble to this resolution set forth."

In the month of March, 1907, the attention of the Department of Justice was directed to certain charges that the terms and conditions of the congressional land grants of the Oregon and California Railroad Company had been flagrantly violated. So far as known, the subject was never before brought to the attention of any department or officer of the Government.

The grants in question involve a large amount of land situated in the western part of the State of Oregon.

After a preliminary consideration, a representative of the Department of Justice was sent to Oregon to prosecute a complete investigation of the subject. This work has been pursued without interruption until the present time, and the department is now preparing to institute proceedings to enforce and protect the rights of the Government in the premises.

The Senate resolution is general in its terms, but it is assumed that it refers to the land grants above mentioned and the work of the department relating thereto.

TERMS OF THE GRANTS.

By the act of July 25, 1866, as amended by the acts of June 25, 1868, and April 10, 1869, public lands, in alternate odd sections, to the extent of 20 sections per mile, were granted to aid in the construction of a railroad in Oregon, from Portland southerly through the Willamette, Umpqua, and Rogue River valleys, to the boundary line between the States of Oregon and California. A similar grant was made to aid in the construction of a railroad in the State of California to connect therewith, and extending to a point on the Central Pacific Railroad in California, a separate grant being made in each of said States.

By the act of May 4, 1870, public lands, in alternate odd sections, to the extent of 20 sections per mile, were granted to aid in the construction of a railroad from the city of Portland, extending westerly for a distance of 20 miles and thence southerly a distance of 27 miles. The act also extended aid for the construction of a further line to Astoria, but the latter line was never constructed, and that part of the grant was forfeited by the act of January 31, 1885.

The first grant above mentioned contemplated a total of approximately 3,800,000 acres, computed by mileage at the rate of 20 sections per mile. The grant last described, deducting that part subsequently forfeited, embraced approximately 130,000 acres, the area of the latter grant being largely reduced by the overlapping of the former grant.

Both of the grants named became vested in the Oregon and California Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Oregon. The company last named became vested with the grant first described in April, 1870, at which time only 20 miles of the railroad had been constructed. The latter grant was held by a separate corporation for about ten years, until October 8, 1880, when it likewise was transferred to the Oregon and California Railroad Company. In the meantime the capital stock of both companies had been owned and controlled by the same parties.

The Oregon and California Railroad Company became recognized as the lawful successor to both of the grants, and all patents on account of either grant have been executed to the Oregon and California Railroad Company, and that company has received and administered both of the grants.

Act of July 25, 1866.—The grant of July 25, 1866, as amended by the act of April 10, 1869, contained the following provision:

"Provided further, That the lands granted by the act aforesaid shall be sold to actual settlers only, in quantities not greater than one quarter section to one purchaser, and for a price not exceeding $2.50 per acre."

Act of May 4, 1870.—The act of May 4, 1870, contained the following provision:

"SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the said alternate sections of land granted by this act, excepting only such as are necessary for the company to reserve as depot, stations, sidetracks, wood yards, standing ground, and other needful uses in operating the road, shall be sold by the company only to actual settlers in quantities not exceeding 160 acres, or a quarter section, to any one settler, and at a price not exceeding $2.50 per acre."

A brief financial history of the Oregon and California Railroad Company will assist in presenting this subject.

Shortly after its organization in April, 1870, a construction loan was negotiated in Germany. The bonds were secured by mortgage upon the projected railroad and by trust deed covering the land grant. Construction was prosecuted with considerable vigor until January, 1873, when the funds became exhausted and construction was suspended at Roseburg, a distance of 197 miles from Portland and a little more than one-half the entire road.

Interest payments were defaulted; the German bondholders formed a bondholders' committee composed of bankers of Frankfort on the Main, and the latter sent Henry Villard to Oregon as their representative. In July, 1874, Villard secured control of the funds and finances of the company and foreclosure proceedings were postponed. In February, 1876, the bondholders' committee acquired all of the capital of the railroad. The stock was held by trustees, who elected officers and conducted the affairs of the railroad company for the benefit of the bondholders.

In 1881 Mr. Villard reorganized the company; the old capital stock was canceled, the former bonds were surrendered, and new capital stock accepted in lieu thereof, preferred stock to the amount of $12,000,000 representing the principal, and common stock to the amount of $7,000,000 representing the deferred interest. A new construction loan was negotiated. At the time of the surrender of the former bonds and the acceptance of preferred stock therefor it was agreed that the preferred stock should have a preferred interest in the land grant in case of a liquidation of the company, and this agreement was secured by trust deed.

Mr. Villard resumed construction work and, with the aid of a second loan secured by mortgage upon the railroad, conducted the work until December, 1883, the railroad being thus extended to Ashland, about 30 miles from the state line.

The construction fund again became exhausted. The road was placed in the hands of a receiver in January, 1885, because of nonpayment of interest. The receivership was continued until the Southern Pacific system concluded negotiations to take over the road, which they did in the year 1887. The general features of the acquisition of the road by the Southern Pacific were as follows:

"First. All of the capital stock of the Oregon and California Railroad Company was turned over to the Pacific Improvement Company, which was a development company used by the Southern Pacific syndicate composed of Huntington, Stanford, Crocker, and Hopkins.

"Second. New bonds were issued and guaranteed by the Southern Pacific Company to an amount sufficient to pay off all of the outstanding indebtedness.

"Third. The railroad was then leased to the Southern Pacific Company, which, in effect, acquired all of its capital stock and then leased the road to itself.

"Fourth. The Pacific Improvement Company completed the construction of the railroad to the state line in December, 1887, connecting with the California and Oregon Railroad, which at about the same time was completed from the south."

Through railroad transportation was then established between Portland and San Francisco, and the Oregon and California Railroad has since been operated as a part of the Southern Pacific system until taken over by the Harriman lines in 1901.

In the meantime the Southern Pacific interests had already, as early as 1871, acquired the California and Oregon Railroad Company, together with its land grant in the State of California, provided for by this same act of July 25, 1866.

In October, 1901, the control of the Southern Pacific Company was secured by E. H. Harriman and the Union Pacific interests, and at that time the capital stock of the Oregon and California Railroad Company was transferred direct to the Southern Pacific Company, and this condition still continues. In October, 1901, Mr. Harriman was elected president of the Oregon and California Railroad Company, which position he still occupies, and the railroad has been operated as a part of the Harriman lines.

The general history of the company may be summarized by saying that until 1887 it was always crippled in its operation, including the handling of the land grant, by its lack of financial backing, and was never made a profitable enterprise. Since 1887 its condition in this respect has been completely reversed; it has become a very prosperous and profitable enterprise, its financial backing has been almost unlimited, and it has become an indispensable factor of the powerful organization by which it has been absorbed. Prior to its acquisition by the Southern Pacific Company it was a local enterprise, conducted with reference to local commercial and industrial conditions; since that time it has been used by some of the masters of the nation's finance as a mere instrumentality to further the development of a monopoly of transportation affecting a very substantial part of the commerce of the nation. This fact is of vital importance in following the history of the land grants.

When acquired by the Southern Pacific Company, not only did the Oregon and California Railroad become a part of that already formidable system but its land grants were joined to the still larger land grants of the Southern Pacific system, all of which were handled by a single department, with a common policy, which was quite foreign, and in some respects opposed, to local commercial conditions, to promote which the grant was originally created. The subsequent acquisition of the Southern Pacific by the Union Pacific interests intensified this condition.

CONSTRUCTION OF RAILROADS.

Under the act of May 4, 1870, the railroad was constructed westwardly from Portland to Forest Grove, and thence in a southerly direction to the terminus named in the act—a total of about 47 miles—during the years 1871 and 1872, within the time required by the act. The line to Astoria was never constructed and that part of the grant was forfeited, as above stated.

Under the act of July 25, 1866, as amended, during the years 1870, 1871 and 1872 the railroad was constructed from East Portland to Roseburg, a distance of about 197 miles. Work of construction was then suspended until 1881. The balance of the line, a distance of approximately 175 miles, was constructed during the years 1881, 1882, 1883, and 1887. The act, as amended, required the completion of the road on or before July 1, 1880, but Congress failed to assert forfeiture on account thereof and the default was waived.

SELECTIONS AND PATENTS.

Through a misunderstanding of the law by the Interior Department, upon the filing of maps of location in 1870 to 1873, all lands within the grants were withdrawn from the public domain, including those situated within the indemnity limits. In 1885 the Supreme Court of the United States rendered an opinion correcting this construction of the law, and the order referred to was finally revoked in 1887.

Under the grant of July 25, 1866, selections for the northern part of the grant were filed as rapidly as the road was constructed, and patents therefor were issued from 1871 to 1877. During those years there was selected by and patented to the railroad company on account of the grant of July 25, 1866, 323,184.68 acres.

Taking advantage of the erroneous ruling of the Interior Department, above referred to, no further selections were made by the railroad company, and therefore no further patents were issued. One of the reasons for this conduct was unquestionably the financial condition of the railroad company. By this method taxation was avoided and the payment of the fees for the patenting of the land was postponed.

One of the first steps taken by the Southern Pacific system after acquiring control was to make selections as rapidly as possible for the entire grant.

The issuing of patents was resumed in 1893 and continued without interruption until 1906.

Beginning with the year 1893, patents have been issued on account of the grant of July 25, 1866, to the amount of 2,442,448.45 acres, making a total amount patented to date on account of that grant 2,765,597.13 acres. In addition to this the railroad company has filed selections claiming approximately 300,000 acres more.

No patents were issued on account of the grant of May 4, 1870, prior to the year 1895. Commencing with the year 1895, patents have been issued to the amount of 128,618.13 acres.

The General Land Office has suspended action upon all pending selections because of the contemplated action of the Department of Justice.

Under the two grants there have been patented 2,894,215.26 acres, of which there have been sold 813,908.82 acres, leaving still in the hands of the railroad company 2,080,306.44 acres, and in addition thereto approximately 300,000 acres to which claim has been asserted and issuance of patent has been suspended, as explained.

SALES BY RAILROAD COMPANY.

This subject will be first presented in a general way and then illustrated by tabulated statements.

The manner in which the granted lands have been disposed of may be summarized in a single paragraph:

"The provisions of the grants restricting the manner of sales have never been respected. The lands have been sold to any person, whether settler or speculator, in as large quantities as possible and at the highest price possible. In making sales, the railroad company has always observed the law of supply and demand, and has never obeyed the law of Congress."

While the railroad company has never restricted itself in the manner of making sales to comply with the terms of the grant, it is a fact that for many years the opportunities to violate the conditions of the grant were comparatively few. Prior to the year 1890 the principal demand for these lands was from actual settlers, in small quantities, for the purpose of making homes, with incidental sales to speculators and timber men in comparatively small quantities. After the year 1890 the principal demand was from timber men and speculators in immense quantities, at increasing prices, with only a compartively few incidental sales to actual settlers; but, while the two periods mentioned present a marked contrast in this respect, there was in fact no change in the policy of the railroad company. Its policy has always been to dispose of the land as advantageously as possible, without the slightest regard to the conditions of the grant. The only change which actually took place was an increase in the opportunities to violate the grant, accompanied by increased facilities on the part of the Southern Pacific interests to take advantage of these opportunities.

During the early history of the grants most of the adjoining land was still a part of the public domain, subject to appropriation under the public-land laws of the United States. By the terms of the granting acts the minimum purchase price fixed by the Government upon these public lands was $2.50 per acre; so that while there remained a substantial portion of the public domain which could be obtained at that price, it was difficult for the railroad company to secure more; moreover, the existence of this vast amount of public land postponed the activity of the speculator. So that, until about the year 1890, except in a few small localities, there was practically no demand for the railroad land except by actual settlers, persons of limited means, who were able to buy only in small quantities.

It must not be understood, however, that even during this period sales were limited to actual settlers or to small quantities. On the contrary, substantial violations of the terms of the grant occurred from the very beginning. The first conveyances were made in 1872 and have been continued from that time until the present. Among the first conveyances executed in 1872 several instances occur where the land was sold at prices largely in excess of $2.50 per acre, sometimes as high as $10 per acre. In 1874 three instances are found of conveyances to a single purchaser of a quantity exceeding 1,000 acres each. These violations continued throughout the history of the grant.

When the Southern Pacific system secured control of the land grants, the first thing they did was to organize an effective land department. Land examiners and timber cruisers were employed and a force set to work to ascertain and appraise the value of each specific tract of land contained in the grant; this had never been done before. The work was commenced in the summer of 1888. About the year 1890 some of the old and experienced timber men of Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota were attracted by reports as to the timber lands of Oregon. They sent representatives to examine the lands. With their superior information, they readily appreciated the value of these lands. Prior to that time there had been practically no demand, nor a present value of the timber lands. There suddenly arose a tremendous demand for the lands by wealthy timber men and speculators in the East; the market for such lands developed within the space of a year. The railroad company was quick to see its opportunity to profit by disposing of the lands contrary to the terms of the grant. It immediately began to make sales in quantities ranging from 1,000 to many thousand acres.

Nor was the railroad company unconscious of its offending. It realized the responsibilities it was incurring and adopted significant measures of defense. Prior to 1890 the railroad company had always given conveyances in the so-called "grant, bargain, and sale" form of deed, with implied covenants. There was no reason why it should change so long as it restricted itself to at least a substantial observance of the law. In 1891, however, it changed all of its forms of deeds and contracts and has ever since refused to execute anything but a quitclaim form of deed, except where it had by prior contract obligated itself to do otherwise. This is a most unusual circumstance. The title of the railroad company consisted simply of a grant from the United States. What liability did it seek to avoid by this unusual precaution?

Thus we find at about the year 1890 an unexpected and substantial demand for land, which gave the railroad company an opportunity to make wholesale violations of the terms of the grants, with great profit. It immediately determined to take advantage of that opportunity, wholly ignoring the conditions of the grants and sought protection against responsibility for these violations of the law by the adoption of the quitclaim form of conveyance. This policy was pursued by the company without restriction until 1902, during which period approximately 400,000 acres of land were sold to timber men and speculators in quantities exceeding 1,000 acres to each purchaser.

Late in the year 1902 the railroad company adopted a new policy and permanently withdrew all of its lands from sale. There then remained in its hands approximately 2,000,000 acres of the grant, besides approximately 300,000 acres claimed but not patented. After having disposed of approximately 800,000 acres, most of it in violation of the terms of the grants, it resolved upon the plan of asserting an absolute, unqualified, and permanent estate in the balance of the grants in its own favor. Various excuses for this step have been given from time to time, the apparent purpose of which was to influence public sentiment on the subject. For a time applicants to purchase were informed that by reason of a confusion of the records of the company it was necessary to make a complete check of its titles to ascertain what land remained for sale. The San Francisco fire was used as an excuse for some time, it being explained that the records of the company had been destroyed, and with them its information concerning its holdings. By these various excuses public sentiment was restrained until comparatively a short time ago, when the aggravated industrial and commercial conditions resulting from the policy of the railroad company brought forth vigorous protests, which were called to the attention of the Department of Justice in March, 1907. In a public speech at Oakland, Cal., during September, 1907, Mr. Harriman, the president of the company, admitted that this policy was intended to be permanent.

Tabulated statement.—As a part of the work heretofore prosecuted by the Department of Justice, a complete statement has been obtained from the public records, the records of the railroad company, and other sources, showing all sales made by the railroad company. The work in Oregon was completed November 1, 1907. Records made since that time are therefore not included in the statements tabulated. These statements include all conveyances executed by the railroad company, together with all contracts now pending. As to the former, the exact purchase price was ascertained in each instance; as to the latter, this was impossible; but sufficient information was obtained to justify the estimate of $7 per acre as the average purchase price of the pending contracts, and this estimate is used so far as contracts are concerned in making up the following statements.

In these compilations no attempt has been made to distinguish sales to actual settlers from sales to speculators. It may be safely stated, however, that none of the large sales are to actual settlers, and that even a large proportion of the smaller sales were made to speculators.

Total sales.

Conveyances.	Number.	Acres.	Purchase price.
DEEDS.
Act of July 25, 1866	4,159	588,078.62	$2,901,954.68
Act of May 4, 1870	246	22,136.78	86,450.30
Total deeds	4,405	610,215.40	2,988,404.98
PENDING CONTRACTS.
Act of July 25, 1866	883	154,335.16	1,080,346.12
Act of May 4, 1870	35	49,358.26	345,507.82
Total contracts	918	203,693.42	1,425,853.94
Total sales	5,323	813,908.82	4,414,258.92

Average purchase price per acre, approximately, $5.42.

The following statement has been prepared to demonstrate the extent to which the conditions of the grant have been violated in the disposition of the lands. The sales are classified according to the number of acres conveyed and the purchase price. Conveyances for 160 acres or less are classified to indicate those wherein the purchase price exceeded $2.50 per acre. As to conveyances for more than 160 acres, this distinction is not observed, because the excessive quantity of land conveyed rendered such conveyances violations of the conditions of the grant. It may be stated, however, that with two or three unimportant exceptions all of the conveyances of large quantities are also at a price in excess of $2.50 per acre. Both grants are included in the following statements. Conveyances are treated separately from pending contracts.

Deeds conveying—	Number.	Acres.	Purchase price.
160 acres or less, at $2.50 per acre or less	1,947	127,418.57	$282,091.33
160 acres or less, at a price exceeding $2.50 per acre	2,148	120,205.05	493,098.30
Exceeding 160 acres, but less than 640 acres	233	75,023.41	250,885.52
Exceeding 640 acres, but less than 2,000 acres	46	51,102.02	335,555.91
2,000 acres or more	31	236,466.35	1,626,773.92
Total deeds	4,405	610,215.40	2,988,404.98

The following statement contains the same information concerning pending contracts, except that no distinction is made as to purchase price, for the reason that all of the pending contracts are for a price in excess of $2.50 per acre:

Contracts to convey—	Number.	Acres.	Purchase price.
160 acres or less	857	50,356.58	$352,496.06
Exceeding 160 acres, but less than 640 acres	46	16,876.63	118,136.41
Exceeding 640 acres, but less than 2,000 acres	7	6,700.36	46,902.52
Exceeding 2,000 acres	8	129,759.85	908,318.95
Total contracts	918	203,693.42	1,425,853.94

Combining conveyances with pending contracts, we have the following:

	Number.	Acres.	Purchase price.
Sales within limitations both as to quantity and purchase price	1,947	127,418.57	$282,091.33
Sales within limitations as to quantity, but at a price exceeding $2.50 per acre	3,005	170,561.63	845,594.36
Sales in quantities exceeding 160 acres	371	515,928.62	3,286,573.23
Total sales	5,323	813,908.82	4,414,258.92

To illustrate the point that the large substantial violations have occurred recently, the following statement has been prepared. The sales are compiled by two periods, the first one from 1872 to 1897, inclusive, and the second one from 1898 to 1907, inclusive:

	1872 to 1897.		1898 to 1907.
	Acres.	Purchase price.	Acres.	Purchase price.
160 acres or less, at $2.50 per acre or less	100,458.16	$215,879.47	26,960.41	$66,211.86
160 acres or less, at a price exceeding $2.50 per acre	55,240.39	206,140.32	115,321.24	639,454.04
Exceeding 160 acres, but less than 640 acres	34,223.59	80,388.75	57,676.45	288,633.18
Exceeding 640 acres, but less than 2,000 acres	11,698.54	42,117.21	46,103.84	340,341.22
Exceeding 2,000 acres	2,234.70	4,579.40	363,991.50	2,530,513.47
Total	203,855.38	549,105.15	610,053.44	3,865,153.77

The following table contains comparative totals of sales in quantities exceeding 160 acres, compiled for the same periods:

Period.	Acres.	Purchase price.
1872 to 1897	48,156.83	$127,085.36
1898 to 1907	467,771.79	3,159,487.87

Again, taking the sales in quantities exceeding 2,000 acres, the contrast is even more marked, as appears in the following table:

Period.	Sales.	Acres.	Purchase price.
1872 to 1897	1	2,234.70	$4,579.40
1898 to 1907	39	363,991.50	2,530,513.47

The one instance during the period 1872 to 1897 occurred in the year 1893.

Thus it appears that of 813,908.82 acres sold by the railroad company, only 127,418.57 acres were sold within the limitations of quantity and purchase price prescribed by the grant; and 515,928.62 acres were sold in quantities exceeding 160 acres, of which 363,991.50 acres were conveyed or sold to 38 purchasers in quantities exceeding 2,000 acres to each purchaser since the year 1897.

The foregoing tabulations appear inconsistent with the former statement that the large sales to timber men and speculators commenced about 1890. A word of explanation is necessary. With but one exception, all of the large sales were made by contract, providing for the payment of the purchase price in from seven to ten annual installments. Therefore the large sales contracted in 1890 and succeeding years did not appear of record until the deeds were executed, commencing in December, 1897. The foregoing tabulations are based upon the date of the deeds, except as to pending contracts. The one exception referred to was the one instance of the large sale in 1893, which was a sale for cash instead of by contract. It should be added that many of the deeds were not recorded until long after they were executed, and several of the larger deeds have never been recorded.

In the foregoing tabulations no account has been taken of instances where more than one deed was given to a single purchaser. By combining the deeds executed by the railroad company to each purchaser, the extent of the violations will appear considerably greater than shown by the statement. Several purchasers received from ten to thirty deeds each, and in some of these instances each of the deeds was for 160 acres or less, and therefore appear in the compilations as non-violations.

COMMERCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL EFFECTS.

It is difficult to define but not to appreciate the necessary effects of the policy which has been pursued in the administration of these land grants.

The grants placed in the hands of a single proprietor nearly one-half of the lands of western Oregon, subject to conditions, however, intended to insure the distribution of the land in small quantities among the producing class. Notwithstanding these conditions, the greater portion of the land still remains in the hands of a single proprietor, which refuses to sell it, develop it, or improve it; simply holding it to share the benefits which shall result from the labor of others. The greater part of the land sold went into the hands of proprietors of the same class. In several instances every alternate section in one, two, and even three townships was conveyed to and is still held by a single purchaser, so that the development of the entire country is restricted by the conditions naturally incident to the ownership of one-half of the land by proprietors of this character. The effect of these conditions upon commercial development does not require demonstration.

It is a notorious fact that western Oregon has been developed to the extent of only a small portion of its natural resources.

A large part of the land which has in this manner been placed beyond the reach of the American settler is considered by those most familiar with its character to be well adapted to make attractive homes for thousands of our citizens, with abundant opportunity for profitable industry.

That the present railroad interests are deliberately using the land grant for the purpose of retarding the development of western Oregon can not be asserted as a fact; but it is certain that its policy has this direct effect, and it is not difficult to understand that a selfish purpose may be subserved thereby. In this connection it is proper to consider that the Oregon and California Railroad Company is now a part of a well-organized transportation system, which controls the commerce of approximately one-third of the United States. So far as western Oregon is concerned, this railroad system not only holds an absolute monopoly of transportation, but, through the manipulation of the land grant, it practically controls production.

The following facts are significant: The present transportation facilities of western Oregon are taxed to their full capacity in handling the products of the country. If the railroad company should abandon its present policy and dispose of its land grant to those who would develop it and subject it to productive industry, it is certain that the increased production of the country would be so greatly in excess of the present transportation facilities that competing transportation lines would be attracted to that State. It is equally certain, with the Southern Pacific interests controlling substantially one-half of the land, no other transportation company, however formidable, is likely to venture into that territory to engage in competition with a system which virtually controls not only transportation, but also production. More than four-fifths of the land grant now held by the railroad company is situated in southern Oregon. At the time the railroad company withdrew its lands from sale, in 1902, southern Oregon was developing rapidly. It was largely this development which taxed the capacity of the existing transportation facilities. The sale of land was stopped and the development of southern Oregon was checked.

TAXES.

It may possibly be urged that the railroad company has for many years paid taxes in large amounts, and is therefore entitled to equitable consideration. It will be stated that, including the year 1907, the railroad company has paid approximately $1,000,000 in taxes. An examination of this question, however, disposes of all apparent equities in favor of the railroad company.

Prior to the year 1891 very little of the land had ever been assessed or listed for taxation. But a small portion of the land grant had been patented; the railroad company had postponed the procuring of patents to avoid taxation. The total taxes paid by the railroad company down to that time did not exceed $75,000. Surely this did not palliate the violations of law which occurred at that time. Several large sales were made in the years 1891, 1892, and 1893, in each of which the excess price charged and received by the railroad company was greater than the total amount of taxes which it had paid to that time.

Since 1891 the greater part of the lands have been listed for taxation; but until the year 1902, when the railroad company for the first time asserted an absolute, unqualified ownership of the lands, with no obligation as to the disposition of the same, and permanently withdrew its lands from sale, the assessed valuation of the land was based upon the assumption that the interest of the railroad company was limited to $2.50 per acre, and therefore the lands were assessed at a nominal valuation, averaging approximately 50 cents per acre. So that down to the year 1902 the amount of taxes paid by the railroad company was still a comparatively small item. After the company adopted its present policy, the county officers of each county instituted the practice of assessing the railroad lands the same as the lands of other proprietors. The various counties have had the lands cruised and their value estimated and assessments made accordingly. The total assessed valuation of the land grant for the year 1907 was approximately $18,000,000, whereas prior to the year 1902 the assessed valuation had never exceeded $2,000,000.

Of the total taxes paid by the railroad company on account of its land grant, from 1870 to the present time, more than one-half has been paid since the year 1902. In other words, the greater portion of the taxes paid by the railroad company down to the present time have been incurred by it as a direct result of its own violation of the law. It is difficult to see how any equities can be predicated upon these facts. Even as it is, the total taxes paid by the railroad company does not average to exceed 40 cents per acre, and but for the increased taxation brought about in the manner heretofore stated would have been but about 15 to 20 cents per acre for the whole thirty-seven years since it acquired the grant.

CONCLUSION.

If the conditions of the grant had been observed, under no circumstances could the railroad company have enjoyed a bounty exceeding approximately $8,000,000 from the disposition of the lands, which it has received. It has already realized approximately $4,500,000, and now asserts absolute ownership to property the assessed valuation of which is $18,000,000.

The grants contained restrictions designed to make the general public welfare superior to any interest which the railroad company should ever possess with respect to the lands granted. Those provisions have been repeatedly violated in the disposition of a large portion of the grants, and because thereof the legal right to permanently ignore them and convert the remainder of the grant into an absolute and unqualified single ownership is now boldly asserted.

That at the expiration of forty years after the enactment of the grants 2,000,000 acres of the lands granted should be vested in a single proprietor, with no public obligation, and virtually controlling the commercial destiny of a large portion of the State of Oregon, is the very evil which the provisions of the grant were designed to avert. Yet that condition now exists, with the assertion of a legal right to make it permanent.

It is confidently believed that substantial remedies exist in favor of the Government. It is the purpose of the Department of Justice to enforce those remedies. It is respectfully suggested, however, that discussion of their form be deferred for presentation before the court to which the cause shall hereafter be addressed.

RECESS.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, as it is impossible to transact business in the confusion owing to the departure of many occupants of the galleries, I move that the Senate take a recess for ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to; and at the expiration of the recess (1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate reassembled.

ELECTORAL VOTES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, authenticated copies of the certification of the final ascertainment of electors for President and Vice-President in the States of Kansas, Alabama, and New Jersey, which, with the accompanying papers, were ordered to be filed.

ANNUAL REPORT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate, pursuant to law, the Twenty-second Annual Report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce (H. Doc. No. 1317) and ordered to be printed.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact filed by the court in the cause of Mrs. Marie Ernestine Bourcy, Miss Marie Ernestine Bourcy, jr., Stanilaus L. Bourcy, and Augustin Theodore Bourcy, heirs of Eugene Augustin Bourcy, deceased, v. United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims (S. Doc. No. 647) and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The VICE-PRESIDENT announced his signature to the bill H. R. 22306, an act to authorize the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company and the Lackawanna Railroad Company of New Jersey to construct and maintain a bridge across the Delaware River from a point near the village of Columbia, Knowlton Township, Warren County, N. J., to the village of Slateford, Northampton County, Pa., which had heretofore been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4856) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to lease San Clemente Island, California, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 23866. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge between Fort Snelling Reservation and St. Paul, Minn.," approved March 17, 1906.

H. R. 24831. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

H. R. 25391. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

H. R. 25409. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. J. Res. 219. Joint resolution to accept the gift of Constitution Island, in the Hudson River, New York.

The message further transmitted to the Senate resolutions of the House commemorative of the life and public services of Hon. REDFIELD PROCTOR, late a Senator from the State of Vermont.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented petitions of Pomona Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of northern New Hampshire; of Local Grange No. 1211, Patrons of Husbandry, of Ashley, Mich.; and of sundry citizens of the United States, praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. FRYE presented petitions of sundry citizens of Pittston, Fryeburg, Harrison, and Franklin County, all in the State of Maine, praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. LONG presented the petition of A. J. Snyder and 5 other citizens of Westphalia, Kans., and the petition of John Warner and 42 other citizens of Manhattan, Kans., praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DICK presented a petition of sundry citizens of Barberton, Ohio, praying for the passage of the so-called "postal savings banks" bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. GAMBLE presented a petition of the South Dakota Educational Association, of Aberdeen, S. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the separation of the Bureau of Education from the Department of the Interior, and also for the establishment of a department of public health, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. FULTON presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Oregon, praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BROWN presented a petition of the Real Estate Exchange of Omaha, Nebr., praying for the enactment of legislation granting travel pay to railway postal clerks, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. WETMORE presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Providence, R. I., and a petition of the Rhode Island Bar Association, of Providence, R. I., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the salaries of the United States circuit and district court judges, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DEPEW presented a petition of Local Grange No. 905, Patrons of Husbandry, of Jackson Corners, N. Y., and a petition of Milton-on-Hudson Grange, No. 884, Patrons of Husbandry, of Milton, N. Y., praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. PILES (for Mr. ANKENY) presented petitions of Mountainside Grange, No. 190, of Van Zandt; of Evartsville Grange, No. 114, of Pullman; and of Pleasant Hill Grange, No. 101, of Castle Rock, all Patrons of Husbandry, in the State of Washington, praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred certain bills, to ask that they be discharged from their further consideration and that they be referred to the Committee on Finance, as they relate to the customs.

There being no objection, the Committee on the Judiciary were discharged from the further consideration of the following bills, and they were referred to the Committee on Finance:

A bill (S. 7940) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes;"

A bill (S. 7941) to amend section 3613 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (S. 7942) to amend section 2619 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

A bill (S. 7943) to amend section 2625 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 19662) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish the foundation for the promotion of industrial peace," asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 6th instant, proposing to increase the salaries of the Chief Justice and the associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, intended to be proposed to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, reported it with amendments and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed, which was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution (No. 223) submitted by Mr. CLAPP on the 14th ultimo, reported it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be, and is hereby, authorized to employ for the remainder of the Sixtieth Congress an additional clerk to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $120 per month.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. RAYNER introduced a bill (S. 8316) granting an increase of pension to Owen C. Morris, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 8317) granting a pension to Alphonso Penley, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McLAURIN introduced a bill (S. 8318) for the relief of the legal representative of the owner of certain cotton taken by the United States military authorities in Adams County, Miss., in 1863, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KEAN introduced a bill (S. 8319) granting an increase of pension to George Schoonover, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 8320) granting an increase of pension to Mary H. Dodge, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 8321) granting an increase of pension to Henry Newhouse, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LONG introduced a bill (S. 8322) granting an increase of pension to Harriet H. Brady, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CRANE introduced a bill (S. 8323) to establish in the Department of the Interior a bureau to be known as the "children's bureau," which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also introduced a bill (S. 8324) for the relief of E. C. Mansfield, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. GAMBLE introduced a bill (S. 8325) granting an increase of pension to Ole Olson, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SUTHERLAND introduced a bill (S. 8326) granting a pension to A. J. Staley, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PENROSE introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8327) granting an increase of pension to Florencia M. Noel;

A bill (S. 8328) granting a pension to Sarah E. Hood;

A bill (S. 8329) granting a pension to Howard Reeder; and

A bill (S. 8330) granting an increase of pension to Thomas B. Stewart.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 8331) granting an increase of pension to Albion White, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NELSON introduced a bill (S. 8332) relating to the conservation of the timber resources of the United States, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CURTIS introduced a bill (S. 8333) to authorize the Edgewater Connecting Railway Company to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Kansas River at or near Kansas City, Kans., in the county of Wyandotte, State of Kansas, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WETMORE introduced a bill (S. 8334) granting an increase of pension to Joseph H. Havens, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WARNER introduced a bill (S. 8335) granting an increase of pension to Mary J. Voris, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8336) granting a pension to James C. Tryon;

A bill (S. 8337) granting an increase of pension to Herman H. Richter;

A bill (S. 8338) granting an increase of pension to Ozen B. Nichols;

A bill (S. 8339) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Blankenship;

A bill (S. 8340) granting an increase of pension to James R. Rittenhouse;

A bill (S. 8341) granting an increase of pension to William Blair;

A bill (S. 8342) granting an increase of pension to Arthur Eckert;

A bill (S. 8343) granting an increase of pension to George P. Sargent;

A bill (S. 8344) granting an increase of pension to Tobias McQuaid;

A bill (S. 8345) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Workman;

A bill (S. 8346) granting an increase of pension to John Hobart;

A bill (S. 8347) granting an increase of pension to James A. Rutherford;

A bill (S. 8348) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Uptegrove;

A bill (S. 8349) granting an increase of pension to John Burton; and

A bill (S. 8350) granting an increase of pension to Ferdinand Rubin.

Mr. WARREN introduced a bill (S. 8351) for the relief of Patrick Jordan, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DEPEW introduced a bill (S. 8352) granting an increase of pension to Rida B. Haskell, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PILES (for Mr. ANKENY) introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Territories:

A bill (S. 8353) to relieve the Copper River Railway Company in Alaska from taxation; and

A bill (S. 8354) to relieve the Copper River and Northwestern Railway Company in Alaska from taxation.

Mr. BURKETT introduced a bill (S. 8355) for the relief of Frank Blacklock, executor of Rinaldo P. Smith, of Baltimore, Md., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 8356) to enable the Omaha Indians to protect from overflow their tribal and allotted lands located within the boundaries of any drainage district in Nebraska, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DIXON introduced a bill (S. 8357) to extend the time for disposing of lands on the Huntley project within the ceded Crow Indian Reservation, Mont., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. LODGE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 114) authorizing the Secretary of War to dispose of certain bronze or brass cannon, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CURTIS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 115) authorizing the Secretary of War to establish harbor lines in the Kansas River at Kansas City, Kans., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ELKINS submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salaries of the chief justice and judges of the Court of Claims, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FLINT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,090,000 for salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue and deputy collectors, surveyors, and clerks, etc., in the Internal-Revenue Office, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. RAYNER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. DICK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

REPORT ON DISTRICT JAIL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers (S. Doc. No. 648), referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith submit the report of the Commissioners on the Jail, Workhouse, etc., in the District of Columbia.

The report is of such exceptional importance that I ask the Congress to consider well all that is therein set forth.

The Congress authorized the appointment of this Commission, marked out the course of its inquiry, and invited its recommendations. The report, therefore, is to be treated not as offered advice or volunteered opinion, but as a direct answer to the questions put by the Congress, which, in substance, were as follows:

1. What is the real condition of things at the Workhouse and the Jail?

2. Ought either or both of these institutions to be removed?

3. What ought to be done generally in respect to the penal and correctional system of the District?

Immediate action is imperative unless we are to be still further committed to the present unfortunate programme of District action concerning the matters touched upon. More than a year ago the Congress appropriated eighty-five thousand dollars to build a new wing to the present workhouse. Later it required this Commission to inquire and report whether the workhouse ought not to be removed. Thereupon the District Commissioners declined to award any contract to build the new wing until this report should come in, so that the Congress might have an opportunity to act upon it. If, however, the Congress should omit to act, they would doubtless feel bound to proceed with that work.

This report represents the opinion of practical men. All three of the Commissioners are public-spirited citizens, who, at great cost of time and convenience, and with a disinterestedness which makes the entire community their debtor, have made the thorough investigation the result of which I put before you. Mr. Edson has lived in Washington for more than forty years, and has been honorably associated with nearly every practical movement for social betterment in this city. Mr. La Dow is Superintendent of Federal Prisons, and has had many years' experience with prisoners and prisons. Judge Stafford, the Chairman of the Commission, who consented to serve only from the highest sense of public duty, has gained his knowledge from his experience in court, eight years of which have been upon the bench and two years in the criminal court of the District.

The report sets forth vividly the really outrageous conditions in the workhouse and jail. The overcrowding is great in the workhouse, and greater still in the jail where, of the six hundred inmates, five hundred are serving sentences in absolute idleness, with no employment and no exercise; in most cases two or three are confined in a single cell not large enough for one. They belong, moreover, to a class of prisoners that specially need and dread to be put to work. It is no longer a question whether something shall be done, but only a question as to what shall be done, for it is quite impossible that the existing situation should continue. The present antiquated and unsatisfactory plan ought not to be considered for a moment.

The report takes up the criminal problem in general, lays down the true principles concerning the treatment of criminals, deals with conditions here in Washington which have a manifest tendency to produce crime, and urges their removal—considering especially the dark and narrow alleys and unwholesome dwellings where most of the criminal population pass their days. It makes six specific recommendations, as follows:

1. A jail to be used only as a house of detention and never as a place where prisoners should be sent to serve sentences.
2. A probation system for cases that do not absolutely require imprisonment.
3. A reformatory for all who must be imprisoned and yet are hopeful cases.
4. A workhouse for those who are not hopeful cases and yet are not such as must be sent to a penitentiary.
5. Confinement in a penitentiary for the worst offenders.
6. A parole law for prisoners who may be safely released upon conditions before the expiration of their term.

Applying these propositions to the local situation, the report recommends:

First. That the present jail be used as the house of detention after its interior shall have been modernized.

Second. That a probation system be established at once by enacting a simple and inexpensive probation law, a draft of which is submitted with the report.

Third. That a reformatory be established upon a tract of land of not less than one thousand acres, widely separated from any other penal institution, consisting of unreclaimed land which can be cleared, cultivated, and built upon by the prisoners themselves. That eventually there shall be established upon this tract shops wherein a variety of industries may be taught and carried on, the product being easily consumable by the various district departments.

Fourth. That another tract of land of equal size be secured at once as the site for a workhouse. That this also be unreclaimed land upon which the workhouse prisoners may be put to work preparing the land for cultivation, and erecting the necessary buildings.

Fifth. That the class of prisoners not proper to be sent either to the reformatory or the workhouse be sent for the present to the United States penitentiaries at Leavenworth and Atlanta, and that for the present no penitentiary be erected specially for the District of Columbia.

Sixth. That a parole law be enacted upon the principles set forth in the report.

I earnestly ask that the Congress act at once in accordance with the recommendations of the report. The two most urgent measures, for which drafts of bills accompany the report, are, first, a probation law, and, second, an appropriation act which will relieve at once the present impossible situation and set us on our way toward the realization of an adequate prison system.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 11, 1909.

LEASE OF SAN CLEMENTE ISLAND, CALIFORNIA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4856) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to lease San Clemente Island, California, and for other purposes, which were on page 4, line 2, after "specified," to insert ", and well and truly perform any of the stipulations herein imposed upon it;" and on page 5, line 1, to strike out all after "be" down to and including "Service," in line 2, and insert "covered into the Treasury."

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 23866. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge between Fort Snelling Reservation and St. Paul, Minn.," approved March 17, 1906, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

H. R. 24831. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 25391. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 25409. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

H. J. Res. 219. Joint resolution to accept the gift of Constitution Island, in the Hudson River, New York, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

COMMODITY CLAUSE OF THE INTERSTATE-COMMERCE ACT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? [A pause.] If not, morning business is closed, and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The first case on the calendar will be stated.

The joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law as announced as the first business in order.

Mr. KEAN. Let the joint resolution go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will go over, at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. I think it had better go to the calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will go to the calendar under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

REORGANIZATION OF NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Senate resolution 93, relating to the reorganization of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. KEAN. This resolution had better go over likewise.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go to the calendar under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

PROHIBITION ON GOVERNMENT PROPERTY.

The bill (S. 915) to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors in buildings, ships, navy-yards, and parks and other premises owned or used by the United States Government was announced as the next business on the calendar.

Mr. LODGE. I think the bill had better go over. I myself have no objection to the bill, but I understand it is objected to by a Senator now absent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill be passed over without prejudice, the Senator in charge of it not being here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice at the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

INTERSTATE SHIPMENTS OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

The bill (S. 6576) to regulate the interstate-commerce shipments of intoxicating liquors was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be passed over without prejudice at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

The bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes, was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill, which is the unfinished business, be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

KAW INDIANS IN OKLAHOMA.

The bill (S. 5310) to authorize the Kaw tribe of Indians residing in the State of Oklahoma to bring suit in the Court of Claims, and for other purposes, was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill go over. The Senator from Kansas asked me that the next time it came up it should go to the calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will go to the calendar under Rule IX.

INCORPORATION OF BANKS IN THE DISTRICT.

The bill (S. 6495) to provide for the incorporation of banks within the District of Columbia was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. KEAN. I myself have no objection to the bill, but the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], in charge of the bill, I think would like to have it retain its place. Let it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

INLAND WATERWAYS COMMISSION.

The bill (H. R. 21899) providing for the appointment of an inland waterways commission, with the view to the improvement and development of the inland waterways of the United States, was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The same order will be made with respect to this bill.

CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT LANDS.

The bill (S. 6626) providing for the condemnation for any public purpose of lands owned or held by the United States was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. FLINT. I ask to have the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from California.

PAROLE OF UNITED STATES PRISONERS.

The bill (S. 4027) to parole United States prisoners, and for other purposes, was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill was read in full as in Committee of the Whole January 6, and amendments were considered.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Utah.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGES AT YANKTON, S. DAK.

The bill (S. 7378) to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Yankton, S. Dak., by the Winnipeg, Yankton and Gulf Railroad Company was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 7640) to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Missouri River at Yankton, S. Dak., by the Norfolk and Southern Railway Company was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER IN HAWAII.

The bill (S. 7697) to ratify an act of the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, authorizing the manufacture and distribution of electric light and power in the district of Lahaina, Territory of Hawaii, was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. KEAN. Let this bill, and the succeeding one, being the bill (S. 7698) to ratify and confirm an act of the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, authorizing the manufacture and distribution of electric light and power in the district of Wailuku, Territory of Hawaii, go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bills will be passed over without prejudice.

BERNARD W. MURRAY.

The bill (S. 7918) for the relief of Bernard W. Murray was announced as the next business in order on the calendar, and was read.

Mr. CULBERSON. Before the bill is considered, I should like to have the report read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report, at the request of the Senator from Texas.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. FULTON on the 5th instant (S. Rept. No. 709), which is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7918) for the relief of Bernard W. Murray, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report the same back to the Senate with the recommendation that it do pass.

The report of the Committee on Claims, made upon a similar bill during the Fifty-eighth Congress, which is hereto attached and made a part hereof, sets forth the facts upon which the claim is based.

[Senate Report No. 1195, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred Senate bill 2113, having considered the same, recommends that said bill be passed.

The facts upon which the foregoing claim is based are as follows:

The claimant, Bernard W. Murray, was on January 8, 1901, appointed overseer of the engineering department at large, and sent to Fort Flagler. His duties as overseer required his presence at all times on the works, and while engaged in that capacity, on the 14th day of August, 1901, he met with an accident, the facts concerning which are quite fully set forth in a letter from Mr. R. H. Ober, superintendent, of which the following is a copy:

FORT FLAGLER, WASH., January 22, 1902.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of the 9th instant, relative to accident to Bernard W. Murray, overseer, on August 14, 1901, I have the honor to submit the following report of the circumstances of the accident, with outline sketch showing the arrangement of the plant for mixing concrete at the mortar battery, Fort Flagler:

The sand, gravel, and cement are stored in the bunkers shown at "B" on sketch. Along on a side of the bunkers and below the level of the floor runs a car for measuring the sand and gravel. The sand and gravel run from the bunkers through openings in the side into the car.

The proper proportions of sand, gravel, and cement are placed on the car by two men, who then push the car to position over a second car, shown at "C." A swinging door in the bottom of the measuring car is then opened and the charge of sand, gravel, and cement falls into car "C." The weight of this charge is about 3 tons. Signal is then given the engineer, who is stationed at the hoisting drum "D," by means of a push button, "E," operating an electric gong at the engineer's station. The engineer then starts the hoisting drum, on which is wound a §-inch steel cable passing over a sheave at the top of the incline, thence over a sheave on the front end of the car "C," and then back to the upper end of the incline, where it is fastened. The position of the engineer is such that he can not see the car "C" until it is nearly at the top of the incline, on account of the mixer building and trestle intervening. On arrival at the top of the incline, over the concrete mixer, the car automatically dumps the charge and returns by gravity to the foot of the incline.

On the morning of August 14 work of mixing and laying concrete was begun at 8 a. m. The measuring car at the bunkers was operated by Henry Barter and Aug. Riedel, laborers. The car "C" was operated by Arthur L. Jones as engineer, on signals given by Henry Barter. One charge of materials was hauled to the top of the tramway, the materials dumped into the hopper below, and the car returned to the foot of the tramway. It was observed by Mr. Murray that the car did not run down to quite its proper position for receiving the charge from the measuring car, and he asked Barter if the bearings of the car wheels and the sheave had been oiled that morning. Barter replied in the negative. Mr. Murray obtained an oil can, it is supposed from the other end of the bunkers, and returned to the car with it.

In the meantime Barter and Riedel had pushed the car into position under the measuring car and had dropped the charge into it. Telling them not to give the signal to the engineer until he got through oiling the car, Mr. Murray went down on the track in front of the car and began oiling the sheave. Barter and Riedel stood on the platform behind the measuring car. From the position they occupied it was impossible for them to see Mr. Murray. While Mr. Murray was at work below Barter pushed the button and gave the signal to the engineer to start the car. As soon as this started Mr. Murray was caught by the cable and wheels of the car in such a way as to fracture the left arm, dislocate one of the vertebræ of the spinal column, and severely bruise the left leg near the hip. Hearing Mr. Murray cry out as the car started, Barter immediately gave the signal to stop and back the car. This was obeyed by the engineer, who stopped the car at a point about 16 feet from the starting point and let the car back, leaving Mr. Murray lying on the track. There was no eyewitnesses of the accident, and it is not clear as to the exact manner in which he was caught by the cable and wheels, but it seems to be certain that the car wheels did not pass over him. The accident happened at about 8.15 a. m.

Barter was immediately discharged. His address is care of St. James Hotel, Seattle, Wash. Aug. Riedel quit on September 9 to go to Seattle. Arthur L. Jones quit on November 10. His address is box 42, Station A, Minneapolis, Minn.

It was Mr. Murray's duty to see that everything connected with the concrete plant was in good running order.

Respectfully, yours,

R. H. OBER, Superintendent.

Maj. JOHN MILLIS,
Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army, Seattle, Wash.

The nature and character of his injuries are set forth in the following statements:

I, Jacob C. House, being duly sworn, depose and say that I have for fourteen years practiced medicine in the city of Port Townsend, county of Jefferson, and State of Washington, being a regular practitioner under the laws of the State of Washington; that I am well acquainted with Bernard W. Murray; that on the 14th day of August, 1901, I was called in consultation with Doctor Truax, U. S. Army, surgeon at Fort Flagler, in regard to the condition and treatment of said Bernard W. Murray; that said Murray had received severe injuries while underneath a truck car arranging its mechanism, when it was suddenly started, causing a fracture of the left humerus near its middle, a severe contusion of the left hip extending over the lower abdomen, also an injury to the lower dorsal and lumbar spine; that on or about August 21, 1901, I was again called in consultation in the same case for the reason that the injury to the spine was causing severe pain and there was motor paralysis of the lower limbs; that after this consultation and consulting with the son of Bernard W. Murray we decided to send him to the Providence Hospital, at the city of Seattle, where he could receive better nursing. Doctor Truax accompanied him there and placed him in charge of Dr. George M. Horton, of that city.

JACOB C. HOUSE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 28th day of July, 1903.

[SEAL.] N. S. SNYDER,
Notary Public in and for the State of Washington, residing at Port Townsend.

To whom it may concern: This is to certify that Mr. B. W. Murray was under my care, confined in Providence Hospital, from September 1, 1901, to the latter part of October of the same year, suffering from an injury which he received at Fort Flagler, at which time he was unable to move himself without assistance, having received a severe injury in the region of his back. My bill for attending Mr. Murray during that time is $75, no part of which has been paid. I further certify that Mr. Murray called upon me October 20, 1903, at my office, still walking with crutches and in a very much crippled condition, and at this time is far from being an able-bodied man, if he ever will be such again.

Respectfully,

GEO. M. HORTON, M. D.,
Attending Physician.

SEATTLE, WASH., October 29, 1903.

The Chief of Engineers, to whom the bill was referred, reported thereon as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, February 18, 1904.

SIR: I have the honor to return Senate bill 2113, Fifty-eighth Congress, first session, for the relief of Bernard W. Murray, late overseer of construction at Fort Flagler, Wash.

From a report of Maj. John Millis, Corps of Engineers, dated January 23, 1902, it appears that Mr. Murray was injured while oiling the bearings of a car used for transporting concrete materials at the concrete-mixing plant at Fort Flagler, another employee giving the starting signal while Mr. Murray was down on the track in front of the car. His injuries, as reported at the time, consisted of a fracture of the left arm, a dislocation of one of the vertebræ of the spinal column, and a severely bruised left leg near the hip. A detailed history of the accident will be found in the accompanying copy of a report from R. H. Ober, superintendent.

It is believed that Mr. Murray is entitled to compensation for the injuries he sustained, but I am unable to say whether the amount provided for in the above-mentioned bill is excessive or merely an equitable amount.

Copies of papers on file in the office concerning the case are herewith.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. MACKENZIE,
Brig. Gen., Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army.

Hon. WM. H. TAFT,
Secretary of War.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator having the bill in charge to explain it. Does it set a precedent that the Government shall pay for personal injuries?

Mr. LODGE. We now have an act for that purpose.

Mr. CULBERSON. I so understand.

Mr. LODGE. I know nothing about it. I suppose this accident happened before the passage of the act.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, the accident occurred to this man while in the employ of the Government on government work. They were transporting some material by means of a car which ran on a track. I do not now recall just the mechanism, but some part of it required oil, and this man who went under it to oil it told the others to be sure to see that the car was not started until he came out. The car was started by touching a button at a point beyond sight of the location where the car was. An employee touched the button and started the car. This man was dragged along the track and crippled for life. He was very seriously injured. The accident affected his backbone, so that he has been paralyzed since.

This is one of those cases where in court, were it against a private corporation, there could be, I think, no possible question of the right of the injured party to recover. It is question simply whether the Government is going to recognize any personal injury claims. The Committee on Claims has not frequently reported in favor of such cases. Where they were exceptionally strong we have done it in the past and probably shall continue to do it in the future, unless the Senate determines that the rule shall be otherwise.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I have no particular objection to this bill. I do not know anything about it. But why has the Committee on Claims singled out this one case and rejected other cases exactly parallel to it? I have pending before the Committee on Claims a claim which is exactly parallel to this. An employee on the canal was injured without any fault of his. The President of the United States, in view of the serious nature of the case, asked the committee to consider it. I never could get a hearing before the committee. I never could get the case considered or reported upon. Why not make a general rule for cases of this kind? Why select one and reject all cases similar to it. I am not going to interpose any objection to the consideration of this bill, and I am merely asking for information.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator is stating it a little widely when he says that he could not get a hearing before the committee, because the committee has never refused to give any Senator a hearing, and would be very glad to have the Senator from Maryland or any other Senator come before it and present any case in which he may be interested.

In regard to the case to which the Senator from Maryland refers, my recollection is (for although he has not given the name of the claimant, I think I know the one to which he refers) the injury was sustained by a superior on the work through the negligence, if through the negligence of anyone, of an inferior; that is, through the negligence of a subordinate, if negligence at all.

That is as I remember the case to which the Senator refers; and it was on that ground at that time that I was opposed to paying the claim, because we had established the rule that we would not report favorably any claims unless the facts were such as would entitle the claimant to recover were the Government a private corporation.

Now, if you want to put it purely on sentimental grounds, the case the Senator refers to would appeal to one very strongly indeed. We have found, dealing with this vast number of cases, that we must follow some rule, and so we adopted the rule which, as we understood it, obtains between private litigants, and under that rule the claim the Senator refers to could not have obtained in any court.

The Congress has done away with the rule of fellow-servant since that time, and I do not know but that it will open the door very widely; in fact, that must be the case. At that time Congress had not done away with the rule of fellow-servant. Consequently we adopted it and adhered to it as closely as we could.

Mr. RAYNER. Has any general bill on the subject been passed by Congress?

Mr. FULTON. Dealing with the fellow-servant rule?

Mr. LODGE. As the bill will evidently lead to a great deal of debate, let it be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the bill be passed over. It will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I myself have no objection to the bill, but it seemed to me to be likely to lead to a great deal of debate.

Mr. RAYNER. I do not propose to debate it. I intend to vote for it.

Mr. LODGE. I do not object to the bill, and if there is to be no further debate, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. FULTON. Let the bill be voted on one way or the other.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts withdraws his objection.

By unanimous consent, as in Committee of the Whole, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay $50 per month for sixty months to Bernard W. Murray.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARLOWTON LAND DISTRICT, MONTANA.

The bill (S. 7925) to create an additional land district in the State of Montana, to be known as the "Harlowton land district," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BELLE FOURCHE LAND DISTRICT, SOUTH DAKOTA.

The bill (S. 7377) authorizing the creation of a land district in the State of South Dakota, to be known as the "Belle Fourche land district," was announced as next in order.

Mr. KITTREDGE. In the absence of the Senator who introduced the bill, and also reported it, I ask that it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice at the request of the Senator from South Dakota.

SEQUOIA AND GENERAL GRANT NATIONAL PARKS.

The bill (S. 7257) providing a means for acquiring title to private holdings in the Sequoia and General Grant national parks, in the State of California, in which are big trees and other natural curiosities and wonders, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in section 3, page 4, line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and twenty" and insert "ninety," so as to read:

There is hereby appropriated, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $90,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry into effect the provisions of this statute.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE-COMMERCE LAW.

The bill (S. 423) to amend section 6 of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and acts amendatory thereof, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill go to the calendar under Rule IX. There is an adverse report on it.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator from New Jersey not to insist on that request. I should like to have the bill passed over under Rule VIII.

Mr. KEAN. I will not insist on it.

Mr. FULTON. I wish to offer an amendment to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey withdraws his request, and the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. KEAN. It is an adverse report.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION AT TOKYO.

The bill (S. 7992) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for participation by the United States in an international exposition to be held at Tokyo, Japan, in 1912," approved May 22, 1908, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments.

Mr. CULBERSON. I presume the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has the bill in charge. I have looked over the report which accompanied it. It shows among other things that Mr. Loomis has been improperly paid $3,000 of salary. I do not know whether restitution has been made in that case since then or not.

Mr. FRYE. He has paid it back.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am glad to hear it. The report also shows that some four or five hundred dollars were spent out of the appropriation at a banquet given by some one at Tokyo. I do not know anything about those matters, but it might be well to consider how far we are going in paying money out of the Public Treasury for banquets.

Mr. FRYE. This bill is intended to stop all unnecessary expenditures; and I think, as it is drawn and has been amended by the Committee on Foreign Relations, it stops every expenditure except $1,000 a year to Mr. Loomis, which was regarded as necessary to keep us in touch with Japan.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well. If there has been restitution of the salary, and if the appropriation itself is so guarded that extraordinary expenditures can not occur again, of course I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. BACON. The appropriation of $1,000, I understand—I presume it is so expressed—covers not only salary but expenses.

Mr. FRYE. It does. The committee were very careful to stop all expenditures.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the committee will be stated in their order.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 8, after the words "commissioners-general," to insert "who now receives $8,000 per annum;" on page 2, line 3, after the words "nineteen hundred and fourteen," to insert "which amount shall also include his expenses;" in line 11, after the word "secretary," to insert "and other employees;" in line 12, before the word "services," to strike out "his" and insert "their;" in line 14, after the word "thereafter," to insert "the secretary;" and at the end of the bill to add "and that no expenses shall be incurred by the commission or clerical or other assistants employed prior to January 1, 1915," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to provide for participation by the United States in an international exposition to be held at Tokyo, Japan, in 1912," approved May 22, 1908, be, and the same is hereby, amended so that after January 1, 1909, one of the commissioners-general, who now receives $8,000 per annum, appointed under said act, shall receive as compensation for his services the sum of $1,000 per annum until the end of the year 1914, which amount shall also include his expenses, and thereafter the sum of $8,000 per annum until the end of the year 1917, and the other two commissioners-general shall receive no compensation for their services until the end of the year 1914, and thereafter shall receive $5,000 each per annum until the end of the year 1917; and so that the secretary and other employees shall receive no compensation for their services until the end of the year 1914, and thereafter the secretary shall receive $5,000 per annum until the end of the year 1917, and that no expenses shall be incurred by the commission or clerical or other assistants employed prior to January 1, 1915.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OUTWARD ALIEN MANIFESTS.

The bill (S. 7785) relative to outward alien manifests on certain vessels was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 12, after the word "Canada," to strike out the words "Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That until the provisions of section 12 of the immigration act of February 27, 1907, relating to outward alien manifests, shall be made applicable to passengers going out of the United States to Canada by land carriage, said provisions shall not apply to passengers going by vessels employed exclusively in the trade between the ports of the United States and the Dominion of Canada and the Republic of Mexico.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 12, 1909, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 11, 1909.

APPOINTMENT IN THE ARMY.

COAST ARTILLERY CORPS.

George Roswell Norton, of Massachusetts, to be second lieutenant, with rank from September 25, 1908.

NOTE.—The above-named person was nominated to the Senate December 8, 1908, under the name of George Rothwell Norton, and his nomination was confirmed December 14, 1908. This message is submitted for the purpose of correcting an error in the middle name of the nominee.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

CAVALRY ARM.

Capt. Herbert H. Sargent, Second Cavalry, to be major from January 8, 1909, vice Johnson, Second Cavalry, detailed as paymaster.

First Lieut. Leslie A. I. Chapman, Fourteenth Cavalry, to be captain from January 8, 1909, vice Sargent, Second Cavalry, promoted.

POSTMASTER.

MISSISSIPPI.

Lillie W. Nugent to be postmaster at Rosedale, State of Mississippi, in place of Edward M. Scott, removed.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 11, 1908.

THIRD ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE.

William Phillips, of Massachusetts, to be Third Assistant Secretary of State of the United States.

CONSULS-GENERAL.

Arnold Shanklin, of Missouri, to be consul-general of the United States of class 3 at Mexico, Mexico.

Alban G. Snyder, of West Virginia, to be consul-general of the United States of class 4 at Panama, Panama.

Richard M. Bartleman, of Massachusetts, to be consul-general of the United States of class 5 at Buenos Aires, Argentine Republic.

CONSULS.

David R. Birch, of Pennsylvania, to be consul of the United States of class 6 at Alexandria, Egypt.

Percival Heintzleman, of Pennsylvania, to be consul of the United States of class 8 at Swatow, China.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Capt. John Florentius Wild to be senior captain in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to rank as such from December 30, 1908.

First Lieut. James Guy Ballinger to be captain in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to rank as such from December 30, 1908.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Frederick S. Stratton, of California, to be collector of customs for the district of San Francisco, in the State of California.

ASSISTANT TREASURER.

Gideon C. Bantz, of Maryland, to be assistant treasurer of the United States.

DEPUTY ASSISTANT TREASURER.

William H. Gibson, of Pennsylvania, to be deputy assistant treasurer of the United States.

DEPUTY COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY.

Willis J. Fowler, of Indiana, to be deputy comptroller of the currency.

MELTER AND REFINER OF THE MINT.

Edwin R. Leach, of California, to be melter and refiner of the mint of the United States at San Francisco, Cal.

GENERAL APPRAISER OF MERCHANDISE.

Roy H. Chamberlain, of Iowa, to be general appraiser of merchandise.

ASSISTANT APPRAISER OF MERCHANDISE.

John D. McEwen to be assistant appraiser of merchandise in the district of New York, in the State of New York.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Wanton A. Shippee, of California, to be collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of California.

ASSAYER.

Joseph U. Eldredge, jr., of Utah, to be assayer in charge of the assay office of the United States at Salt Lake City, Utah.

ENVOYS EXTRAORDINARY AND MINISTERS PLENIPOTENTIARY.

Horace G. Knowles, of Delaware, to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Nicaragua.

Huntington Wilson, of Illinois, to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to the Argentine Republic.

Spencer F. Eddy, of Illinois, to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Roumania and Servia and diplomatic agent in Bulgaria.

THIRD SECRETARY OF EMBASSY.

Seth Low Pierrepont, of Connecticut, to be third secretary of the embassy of the United States at Paris, France.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Robert G. Valentine, of Holliston, Mass., to be Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

INDIAN INSPECTORS.

Z. Lewis Dalby, of Roanoke, Va., to be an Indian inspector.

Samuel F. O'Fallon, of Oregon, Mo., to be an Indian inspector.

ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSIONER.

Lieut. Col. Harry F. Hodges, Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army, for appointment as a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Harry Y. Saint, of Grandview, Wash., to be register of the land office at North Yakima, Wash.

PURCHASING AGENT FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

John A. Holmes, of the District of Columbia, to be purchasing agent for the Post-Office Department.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

MEDICAL CORPS.

Lieut. Col. Daniel M. Appel, Medical Corps, to be colonel.

Maj. John L. Phillips, Medical Corps, to be lieutenant-colonel.

Capt. Francis M. C. Usher, Medical Corps, to be major.

To be colonels.

Lieut. Col. Harry O. Perley, Medical Corps.

Lieut. Col. William B. Davis, Medical Corps.

To be lieutenant-colonels.

Maj. Guy L. Edie, Medical Corps.

Maj. William D. Crosby, Medical Corps.

Maj. Charles M. Gandy, Medical Corps.

Maj. Walter D. McCaw, Medical Corps.

Maj. Jefferson R. Kean, Medical Corps.

To be majors.

Capt. Willard F. Truby, Medical Corps.

Capt. Frederick F. Russell, Medical Corps.

Capt. Edwin P. Wolfe, Medical Corps.

Capt. Henry S. Greenleaf, Medical Corps.

Capt. Louis T. Hess, Medical Corps.

Capt. Christopher C. Collins, Medical Corps.

Capt. Benjamin J. Edger, jr., Medical Corps.

Capt. Samuel M. Waterhouse, Medical Corps.

Capt. Eugene H. Hartnett, Medical Corps.

Capt. Clyde S. Ford, Medical Corps.

Capt. Charles E. Marrow, Medical Corps.

Capt. M. A. W. Shockley, Medical Corps.

Capt. Robert N. Winn, Medical Corps.

Capt. Theodore C. Lyster, Medical Corps.

Capt. Sanford H. Wadhams, Medical Corps.

Capt. Chandler P. Robbins, Medical Corps.

Capt. Thomas L. Rhoads, Medical Corps.

Capt. Harry L. Gilchrist, Medical Corps.

Capt. William J. L. Lyster, Medical Corps.

CAVALRY ARM.

Capt. Carter P. Johnson, Second Cavalry, to be major.

First Lieut. E. Holland Rubottom, Ninth Cavalry, to be captain.

To be first lieutenants.

Second Lieut. Horace N. Munro, First Cavalry.

Second Lieut. Thomas P. Bernard, Third Cavalry.

Second Lieut. Daniel D. Tompkins, Tenth Cavalry.

Second Lieut. Clarence A. Dougherty, Thirteenth Cavalry.

COAST ARTILLERY CORPS.

Lieut. Col. Henry H. Ludlow, Coast Artillery Corps, to be colonel.

Maj. Millard F. Harmon, Coast Artillery Corps, to be lieutenant-colonel.

Capt. Andrew Hero, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, to be major.

First Lieut. Hugh S. Brown, Coast Artillery Corps, to be captain.

First Lieut. Wesley W. K. Hamilton, Coast Artillery Corps, to be captain.

Second Lieut. Richard Donovan, Coast Artillery Corps, to be first lieutenant.

INFANTRY ARM.

To be captains.

First Lieut. Allen Smith, jr., Third Infantry.

First Lieut. John B. Sanford, Twenty-fourth Infantry.

First Lieut. Frank B. Hawkins, Twenty-seventh Infantry.

First Lieut. Harry A. Hegeman, Nineteenth Infantry.

To be first lieutenants.

Second Lieut. Oscar K. Tolley, Fourteenth Infantry.

Second Lieut. Joseph F. Ware, Twenty-first Infantry.

Second Lieut. Harry L. Jordan, Eighth Infantry.

Second Lieut. Dean Halford, Twenty-second Infantry.

Second Lieut. Ralph W. Kingman, Sixteenth Infantry.

Chaplain.

Chaplain Joseph H. Sutherland, Twenty-third Infantry, to be chaplain with the rank of major.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL, RETIRED.

Col. John D. C. Hoskins, U. S. Army, retired, to be placed on the retired list of the army with the rank of brigadier-general.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

INFANTRY ARM.

Frederick Clifford Rogers, of Minnesota, to be second lieutenant.

MEDICAL RESERVE CORPS.

William Jeptha Calvert, of Missouri, late assistant surgeon, U. S. Army, to be first lieutenant.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Charles C. Moses to be a lieutenant in the navy.

Midshipman Miles A. Libbey to be an ensign in the navy.

Lieut. Albert W. Marshall to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy.

Second Lieut. Harry G. Bartlett to be a first lieutenant in the United States Marine Corps.

Asst. Paymaster Leon N. Wertenbaker to be a passed assistant paymaster in the navy.

Second Lieut. Harold H. Utley to be a first lieutenant in the United States Marine Corps.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

George W. Russell to be postmaster at Eufaula, Ala.
Dallas B. Smith to be postmaster at Opelika, Ala.

COLORADO.

Jessie G. Baird to be postmaster at Englewood, Colo.
David E. Gray to be postmaster at Greeley, Colo.
Robert R. Kelly to be postmaster at Crested Butte, Colo.

CONNECTICUT.

George W. Fletcher to be postmaster at Simsbury, Conn.
Judson D. Foote to be postmaster at Montowese, Conn.
Jerome S. Gainer to be postmaster at Noroton Heights, Conn.

GEORGIA.

William T. Edwards to be postmaster at Canton, Ga.

ILLINOIS.

Lulu R. Anderson to be postmaster at Kirkland, Ill.
Isaac W. Arnold to be postmaster at St. Elmo, Ill.
Philip H. Baker to be postmaster at Jonesboro, Ill.
Jacob W. Barkdoll to be postmaster at Tremont, Ill.
Cornell H. Brown to be postmaster at Batavia, Ill.
Edward Cosart to be postmaster at Cowden, Ill.
Joseph G. Greeson to be postmaster at Greenup, Ill.
William D. Hall to be postmaster at Table Grove, Ill.
Mabel J. Heavenhill to be postmaster at Sheridan, Ill.
Carrie Hovda to be postmaster at Leland, Ill.
Benjamin F. Louden to be postmaster at Trenton, Ill.
Thomas Millett, jr., to be postmaster at Troy, Ill.
Henry Noll to be postmaster at Virden, Ill.
Seneca Selby to be postmaster at Golden, Ill.
Moses C. Thomas to be postmaster at Homer, Ill.
Fred C. Whisler to be postmaster at Mackinaw, Ill.

IOWA.

Olie H. Anderson to be postmaster at Wesley, Iowa.
Richard M. Boyd to be postmaster at Sanborn, Iowa.
John Buchanan to be postmaster at Eagle Grove, Iowa.
Clinton S. Crouse to be postmaster at Prescott, Iowa.
William L. Gustin to be postmaster at Kellerton, Iowa.
Harry Higman to be postmaster at Winthrop, Iowa.
Albert C. Hotchkiss to be postmaster at Adel, Iowa.
Eva Keith to be postmaster at Goldfield, Iowa.
Albert R. Kullmer to be postmaster at Dysart, Iowa.
Eugene Stiles to be postmaster at Sidney, Iowa.
James W. Thorn to be postmaster at Lacona, Iowa.
M. P. Weaver to be postmaster at Algona, Iowa.
Harper W. Wilson to be postmaster at Audubon, Iowa.

KANSAS.

Joseph E. Aldrich to be postmaster at Sylvia, Kans.
Raymond S. Frazier to be postmaster at Bucklin, Kans.
Frank E. George to be postmaster at Altamont, Kans.
Charles W. Hawes to be postmaster at Augusta, Kans.
James R. Hillhouse to be postmaster at Delphos, Kans.
John P. Lang to be postmaster at Sylvan Grove, Kans.
John F. Price to be postmaster at Cherokee, Kans.
Floyd E. Richmond to be postmaster at Logan, Kans.
Clark C. Thomas to be postmaster at Moran, Kans.
Warren D. Vincent to be postmaster at Hoisington, Kans.
Charles C. Wilson to be postmaster at Scandia, Kans.

MAINE.

Charles E. Atwood to be postmaster at Biddeford, Me.
Guy S. Baker to be postmaster at East Millinocket, Me.
Charles H. Eastman to be postmaster at Millinocket, Me.
Albert Greenlaw to be postmaster at Eastport, Me.

MARYLAND.

William Hall Harris to be postmaster at Baltimore, Md.
Ida E. Macfarlane to be postmaster at Mount Savage, Md.
Asbury C. Riley to be postmaster at Snow Hill, Md.
Rose E. Walls to be postmaster at Millington, Md.
Jesse West to be postmaster at North East, Md.

MASSACHUSETTS.

George A. Birnie to be postmaster at Ludlow, Mass.
Charles E. Brady to be postmaster at Sandwich, Mass.
Henry Converse to be postmaster at Rutland, Mass.

MICHIGAN.

Simon H. Heath to be postmaster at Richmond, Mich.
R. F. Lemon to be postmaster at Harbor Springs, Mich.
Carl M. Lund to be postmaster at Harrisville, Mich.
Louis H. Tovatt to be postmaster at Standish, Mich.
George L. Worthington to be postmaster at Brooklyn, Mich.

MINNESOTA.

Iver Bondy to be postmaster at Henning, Minn.
Truman B. Horton to be postmaster at Stewartville, Minn.
Benjamin D. Underwood to be postmaster at Fergus Falls, Minn.
Harvey M. Webster to be postmaster at Ulen, Minn.

MISSISSIPPI.

Robert W. Hinton to be postmaster at Lumberton, Miss.
Samuel M. Howry to be postmaster at Oxford, Miss.
Rosa Mayers to be postmaster at Shelby, Miss.
Nannie B. Richardson to be postmaster at Woodville, Miss.
Alexander Yates to be postmaster at Utica, Miss.

MISSOURI.

Charles Ferguson to be postmaster at Willow Springs, Mo.
Elmer E. Hart to be postmaster at Eldon, Mo.
Francis M. Jones to be postmaster at Winona, Mo.
John A. Knowles to be postmaster at Flat River, Mo.
Benjamin C. Nichols to be postmaster at Trenton, Mo.
Warren W. Parrish to be postmaster at Adrain, Mo.
George B. Wade to be postmaster at Jasper, Mo.
Edward R. Williams to be postmaster at Richmond, Mo.

MONTANA.

Emma Dimmick to be postmaster at Eureka, Mont.
Ithel Sheldon Eldred to be postmaster at Deer Lodge, Mont.
Henry I. Grant to be postmaster at Columbus, Mont.
Percy J. Gosden to be postmaster at Bonner, Mont.
Albert Pfaus to be postmaster at Lewistown, Mont.
Benjamin T. Stevens to be postmaster at Harlowton, Mont.

NEBRASKA.

William E. Alexander to be postmaster at Orchard, Nebr.
Hubert L. Buckingham to be postmaster at Plainview, Nebr.
John G. Cannon to be postmaster at Pender, Nebr.
Benton Cotterman to be postmaster at Petersburg, Nebr.
Estella M. Davisson to be postmaster at Long Pine, Nebr.
Levi O. Dodge to be postmaster at Shickley, Nebr.
Darwin C. Grow to be postmaster at Loup City, Nebr.
Frances B. Horham to be postmaster at Adams, Nebr.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Arthur W. Charles to be postmaster at North Conway, N. H.

NEW JERSEY.

Joshua L. Allen to be postmaster at Pennington, N. J.
Samuel Gordon to be postmaster at South River, N. J.
Farley F. Holcombe to be postmaster at Hopewell, N. J.
William H. Jernee to be postmaster at Jamesburg, N. J.
Charlotte C. Ketcham to be postmaster at Belvidere, N. J.

NEW MEXICO.

W. A. Davis to be postmaster at Clovis, N. Mex.

NEW YORK.

Dana Brasted to be postmaster at Westport, N. Y.
James N. Bellinger to be postmaster at Mohawk, N. Y.
Jarius S. Chase to be postmaster at Windsor, N. Y.
John M. Gilmour to be postmaster at Morristown, N. Y.
David L. Jamieson to be postmaster at New York Mills, N. Y.
Frank H. Johnson to be postmaster at Interlaken, N. Y.
Frantz Murray to be postmaster at Dolgeville, N. Y.
Edward L. Ware to be postmaster at Lake Placid, N. Y.
Philo C. Wheeler to be postmaster at Cincinnatus, N. Y.
Charles N. Wood to be postmaster at Angola, N. Y.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Ole J. Bye to be postmaster at Ryder, N. Dak.
Henry Engelter to be postmaster at New Salem, N. Dak.
Maggie Fox to be postmaster at Michigan, N. Dak.
Alice Gilbertson to be postmaster at Towner, N. Dak.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Abraham F. Berkey to be postmaster at Windber, Pa.
Julia C. Gleason to be postmaster at Villanova, Pa.

RHODE ISLAND.

Edward S. Payne to be postmaster at Block Island, R. I.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Irene Fuller to be postmaster at Blunt, S. Dak.

TENNESSEE.

Jasper N. Fitzwater to be postmaster at Collierville, Tenn.

TEXAS.

Lora L. Rowell to be postmaster at Pearsall, Tex.
Edward H. Clark to be postmaster at Victoria, Tex.
Prince A. Hazzard to be postmaster at Colorado, Tex.

Jacob M. Harrell to be postmaster at Manor, Tex.
James H. Johnson to be postmaster at Lubbock, Tex.
Thomas J. Stevens to be postmaster at Sourlake, Tex.
Anderson C. Vinson to be postmaster at Timpson, Tex.

UTAH.

L. W. Shurtliff to be postmaster at Ogden, Utah.

VERMONT.

David K. Simonds to be postmaster at Manchester, Vt.
Henry S. Webster to be postmaster at Orleans (late Barton Landing), Vt.

VIRGINIA.

Harry Fulwiler to be postmaster at Buchanan, Va.
Clarence C. Middleton to be postmaster at The Plains, Va.
A. Redfern to be postmaster at Strasburg, Va.
M. L. Slemp to be postmaster at Pennington Gap, Va.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Paul H. Metcalf to be postmaster at Williamstown, W. Va.

WISCONSIN.

Herman M. Blumenthal to be postmaster at Columbus, Wis.
Frank B. Goodhue to be postmaster at Whitewater, Wis.

WYOMING.

Paul A. Kenyon to be postmaster at Kemmerer, Wyo.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 11, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.
Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.
The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 8143. An act granting to the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company a right to change the location of its right of way across the Niobrara Military Reservation; and

S. 4490. An act to correct the military record of David R. B. Winniford.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That it is with deep regret and profound sorrow that the Senate has heard the announcement of the death of Hon. REDFIELD PROCTOR, late a Senator from the State of Vermont.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay fitting tribute to his high character and distinguished services.

Resolved, That the Secretary transmit to the family of the deceased a copy of these resolutions, with the action of the Senate thereon.

Resolved That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, As a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 16954. An act to provide for the Thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 8143. An act granting to the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company a right to change the location of its right of way across the Niobrara Military Reservation—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 4490. An act to correct the military record of David R. B. Winniford—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had, on January 5, 1909, approved and signed bill of the following title:

H. R. 24832. An act for the relief of citizens of Italy.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had this day presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 22306. An act to authorize the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company and the Lackawanna Railroad Company of New Jersey to construct and maintain a bridge across the Delaware River from a point near the village of Columbia, Knowlton Township, Warren County, N. J., to the village of Slateford, Northampton County, Pa.

FRAUDS AND DEPREDATIONS IN PUBLIC SERVICE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following committee, in pursuance of the resolution (H. Res. 480) adopted on Saturday last.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. OLMSTED of Pennsylvania, Mr. CURRIER of New Hampshire, Mr. YOUNG of Michigan, Mr. BRANTLEY of Georgia, and Mr. BOWERS of Mississippi.

CENSUS BILL.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the census bill, take the same from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House from the Speaker's table the following House bill, with Senate amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 16954. An act to provide for the Thirtenth and subsequent decennial censuses, with amendments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire whether the gentleman from Indiana will state whether he intends the House to vote upon the amendment providing for printing outside of the Government Printing Office. If that is the case——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I would expect, of course, the House would have an opportunity to vote upon this question under any circumstance, and, judging by my own attitude in the matter, I would feel like taking the instructions of the House before agreeing either to that amendment or the one providing for the purchase of a census building.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, if that is the intention of the gentleman from Indiana, I have no objection; otherwise I desire that the House have an opportunity to express its opinion on both of those amendments.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Before consenting to either one of those amendments, speaking for myself, if I should be one of the conferees, I would bring the matter before the House for instructions and information.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, that the Senate amendments be disagreed to, and that the House ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Really, the Chair supposes what the gentleman desires to do—under the rule this bill will go to the Committee on the Census—is to take the bill from the Speaker's table at once and ask unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is exactly what I desire to do.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman for an assurance that the House will have an opportunity to vote directly upon the amendments of the Senate in reference to the purchase of a site and providing for the construction of a building.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Why, unless the Senate recedes from its amendments, I think I can assure the House that opportunity will be given.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says he "thinks he can assure the House;" he is able to assure the House without any thinking about it at all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will say as far as I may be able to control the matter the House will have an opportunity to vote upon the proposition.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will he give the same assurance in regard to printing outside of the Government Printing Office?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The same assurance in relation to the provision respecting the printing of the reports.

Mr. KEIFER. I suggest it might be a good time now to take the judgment of the House so that the committee would go with that knowledge with them. This pro forma action means nothing.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not believe this is a proper time to take it up. In the first place, I have not had an opportunity to investigate these two propositions sufficiently myself. I want a little time to make some investigation.

Mr. KEIFER. Perhaps it would be better to take the time now than later.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not think we should take it up now.

Mr. GARRETT. Ought that not to be investigated by the whole committee?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is not the usual way. It will come before the House for full discussion and consideration in due time, and it will expedite the work to put it in conference now.

Mr. GARRETT. If unanimous consent is granted now, will it in anywise change the parliamentary status and aspect of this bill?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In a degree it advances it one or two stages, from a parliamentary standpoint. Then it will be in conference, and I have no doubt that each of these important amendments will be submitted to the House for full debate and consideration before any final action is taken by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees:

Mr. CRUMPACKER, Mr. BURLEIGH, and Mr. HAY.

COMMISSIONS TO RETIRED OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House, from the Speaker's table, the bill (S. 653) to authorize commissions to issue in the cases of officers in the army retired with increased rank, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do.

Mr. MANN. The bill, as it was originally, proposed to give commissions for increased rank to the army. That was changed to give commissions to the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. Now, the amendment is to apply the same rule to the Revenue-Cutter Service. I may say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] that the law provides for the retirement of revenue-cutter officers who receive their commissions in the same manner as they do in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, with an advanced rank for those who served in the civil war. Precisely the same condition exists as to the Revenue-Cutter Service that exist as to the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps. Why not accept the Senate amendments?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the army was given an increased rank for civil-war service by special law and they have that rank so far as pay and allowances are concerned.

Mr. MANN. That is true of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The navy was given the same before the army had it. The other is the same. Within the last year or so you commissioned the Revenue-Cutter Service. It is not an army service, it is not a navy service, but a treasury service, and if the gentleman's statement is correct, when the conference gets together, and it is simply doing exact justice, it will be easy to agree. I doubt the correctness of the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MANN. I am sure the gentleman will not doubt the correctness of my statement about the Revenue-Cutter Service. The gentleman is mistaken in saying that in the last few years they have been commissioned. The officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service have been commissioned for more than a hundred years.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now, let me ask the gentleman this question: I understand that they were not commissioned in a sense on the retired list of Revenue-Cutter Service for years. They have been kept in the service because it was considered cruel to discharge men who were no longer capable of discharging the duties of the office, and the retired list was created some years ago for that reason, in order to get rid of what you gentlemen familiar with that service called the "dead timber" in the service. Now, where is the law passed by Congress that requires those who had served and had the grade to have this increased commission given them? I believe that was done for the Navy, the Army, and the Marine Corps. The Revenue-Cutter Service, according to the gentleman's own statement, in a way were retired with an increased grade when they were retired. They got the same commission then that they would in the case of an army officer retired by operation of law.

We have an increased grade and have a commission on retirement now with the officers of the army. If, for instance a captain comes up for examination for major, if he is not physically qualified he is retired and gets his commission as a major on being retired. It does not require this bill to give it to him, and so on all the way down the line; when he reaches the age of retirement now the law requires that he shall have that grade. But this is for a different class of people, who were taken en bloc on the retired list and given a grade for civil-war service. It does not affect the men on the active list at the date of the passage of this act. They get their commission when put on the retired list. These men, who were on the retired list when the bill for increased rank and pay was passed, get the rank and pay and the title without the commission. It is simply to issue to them a parchment. If it is true in your Revenue-Cutter Service, let us find it out, and that will be easy to adjust, but I do not think they are the same as the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

Mr. MANN. I very much regret that the gentleman from Iowa doubts my statement. It is true, nevertheless. If the gentleman desires to avail himself of a better source of information than I am, I am perfectly willing that he should have that opportunity.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Can the gentleman point to any law that provides that members of the Revenue-Cutter Service now on the retired list who had civil-war service shall have one advance grade?

Mr. MANN. Oh.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. These people were in the active service, and they have got their advanced grade and the commission for it.

Mr. MANN. I think there is only one officer affected by it. I am not at all particular about it, but I do not want a discrimination made against the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We can find out the facts.

Mr. MANN. It should be the same in both services. There is no difficulty whatever as to the facts.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Can the gentleman point to any law of Congress that provides that when an officer of the Revenue-Cutter Service who had civil-war service is put on the retired list that he shall be advanced one rank?

Mr. MANN. They are all retired with an advanced grade, now.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. But they were all on the active list, and when the law passed there was nobody on the retired list. There is the point of difference between the gentleman and myself.

Mr. MANN. No.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You had no retired list in the Revenue-Cutter Service until you passed that act——

Mr. MANN. A number of years ago.

Mr. HULL of Iowa (continuing). Under the statement made by the chairman on the floor, and, I think, the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. "The gentleman from Illinois" was opposed to the bill then, and would be now.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The point I make is this: That many of these men were kept on the active list simply because it would be cruel to turn them out. They were old and incapable of performing their duties in many cases. But when the retired list was created, they were on the active list, and when they had their retirement they had it with the advanced grade. All there is in this bill is where a man has retired with the advanced rank he shall have a commission issued to him of that rank. It does not give a man any advance in rank.

Mr. MANN. Well, it is issued to those who were in the civil war, and it only applies to the retired list.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It only applies to the retired list, and has nothing to do with those on the active list. My own judgment is that the gentleman from Illinois is mistaken as to his facts.

Mr. MANN. If I am, I am very much mistaken as to the statement made by the gentleman upon the passage of this bill.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's motion?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. To disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. HULL of Iowa, Mr. CAPRON, and Mr. HAY as conferees on the part of the House.

CORDOVA BAY, ALASKA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 6418) authorizing the sale of land at the head of Cordova Bay, in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, with House amendments disagreed to by the Senate and a request for a conference.

Mr. MONDELL. I move that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. MONDELL, Mr. VOLSTEAD, and Mr. GAINES of Tennessee.

JAIL AND WORKHOUSE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message (S. Doc. No. 648) from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith submit the report of the commissioners on the jail, workhouse, etc., in the District of Columbia.

The report is of such exceptional importance that I ask the Congress to consider well all that is therein set forth.

The Congress authorized the appointment of this commission, marked out the course of its inquiry, and invited its recommendations. The report, therefore, is to be treated not as offered advice or volunteered opinion, but as a direct answer to the questions put by the Congress, which, in substance, were as follows:

1. What is the real condition of things at the workhouse and the jail?

2. Ought either or both of these institutions to be removed?

3. What ought to be done generally in respect to the penal and correctional system of the District?

Immediate action is imperative unless we are to be still further committed to the present unfortunate programme of District action concerning the matters touched upon. More than a year ago the Congress appropriated $85,000 to build a new wing to the present workhouse. Later it required this commission to inquire and report whether the workhouse ought not to be removed. Thereupon the District Commissioners declined to award any contract to build the new wing until this report should come in, so that the Congress might have an opportunity to act upon it. If, however, the Congress should omit to act, they would doubtless feel bound to proceed with that work.

This report represents the opinion of practical men. All three of the commissioners are public-spirited citizens, who, at great cost of time and convenience, and with a disinterestedness which makes the entire community their debtor, have made the thorough investigation the result of which I put before you. Mr. Edson has lived in Washington for more than forty years and has been honorably associated with nearly every practical movement for social betterment in this city. Mr. La Dow is superintendent of federal prisons and has had many years' experience with prisoners and prisons. Judge Stafford, the chairman of the commission, who consented to serve only from the highest sense of public duty, has gained his knowledge from his experience in court, eight years of which have been upon the bench and two years in the criminal court of the District.

The report sets forth vividly the really outrageous conditions in the workhouse and jail. The overcrowding is great in the workhouse, and greater still in the jail where, of the six hundred inmates, five hundred are serving sentences in absolute idleness, with no employment and no exercise; in most cases two or three are confined in a single cell not large enough for one. They belong, moreover, to a class of prisoners that specially need and dread to be put to work. It is no longer a question whether something shall be done, but only a question as to what shall be done, for it is quite impossible that the existing situation should continue. The present antiquated and unsatisfactory plan ought not to be considered for a moment.

The report takes up the criminal problem in general, lays down the true principles concerning the treatment of criminals, deals with conditions here in Washington which have a manifest tendency to produce crime, and urges their removal—considering especially the dark and narrow alleys and unwholesome dwellings where most of the criminal population pass their days. It makes six specific recommendations, as follows:

1. A jail to be used only as a house of detention and never as a place where prisoners should be sent to serve sentences.

2. A probation system for cases that do not absolutely require imprisonment.

3. A reformatory for all who must be imprisoned and yet are hopeful cases.

4. A workhouse for those who are not hopeful cases and yet are not such as must be sent to a penitentiary.

5. Confinement in a penitentiary for the worst offenders.

6. A parole law for prisoners who may be safely released upon conditions before the expiration of their term.

Applying these propositions to the local situation, the report recommends:

First. That the present jail be used as the house of detention after its interior shall have been modernized.

Second. That a probation system be established at once by enacting a simple and inexpensive probation law, a draft of which is submitted with the report.

Third. That a reformatory be established upon a tract of land of not less than one thousand acres, widely separated from any other penal institution, consisting of unreclaimed land which can be cleared, cultivated, and built upon by the prisoners themselves. That eventually there shall be established upon this tract shops wherein a variety of industries may be taught and carried on, the product being easily consumable by the various district departments.

Fourth. That another tract of land of equal size be secured at once as the site for a workhouse. That this also be unreclaimed land upon which the workhouse prisoners may be put to work preparing the land for cultivation, and erecting the necessary buildings.

Fifth. That the class of prisoners not proper to be sent either to the reformatory or the workhouse be sent for the present to the United States penitentiaries at Leavenworth and Atlanta, and that for the present no penitentiary be erected specially for the District of Columbia.

Sixth. That a parole law be enacted upon the principles set forth in the report.

I earnestly ask that the Congress act at once in accordance with the recommendations of the report. The two most urgent measures, for which drafts of bills accompany the report, are, first, a probation law, and, second, an appropriation act which will relieve at once the present impossible situation and set us on our way toward the realization of an adequate prison system.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 11, 1909.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has listened to the reading of this message, and although there may be some doubt as to the committee to which it should be referred. it seems to the Chair that under the rule it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary, and he therefore makes that reference, and the message and the accompanying documents will be printed.

WOMEN NURSES FOR THE UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 15438) for the establishment and organization of a corps of trained women nurses for the United States Navy, and that the same lie on the table. This bill was incorporated in the naval appropriation bill which passed in the closing days of the last session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUSINESS.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of District of Columbia business.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. STERLING in the chair.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (S. 6359) to change the name and jurisdiction of the inferior court of justice of the peace in the District of Columbia, and desire to say that the bill had been read and discussed at some length when we were obliged to conclude our labors on the last District day, and a request had been made that the bill be read under the five-minute rule, which request I now renew.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What does the gentleman want to have done?

The CHAIRMAN. The request is that the bill be read under the five-minute rule.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Before the bill is read under the five-minute rule, I wish to say a very words.

In my judgment this bill should not pass in this form. These inferior civil justices were provided for the purpose of sitting in various parts of the District of Columbia, in their districts. The District Code provided that the justices of the supreme court should divide the District into districts for these justices and should designate the places in the districts where they should sit. In pursuance of that law the supreme court justices did divide the District of Columbia into these inferior-court districts, but they divided it in such a way, in my judgment, as entirely to destroy the purpose intended to be accomplished by Congress. They made the districts in such a manner that they all centered in the business section of the District of Columbia, and they designated practically in one location a place for the offices and holding of the court for all these judges. I differ with the committee as to how and where these judges should sit. In my opinion, the District of Columbia should be divided so that the inferior-court judges would sit in various parts of the District of Columbia—a judge in Georgetown, one in the central part of the city, and others in various other parts of the city—so that the courts would be close to the people who naturally would do business in the court. I know that the men who sit in the courts are opposed to this, and I also know that the lawyers are opposed to it.

It is much more convenient for the judges and for the lawyers to sit in a comparatively restricted space, but the poor litigants, who are compelled to come from all parts of the District, are not benefited, and they would be aided materially if the judges sat in the localities where the business arises.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman aware that under existing law and practice it frequently happens that the defendant who is being sued is cited into the wrong court because the parties can not very well ascertain, or do not ascertain, the exact limits of the dividing line between the districts?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can see how easy it is to be deceived about a certain designation of the district if they were all centered in one particular place. A person can hardly walk in the business section of this city without walking through all of these districts, while if the District of Columbia was divided up in a practical manner, there would be no difficulty at all about it.

Mr. MANN. That being the case, the existing conditions the gentleman admits are bad.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are bad because the law was badly executed.

Mr. MANN. That may be.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If common sense had been exercised, the conditions would not be bad.

Mr. MANN. Well, it is too much to expect that common sense will always be exercised by those who have the execution of the laws in the District, or elsewhere. We must presume against that; but, it being admitted that existing condiions are bad, and that having been an experiment, would it not be fairly wise to try and change these conditions and see whether this plan will not work better?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My judgment is that it would be better to carry out the original intention of the Congress, and then if that turns out not to be workable, to try some other innovation. Congress intended a certain thing should be done and it never has been done.

Mr. DRISCOLL. How are these districts established in Brooklyn?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The city is divided into municipal districts, and the court sits in the locality where the business arises. They are not centralized.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman from New York aware of the class of business that constitutes the major portion of the business before the justice courts here in this District?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not so much here as I am in other localities.

Mr. MANN. I do not think the gentleman knows much about justices of the peace courts; I hope he does not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I never thought myself so superior that I could not practice in courts of that character.

Mr. MANN. I have been informed by one of the judges here, since the matter was up the other day, that the most of the business here, the larger class of the cases at least, are what is called "landlord and tenant cases," over which justices of the peace have exclusive original jurisdiction, and it often happens that a number of cases may be brought by one renting agency.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and they want to bring them all in one locality instead of having the poor people who are to be dispossessed attending court where it is more convenient for them.

Mr. MANN. I made the statement because I understood the gentleman to say that it would not be so convenient for attorneys, and plainly in a case of that sort it would be more convenient to them to have all the cases brought where they could be heard in regular order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I presume it is true in all courts of this character that the majority of the business consists of landlord and tenant business. It is due to the fact that under the Republican administration the poor are unable to earn enough money to pay their rent. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. That is the best argument the gentleman has made on this subject yet.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I may make some additional ones before I am done; I certainly will if I bring this administration into the discussion. Has the gentleman from Illinois completed his question? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I have some others, but I thought the gentleman would prefer to answer them in my time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I didn't know but that the gentleman was discouraged when he began to think of the enormous amount of misery that has been inflicted upon the poor by this administration. I suppose that checked him for a time. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish unnecessarily to delay the committee, but I did wish to express my opinion on the bill, and so for that reason I shall vote against its passage.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill in its present state. Primarily it is a bill to convert the justices of the peace into judges of a court, to give them the incidental powers and jurisdiction of a court. If that is going to be done, this bill ought to be amended, and if not amended it ought to be defeated. If I am correct about it—I do not know, and I will ask the chairman or the gentleman in charge of the bill to give me the information—are juries impaneled to try cases before justices of the peace in this District?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand so, when called for.

Mr. SIMS. Does this bill make any change in that respect?

Mr. CAMPBELL. None whatever.

Mr. SIMS. This bill provides for the exclusive jurisdiction up to $100?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Raises the exclusive jurisdiction from $50 to $100, and the concurrent jurisdiction from $300 to $500.

Mr. SIMS. I will ask the gentleman from Kansas, can an appeal be taken to the District court from any case tried in the justice court, regardless of amount?

Mr. CAMPBELL. We do not change any existing law in this bill, except as to the jurisdiction——

Mr. SIMS. I am asking what the existing law is.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not advised as to the matter of appeals.

Mr. SIMS. I am not familiar with these questions.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will find on page 3, lines 14 and 15, that this bill reserves the right to remove any case by certiorari; that is, in cases of concurrent jurisdiction.

Mr. SIMS. I am asking about direct appeal. The gentleman can not tell me whether an appeal is granted in all cases, regardless of the amount involved?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not informed as to that matter, but the exclusive jurisdiction of the justice has been from $50 to $300, and I take it there would naturally, therefore, be no appeal between those amounts.

Mr. SIMS. That is, up to $50 there could be no appeal to the District court?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That would be my opinion.

Mr. SIMS. If this bill passes, there can be no appeal from the decision in justices' courts unless the amount involved is over $100.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not say so. We are not changing the law on that subject, except that we increase the exclusive jurisdiction from $50 to $100, and the concurrent jurisdiction from $300 to $500.

Mr. SIMS. I will ask the chairman whether he can inform me whether an appeal can be taken as the law now is from any case decided by a justice of the peace where the amount involved is less than $50?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am not sure where the amount is less than $50. I am not sure as to that.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman can not advise me as to that?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am not certain about it; no, sir.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that in the enactment and inception of the original law it was intended that these justice of the peace should hold their courts in such portion of their districts as would be convenient to the people living within the area of a particular district. The districts have been laid off now so as to practically nullify that intention of the law, if such was their intention, and we are asked to create a municipal court. I am not opposed to that; but if we are going to create a court, let us create one and give it jurisdiction worthy of the name of a court. Let us give it jurisdiction to the extent of $1,000. If we have to have a court here, with judges and clerks and all the surroundings of a real court, I can not see why their jurisdiction should be limited to the petty sum of $500. Many of these cases no doubt would not be appealed. The commissioners in their report say that the District supreme court is now so crowded that the exclusive jurisdiction of these justices of the peace should be increased to $1,000; that often you can not get a trial there now for a year or more after the suit is brought—I suppose the appeal is taken. If we have judges here with a salary of $3,000 or $2,500, which is equal to the salary of any judge in the State of Tennessee, except one sitting upon the supreme bench, the court of appeals, why can not they try cases involving more than $500? The limit of their jurisdiction is such as to impeach the dignity of anybody who would be a judge of any court, and the importance and the reliability to be attached to it.

Mr. BATES. May I ask the gentleman a question? Do I not understand that by the provisions of this bill the compensation of the judges is to be decreased from the present rate of $3,000 a year to $2,500 a year?

Mr. SIMS. Well, nominally, because it is now $3,000, but they have only appropriated $2,500.

Mr. BATES. It is now $3,000.

Mr. SIMS. For justices of the peace.

Mr. BATES. But the bill only carries an appropriation of $2,500.

Mr. SIMS. This appropriation bill heretofore making appropriations only appropriates $2,500, instead of $3,000.

Mr. BATES. Well, I had been led to believe this bill was in the interest of economy as well as consolidation of courts.

Mr. SIMS. There is really no economy in it whatever. Now, I have been told, I do not assert——

Mr. BATES. It is an economy in reducing the compensation——

Mr. SIMS. No; there is only $2,500 appropriated now.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They are paying them $3,000 a year.

Mr. SIMS. I understood they are appropriating only $2,500.

Mr. BATES. I understand it is $3,000.

Mr. SIMS. I may be mistaken in that; I have not got it from an official source. But, Mr. Chairman, I think if there are going to be justices of the peace, if they are going to remain justices of the peace, they should hold their court, as no doubt was the intention, in the center of population of their respective districts. If it is going to be a court, their appointment should not be limited to any particular area or district in the District of Columbia. If we are going to make it a court, let us make it one, and authorize the appointment of these judges from anywhere in the District, and authorize suits to be brought from any part of the District before any one of these judges in this court. Now, I can not see why we should increase the exclusive jurisdiction from $50 to $100, and then not increase the maximum jurisdiction beyond the petty sum of $500, unless it is perchance to cut off appeals from the poorer classes, whose suits do not involve the amount. Of course, if the law is that way——

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The concurrent jurisdiction now is increased from $300 to $500. You may bring a suit in this court now for a thousand or fifteen hundred dollars or $2,000 if you wish.

Mr. SIMS. You do not mean before a justice of the peace.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why not?

Mr. SIMS. You do not mean you can bring under the present law a suit for $2,000?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly, if you wish. Their jurisdiction is not limited. The concurrent jurisdiction has been increased from $300 to $500.

Mr. SIMS. What is the limit of the jurisdiction of a suit brought before a justice of the peace as the law now stands?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Three hundred dollars, as I understand it, and we are increasing it to $500.

Mr. SIMS. We are increasing the maximum jurisdiction to $500?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Now, the only difference between a justice of the peace and the court is $200 in the amount involved, because justices of the peace now have cases brought up to $500 and remain nothing but a justice of the peace with a right to bring a suit and appeal from the court in any sum exceeding $500.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. SIMS. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. MANN. Would it satisfy the gentleman if this bill would be amended so as to increase the jurisdiction from $300 to $1,000?

Mr. SIMS. Decidedly.

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman. Suppose we do that and pass the bill.

Mr. SIMS. I am perfectly willing to do that if we amend the bill so as to make it a real court and not permit these judges to be appointed from a particular locality in the District of Columbia, and then not require them to hold court in that locality. We ought to go further——

Mr. MANN. It does not seem to me it makes so much difference what localities they are appointed from, although I think this is an absurd provision.

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I assume the President will be able to find a fairly good piece of material in any one of these districts for a reasonably good judge.

Mr. SIMS. Now, let me ask a question there. Does the gentleman from Illinois understand—and I will address this also to the chairman of the committee or the gentleman who reported the bill—and if this becomes a law will the President be required to appoint bona fide citizens of the District of Columbia as these judges?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; you will find that on page 2 of the bill.

Mr. SIMS. That is exactly what I want. I want the jurisdiction increased as large as you can get it, with a jury to try these cases, and not have so many and so often the rights of local citizens brought before judges who live and vote in other States and yet hold court here and determine causes here.

Mr. BATES. Allow me to ask one other question.

Mr. SIMS. I am in favor of the bill if it is made the right kind of a bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will ask if the gentleman has read the bill?

Mr. SIMS. I have.

Mr. BATES. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that this is only a justices' court and not a court of record, and would the gentleman go on record as advocating a bill giving jurisdiction to courts not of record and as high as $1,000?

Mr. SIMS. Absolutely so, I would—unhesitatingly.

Mr. BATES. I think the gentleman's judgment on that subject could be amended.

Mr. SIMS. It is not a matter of judgment. It is a matter of actual experience and knowledge for many years. Let me tell the gentleman that in my own State justices of the peace have jurisdiction of notes, bills, checks, and everything of that kind up to $1,000, and for unliquidated damage accounts up to $500. They are not courts of record. They do not get any salary. They get only the fees, but from every decision of the justice of the peace there can be an appeal to the circuit court, where you can get trial by jury. Why should not a justice of the peace be able to render a judgment on any litigated note or matter of that kind?

Mr. BATES. The courts of record in the States of the Union are limited to $300.

Mr. MACON. Right there I will ask the gentleman if this bill does not propose to make it a court of record and give them a clerk to keep the record?

Mr. BATES. I will ask the chairman of the committee if his bill makes it a court of record? Does it not give them a clerk?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It makes a clerk for the court.

Mr. MACON. What is a court of record if it is anything more than a judge and a clerk to keep the record?

Mr. CAMPBELL. This clerk will keep the same books that are now being kept by the justices of the peace. He is not given a seal, as I understand it.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Does this court have a seal?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; it has no seal.

Mr. SIMS. This is a justice of the peace, misnamed a judge?

Mr. MACON. That is it.

Mr. SIMS. If you are going to make it a court, let us give them the powers and dignity of a court.

Mr. MANN. Let us make it a thousand dollars.

Mr. SIMS. It certainly ought to be a thousand dollars. I think, further, if the supreme court here is crowded, it would be good legislation, if we are going to create this court, to give it exclusive jurisdiction for the bringing of a suit up to the amount of their jurisdiction, with the unlimited right of appeal to the supreme court.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman permit me? The hearings before the committee disclosed the fact that justices' dockets are now so crowded that poor litigants have to wait indefinitely in order to have their causes heard, and the concurrent jurisdiction is only $300. You are increasing the exclusive jurisdiction from $50 to $100, and the concurrent jurisdiction from $300 to $500, which will enlarge the business of these justices or of this court.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman think that these justices are an overworked set of men now?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I only go by what the testimony before the committee shows. It shows that fact. It shows that the court is crowded, and I have letters here showing that litigants have to wait and that it is practically impossible to have trials disposed of immediately after they are filed.

Mr. SIMS. With four justices of the peace?

Mr. CAMPBELL. With six justices of the peace.

Mr. SIMS. And yet you are going to expedite business by reducing them to four?

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is now no transfer from one justice to another.

Mr. MANN. One justice may be crowded and the other five have nothing to do.

Mr. SIMS. But as a body they are not crowded.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, yes; when this court is created the six justices are consolidated; then the business can be distributed among them by the clerk, so that they can take care of the business and enable them to dispose of it more expeditiously.

Mr. SIMS. If the bill passes without an amendment, will not the suit have to be brought before the justice representing the district in which the plaintiff lives?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not at all.

Mr. SIMS. Will each judge under this bill have concurrent jurisdiction with all the other judges on any suitor in the district, wherever he may live?

Mr. CAMPBELL. He will. The case is filed with the clerk. The clerk assigns it for trial to Justice A, Justice B, or Justice K, as the case may be, wherever the docket of the judge justifies the assignment.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me? Will not this be the case, or should not this be the case? The case is filed with the clerk. When the court convenes one case will be sent to one judge, another case to another judge, and when any judge is without a case he will notify the clerk, who will send him another case.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Beginning at line 16, page 3, explains just how the cases shall be assigned.

Mr. SIMS. Will the suit still have to be brought before the justice?

Mr. MANN. Not before the justice.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is brought in the municipal court in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SIMS. Now, you have to bring it in a certain district in which the plaintiff or defendant resides.

Mr. MACON. It wipes out all of this.

Mr. SIMS. In effect it does.

Mr. MANN. I think it ought to.

Mr. SIMS. I think so.

Mr. MANN. You bring it to the court, and it makes no difference to the defendant or plaintiff.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I will admit very frankly that I was not on the subcommittee that handled this bill and not as familiar as I should be with it to state the effect of its passage. My only object is, if we are going to do something, that it should be something worth while. I think the jurisdiction ought to be increased to $1,000; but if no appeal is allowed, and the sum is now $50, it ought to remain at $50.

Mr. MANN. I take it that will be the amount that will be generally covered. I have no doubt it is the same here as in other cities; a number of the cases will be forcible entry and detainer—landlord cases—where the amount involved may be only a month's rent. The real necessity for the measure is much larger than, I take it, necessarily is with cases of that kind.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, what I am trying to convey to the committee is that if we are trying to do something, let us try not to do something that we would not do thoroughly. I do not think this measure when before the House was fully understood. I tried to have the House understand it by inquiries. I am heartily in favor of increasing the jurisdiction and thus make it a court in fact as well as in name, and if we are to create a court of this kind and give position, let us give the position to bona fide citizens of this District, who do not claim, and have not for a number of years, to be citizens of any State in the Union. Now, I am heartily in favor of the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois to increase the jurisdiction to a thousand dollars. These other matters, which have appeared to me to be in the way, have no serious objection that may prevent the bill from being submitted to the judgment of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the gentleman from Illinois expect to press his amendment?

Mr. MANN. I do; and I want to be heard a few moments on it.

Mr. SIMS. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I was present before the Christmas holidays, when this bill was under consideration, and since that time I have talked with several men in the District of Columbia, and they all favor the idea of segregating these courts in the center of the city and in one building. Now, there seem to be only two objections to this bill on the part of those who are against it, and one is that they do not like to have a man formerly called a justice of the peace now called a judge. I have no such objection. I am always willing to dignify courts as far as possible, and always willing to raise the dignity of courts when it does not cost anything to the Government; and I am inclined to think——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In this case I want to say we pay them less than we do now.

Mr. DRISCOLL. And specially am I in favor of raising the dignity of a court when I can reduce the cost, because I am inclined to think that the ordinary person may have more respect for the judgment given by one who is called a "judge" than for a judgment rendered by an official who is called and known as a justice of the peace.

It strikes me the increase of the exclusive jurisdiction from $50 to $100 is a very proper amendment to the old law. Now the main objection here is that these courts will be all in the center of Washington, instead of being held in the outlying districts.

Mr. SIMS. They are not held that way now, I understand.

Mr. DRISCOLL. They were intended to be so held. The city is divided up into districts, and for convenience they have as a matter of fact located the offices of the different justices of the peace practically in the center of the city. So they have done as a result of practical experience and for the convenience of witnesses, litigants, and lawyers exactly what this bill proposes to do. It is better that there be a central court, and that cases be assigned to one or another of the judges who may not be otherwise occupied. If the city were divided up into small districts, and each justice required to hold his office in the district in which he lives, a justice would often have to try and decide cases in which his neighbors were interested, which might be embarrassing to him; and the fact that a case under this proposed act can be submitted for trial to a judge who lives in another part of the city and does not know anything about the local conditions, and is not acquainted with the people who are interested, will tend toward impartiality, and therefore a higher administration of justice. I am inclined to think that on the simple question of economy and of convenience it is better for the litigants to come to the center of the town and bring their witnesses than it would be to hire the lawyers to go from the center of the town to try the cases in remote parts of the district. All of the street railway lines center at or near the same place, just as all roads used to lead to Rome, and it is quite as convenient for anybody to come from a remote part of the town to the center as to go across lots a much shorter distance.

So that purely for convenience and for the saving of time and expense it strikes me it is better to have this court located in the heart of the city.

In the city of Syracuse, where I live, we have had some experience in this matter. Syracuse, N. Y., is a city of 130,000 or 140,000 people, a very prosperous and enterprising town. In any other State than New York it would be regarded as quite metropolitan. There are, I believe, twenty-nine States in this Union in none of which is there a city as large as Syracuse, but in the State of New York it suffers by comparison, for it is overshadowed somewhat by the greater cities of New York and Buffalo.

Mr. MANN. The city may be overshadowed, but its representative never is.

Mr. DRISCOLL. In Syracuse we had five or six justices of the peace until about ten years ago, when we reorganized our justice courts. We created a municipal court with two judges, who hold their court in the county court-house, in the center of the city, and who have jurisdiction, I think, up to $1,000. These judges get $3,000 a year. So far as I have ever heard, that judicial system for the trial of small cases has been very satisfactory to the people—not only to the bar, but to the litigants—and there is no desire on the part of any of our people to change the names of our judicial officers to justices of the peace or to go back to the old system.

Mr. MACON. You have no justices of the peace in your county at all?

Mr. DRISCOLL. We have in the county.

Mr. MACON. But not in the city?

Mr. DRISCOLL. In the towns outside of the city we have the old-fashioned system of justices of the peace and courts of special sessions, but in the city of Syracuse we have no justices of the peace. We have these municipal judges and a police judge, and they do all the civil and criminal work ordinarily done by magistrates and justices of the peace.

I do not think there is much opposition to this bill. There can not be any reasonable objection to changing the title from justice of the peace to judge as long as the people of Washington want it. Since the lawyers and litigants want a change from holding courts in separate districts to one building in the center of the city, we should not object. This bill in its main provisions is a meritorious one and should pass.

Mr. SIMS. I understood the gentleman from Kansas to say that this bill provided that the justices of the peace, the judges, after the bill became a law, must be appointed from citizens of the District of Columbia; am I correct?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The law now requires that, and we do not change that.

Mr. SIMS. But the bill says this:

That no person shall be appointed to said office unless he shall have been a bona fide resident of said District for the period of at least five years.

He can still be a citizen of a State, as I understand, and they are doing it here—voting and participating in political matters at home, in the States, and yet being a judge of a court in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not think the President has at any time appointed a justice who was not a resident of the District.

Mr. SIMS. What is the difference between the appointment of a justice of the peace and the judge of a higher court?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The bill provides that he must be a resident of the District.

Mr. SIMS. Why not provide that he shall be a citizen as well as a resident, and that he shall not claim or exercise acts of citizenship elsewhere? At the present time a justice of the peace must be appointed from among the citizens of this District, but if this bill passes he will be merely a resident, and if the bill passes I shall ask that an amendment be inserted providing that he shall be a bona fide citizen of the District of Columbia and not exercise acts of citizenship elsewhere for the period mentioned in the bill of five years.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How would you gain anything? A man only gets a citizenship here by residing here.

Mr. SIMS. No; he can be a citizen here by ceasing to be one anywhere else.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How can he acquire citizenship here except by residence?

Mr. SIMS. By not exercising it anywhere else, repudiating citizenship anywhere else.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, I have constituents in my district who have not exercised the right of citizenship in my district for thirty years, and who still say that they live in Cedarville.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then, they belong to the Ananias Club. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, no.

Mr. SIMS. How will the amendment I suggest hurt your bill if they are not citizens elsewhere?

Mr. CAMPBELL. They can not acquire citizenship here by voting.

Mr. SIMS. No; but they can by not exercising citizenship elsewhere.

Now, on page 3 the bill says, with reference to the jurisdiction:

That said jurisdiction shall be exclusive when the amount claimed for debt or damages or the value of personal property claimed does not exceed $100, and concurrent with the supreme court of the District of Columbia when it exceeds $100 and is not in excess of $500, with the same right to remove any case by certiorari as heretofore in cases of concurrent jurisdiction.

I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas if there is no method of appealing from the decision of a justice of the peace to the supreme court except by this method of certiorari?

Mr. CAMPBELL (reading)—

The appeals from the justice of the peace shall be heard and determined by the circuit court.

So I take it that the appeals are provided for.

Mr. SIMS. It is provided for the removal only by certiorari.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It does not restrict it to removal by certiorari.

Mr. SIMS. It says:

With the same right to remove any case by certiorari as heretofore in cases of concurrent jurisdiction.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. If I understand the office of certiorari in lieu of an appeal, it can only be used where the right of appeal has been lost through blameless misfortune by the party seeking to appeal.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly. But we do not change the code of the District in this bill.

Mr. SIMS. But you are repealing all laws inconsistent with it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. We are not changing the code as to the qualifications of the justice or of the judge; we are not changing the matter of residence. The same language that is used to-day in the code is used in this bill touching the residence of the applicant for a place on the bench.

Mr. SIMS. I will state that I shall offer the amendment at the right time. I did not know that it would be necessary to offer it if I had an explanation, but I believe it will be.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the question was raised a few moments ago as to the salary of justices of the peace, and the committee assumes that it figures out a saving of $200 a year in the pending bill. The salaries we now pay justices of the peace are $2,500 a year.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the code reads $3,000 a year.

Mr. MANN. The law provides, and I read from the bill of this year, which is the identical language with the act of appropriation—for six justices of the peace, at $2,500 each, and the further sum of $400 each for rent, clerical service, stationery, and other expenses—in all $17,400.

I do not think that is a very important matter, and I refer to it only in connection with the question that was raised. The pending appropriation bill, which will be called up again to-morrow, also provides that the next vacancy in the court of the office of justice of the peace for the District of Columbia shall not be filled, and thereafter the number of justices of the peace for the District of Columbia shall not exceed five.

I suppose that would be a real saving in money. Whether it would otherwise or not, I do not undertake to say. But, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this bill should pass. At first blush, for myself I thought it was probably along erroneous lines, but upon consideration I concluded that it is a good bill and ought to pass.

Congress provided for the division of the District of Columbia into various districts, each district to have a justice of the peace, and each justice of the peace to have jurisdiction in his district of suits brought against defendants residing in his district. Undoubtedly many who voted for such provisions contemplated the division of the District into districts so that the justices of the peace would be in different portions of the District of Columbia—one in Georgetown, one at the other end of the District, and in various parts of the city of Washington, perhaps. For reasons, whether good or bad it does not make much difference, probably good, when it came to a division into justice of the peace districts, the District was so divided that they all centered in one locality. The result of that was that in making this division lines narrowed to a point, and there are many buildings in the city of Washington now, as I am informed by one of the justices of the peace since this matter was up for discussion before, where it is almost impossible, if not impossible, to tell which district the building is located in, and the result of that is that often a defendant is sued in one court and it is ascertained in court that that defendant is sued in the wrong district when it is learned where his residence is. I have a letter here from one of the justices, written since the discussion of this matter before, in which he says:

Without any natural boundaries, the several districts now have to be marked out by lines on the city plat running along the centers of streets. It was thought that the subdistricts so marked would be plain, and that any house having a number could be easily located. But this is not found to be true in practice, and even with the aid of a map there are many buildings in the city and suburbs which are not easily located as between two contiguous subdistricts. The consequences of bringing suit in a wrong subdistrict are that the plaintiff loses his initial cost and one or more day's time. This is a source of vexation with no compensating advantages.

And I presume also that the defendant is brought into court twice, probably.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How does the bill before us seek to cure that?

Mr. MANN. The bill now pending does away with the exclusive jurisdiction of a justice in a particular district and provides that all of these justices shall hold their courts in one building, that suits shall be commenced by filing the proper papers with a common clerk to all of the justices, and, under rules to be provided by the judge, the clerk shall apportion the different suits between the judges.

Mr. DRISCOLL. From what is the gentleman reading?

Mr. MANN. I read from a letter of one of the justices of the peace. In reference to the matter of expense under the proposed bill the fees are all paid to an officer provided for, a clerk or otherwise, I do not remember which. This particular justice of the peace from whose letter I have been reading, says in reference to that matter:

Let me say a word now relating to the most vexatious duty justices of the peace under the present system have to perform, to wit, the handling of money paid into court as fees. And first I will say, under our system the justice receives no other money except such as is paid for his fees and that of the marshal, and as to the marshal's fees, he acts as a convenience merely, to receive and pay over each day the fees for that day's business. Under existing arrangements the justice must submit to constant interruptions, no matter how much he may be absorbed in the trial of a cause, to receive new cases, count the money, and make change; and when we add to this the many other miscellaneous duties which could be so much better done by the clerk or his deputy, who is not already preoccupied, it must, I think, be apparent that the justice's duties are too many and too various to be advantageously performed by one man.

Mr. Chairman, my first impression upon seeing this bill was that it was not to the interest of the poor defendant or the poor plaintiff, but upon consideration of the bill it seems to me that it is not only in the interests of good administration in the courts, but is to the interests both of the plaintiff and the defendant, who will be detained far less time under the provisions of this bill than under the existing practice.

Mr. MACON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly. I always yield to my distinguished friend from Arkansas.

Mr. MACON. I thank the gentleman. Does not the gentleman believe if all these courts are located in one building that there will soon grow up a professional jury system, whereby cases will be decided according to favoritism, prejudice, or whim, rather than according to merit? The gentleman knows that in almost all courts where they are held regularly or continuously, that a lot of professional jurors hang around all the time for the purpose of getting on juries, and it is often the case that they do not pay any more attention to the merits of the causes submitted to them than they do to the wind that is blowing on the outside of the building in which they sit. They try the cases according to favoritism or whim or prejudice.

Mr. DRISCOLL. That has not been so up our way.

Mr. MACON. Oh, I have seen it done, and I think others have seen it as well as myself. New York, the gentleman's State, I take it, is not entirely different to all of the other States in this Union along that line.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In answer to the gentleman from Arkansas, I wish to read section 7 of the Code of the District of Columbia, which is as follows:

Trial by jury before justices of the peace is hereby abolished.

Mr. MACON. What, doing away with a jury entirely?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, no; that is the law now.

Mr. SIMS. Then the gentleman answered me incorrectly when he said they had trial by a jury.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I did. I sent for the code and I am reading it.

Mr. MACON. We are not to have juries in the municipal court then?

Mr. CAMPBELL. We are not changing the law as to that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will find there is an appeal provided for, and they can appeal.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, there is an appeal provided for, and a jury may be had in the appellate court.

Mr. SIMS. Can they appeal from any amount?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; any amount above $5.

Mr. SIMS. I understood they could not appeal for any amount less than $50.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They may appeal from any amount that has been triable in a justice's court.

Mr. MANN. I remarked to the gentleman a while ago that the principal classes of cases are landlord and tenant cases. Most of those cases are brought by a real-estate agent, and the law and the practice is that no judgment shall be rendered in such case without the personal attendance either of the plaintiff or his agent. The result of it is that a real-estate firm having a large rent business, sometimes filing a dozen or fifteen cases a day possibly, is required to file them in all of the six different courts. That requires a much greater amount of labor for the plaintiff without any corresponding benefit to the defendant at all, because most of those cases are default cases, without being able to have one person attend in court on all cases at once. One person must attend one court and the same person attend another court at a different hour, or else different persons attending different courts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, that is a very remarkable condition that no judgment can be entered in a court unless the attendance and oath of some person is required. Does the gentleman know of any court where there is a judgment without some testimony or statement by some one under oath?

Mr. MANN. I think very often you can get a judgment on a promissory note without bringing other testimony. In my city you can get judgment without getting any testimony, and so you can in New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The bill or complaint must at least be verified, and this is the most remarkable statement I have heard, that it might be required in this court before they enter judgment that somebody should make oath as to the purpose for which judgment is entered. That is really a startling condition.

Mr. MANN. Well, it probably is startling to the gentleman, but when he has practiced law a few years longer, really practiced law, he will discover that his own State provides for the entry of judgment in many cases without oath when——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not in a single instance in my State or, I may add, in the State of the gentleman from Illinois. Perhaps he will state some instance in his State where judgment can be entered, even on a promissory note; because the defendant defaults there the party must come and testify when the inquest is taken, or else there must be a verified plea, but the oath to the facts must be made at some stage of the proceedings.

Mr. MANN. On the contrary. In the gentleman's State, as in mine, if you file a copy of a promissory note with a declaration, or whatever you call it in your State, and the defendant makes no answer to it you obtain a deferred judgment. So, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it would be desirable to pass this bill. Personally I should prefer to see the jurisdiction of the court raised and the salary not decreased.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. What is the salary now?

Mr. MANN. The salary appropriated is $2,500.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no pride of authorship in this bill. It was introduced in the Senate, considered by the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, passed by the Senate, and sent to this House and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and by that committee to the subcommittee, of which I happen to be chairman. I called the committee together, and we had a hearing on the bill and considered it carefully. Many persons appeared in favor of the bill as it passed the Senate. It was noted in the papers here that there would be a hearing on the bill on a particular day. No one appeared in opposition to the bill. No one appeared with any criticism of any provision in it.

Of my own motion, I suggested that six justices, centered as proposed in this bill, under the name of the "municipal court of the District of Columbia," and with a clerk, might be reduced to four. Nearly everyone who took any notice whatever of that proposition said that the six justices now are crowded with business, and that litigants in many instances had to wait in order to have their causes tried. The idea, therefore, of having the number reduced to four was abandoned, and the bill was reported——

Mr. SIMS. You have reported the amendment at four.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That refers to reducing the terms from six years to four years.

Mr. SIMS. There is no subsequent report here.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I went to every member of the subcommittee, as well as to others, and they signed a supplemental report.

Mr. SIMS. There is no evidence of that in the report here. The bill never went back to the committee, so I naturally supposed it was four. The bill does not change the law of the District of Columbia in any way except in centralizing these officers in a particular place, giving them a clerk, and calling them a municipal court instead of justices of the peace. Can the gentleman tell me, without trouble, what jurisdiction the justices of the peace now have? I mean what is the subject-matter? I confess my ignorance by asking the question, but then I think I ought to know it, and I think the House ought to know it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They have jurisdiction for trespass, replevin, damages——

Mr. SIMS. What is the amount? Name it as you go along.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Up to $300.

Mr. SIMS. In all of those?

Mr. CAMPBELL. In all of these. Then, there is forcible detainer. Of course that is for the detention of rented property.

Mr. SIMS. What about bills, notes, and other evidences of debt?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That would be the same up to $300, as the law now stands.

Mr. MANN. Up to $300.

Mr. SIMS. A case appealed from this court and tried in the District supreme court may be tried by jury?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; on demand. Where the appeal is asked, and the value of the property claimed exceeds $5 and in actions for the recovery of the possession of real estate, either party who may think himself aggrieved by the final order of the justice of the peace may appeal to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, if the appeal is asked for within six days after entering of the judgment.

Mr. SIMS. Upon what condition?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Upon filing of bond, if the justice requires such bond.

Mr. SIMS. I wish you would read that part of it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Here is the provision:

No appeal shall be allowed unless the appellant, with sufficient surety, approved by the justice, shall enter into an undertaking to satisfy and pay whatever final judgment may be recovered in the appellate court, and agree that such judgment may be entered against principal and sureties.

Mr. SIMS. Is there no provision for appealing without bond by persons making oath that they are poor and can not give bond?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will read further:

Such undertaking must be given within six days, exclusive of Sundays and legal holidays, after the entry of judgment. And where said undertaking has been given the justice shall immediately file the original papers, and a copy of his docket entries, in the office of the clerk of the supreme court, and notify the appellant or his attorney thereof.

That is the provision.

Mr. SIMS. Is there no provision here by which a person can make what is usually called a "pauper oath and appeal" without giving bond?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have not come across that section yet.

Mr. SIMS. If it is not there I think we ought to make it.

Mr. MANN. If they are so poor, what difference does it make whether anybody gets a judgment or not?

Mr. SIMS. Every State in the Union that I know anything about has it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I notice on page 2 of this bill that it provides that this court shall sit in a building to be rented at a cost of not to exceed $1,800 per annum. I would like to know if, since the new building was built, it is still necessary to rent in the District of Columbia rooms for these justices' courts?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think so. I do not think there is room there for them.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The building is larger than the other building.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There is no place, no building, that can be used for the court. Of course there is a large auditorium for the hearings of the Commissioners, but that can not be used for the court.

Mr. SIMS. Why can not that be used as a court?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That would interfere with the use of the room by the Commissioners, who have hearings every week, and have two, three, and four hundred persons present at the hearings.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is it possible that we have gone to this enormous expense to erect the new building here, and that we are still going outside to rent rooms for the justices of the peace?

Mr. SIMS. It is not only true in this case, but in others. There are many private residences being rented for the use of the Government.

Mr. CAMPBELL. We rent the offices for these justices of the peace now.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That may be; but here is a new building that cost four or five million dollars.

Mr. MANN. More than that, it is not only for a court; but does not the gentleman know that whenever there is a private building that can not be rented, there is always a chance to rent it to the Government, with proper activity on the part of the owner?

Mr. SIMS. And it is also the case with vacant lots which can not be sold to anybody else.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. There is an activity to get the Government to buy them.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The reasons for enacting this bill into law originated not with the justices of the peace nor with lawyers, but with the auditor of the District of Columbia. In his report for 1907 he made the suggestion that much money could be saved to the District, much time could be saved to those justices, as well as doing something that would relieve the justices from the work of taking care of the money deposited for costs, payment of costs, and payment on judgments. The clerk provided for would also take charge of the deposits of cost in fees and the amounts paid in on judgments.

Mr. SIMS. Does not the gentleman think it would be better legislation if we would provide that these justices or judges should have all the fees of their court, not exceeding $2,500 a year each, and that the balance be turned into the Treasury, than to pay them a salary out of the Treasury?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Their fees would be more than their salaries.

Mr. SIMS. But if they are turned into the Treasury it is a self-sustaining court. I understood the auditor said it was nearly impossible to get these fees.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, no; not impossible, but inconvenient.

Mr. SIMS. The amount does not as a general thing exceed three or four thousand dollars.

Mr. MANN. That is some money.

Mr. SIMS. And the cost of renting a court-house is some money.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But we are reducing the expense of the office by having one office which will be used for all of them.

Mr. SIMS. And then you will have to have a court-house, and we will be required to erect a municipal court-house.

Mr. CAMPBELL. At any rate it has been thought wise from every point of view to enact this bill into law, and not one word has been said in opposition to it by those interested in this measure.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, Mr. Chairman, a great many poor people who are dragged up to this court know nothing about that, and it is only the lawyers and the justices and the men who are engaged there who would have any interest in it. They do not know when they are going to be sued, and they can not even appeal in forma pauperis, as I understand.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They would be just as much opposed to the justice whether he sat as judge of the municipal court of the District of Columbia or justice if he found against them. I ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire five minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I do not rise so much for the purpose of criticising this bill or opposing it as to say, in a general way, that it is opening in the legislation of this country to take away the most important judicial office in it, to wit, the justice of the peace. If anyone thinks that is an extraordinary statement, let him study the history of any State in this Union, from the beginning of its settlement to the present, and he will find there is more good to the common people coming from these justices of the peace than any other court in it. Some States maintain their principal local courts yet through boards of justices of the peace; but primarily the justice of the peace belongs to the common people. The justice of the peace is not necessarily a lawyer; he generally is not a lawyer. The justice of the peace is generally more celebrated for the cases he does not try than for those he does try. He is, as was originally intended, a peacemaker. That was the original idea, introduced early in practice in the States of Virginia and in other States. Justices of the peace existed in the colonies. I think the practice still prevails in some of the States of making them county courts in the shape of boards of justices of the peace. In my experience, justices of the peace have tended more to protect the peace of our people and maintain the personal independence of the citizen than any other court; and that is the sense in which I say it is a most important thing. This bill proposes to wipe out the justice's court in the District of Columbia. I do not believe that the conditions here are such that the justice's court should disappear entirely.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. We do not wipe out these justices.

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly you do; you make the justice a municipal judge. A different title and name is given. You make him judge; you will address him as such, the same as any other court, and they, under this bill, will be municipal judges of a municipal court, so that the justice of the peace disappears. And then, in some sense, you make it a court of record, while the jurisdiction may not be much different. It may be in large part like that of the justice of the peace of the past, still not that element which made the justice's court that which it has been in the past and ought ever to be.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to ask the gentleman whether in addressing a justice of the peace or a justice of the Supreme Court or of the court of appeals we do not all address him as "your honor?"

Mr. KEIFER. Suppose we do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then we do not change the form in which we address him.

Mr. KEIFER. That is because when a man is sitting as a judge or justice, in the trial of a case, we have respect enough for his position to address him in that way.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Out in my country we address a police judge in the same way.

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly. I suppose you are polite in your country as well as elsewhere. I do not see why you should not be; but nevertheless I have seen many evidences of the importance of this court, and I am now here simply protesting against striking it down. I was for a time in the island of Cuba, when there was some effort made to build up conditions arising in consequence of the people being but recently relieved from the administration of the laws of Spain. Some of our people there were very greatly exercised over the idea of creating a supreme court for those humble people. It was discovered that what they wanted down there were justices of the peace and not justices of the supreme court; justices of their own selection, who would be able to advise them and direct them when somebody was trespassing upon their tobacco patches, and so on, and to teach them that first lesson in civil and political liberty, that they had individual, personal rights, and that they were also bound to concede the same rights to their neighbors. Justices of the peace have conduced more to that first lesson in personal liberty than any court we have ever had in this country.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is the gentleman's principal objection to the name "judge," instead of the former name, "justice of the peace?"

Mr. KEIFER. Well, Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman will have to make a definition of my objections to suit himself. I do object to striking down the name justice of the peace and creating a court of another name and another character, in large part, and to taking from the common people of the District of Columbia that officer so long known as "justice of the peace."

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is it not a fact that that officer was taken from the people of this District many years ago and that the present judicial officers known as "justices of the peace" are not, in fact, justices of the peace according to the conception and description of those peace officers by the distinguished gentleman? These justices are paid salaries. Under the old system they received their compensation in fees.

Mr. KEIFER. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Under this system there are no juries, and under the old system juries could always be called.

Mr. KEIFER. Not always.

Mr. DRISCOLL. In any case under the old system a man who wanted to call a jury could have it; a jury consisting of six men in our State and, I think, in every other State.

Mr. KEIFER. It is probably so generally.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Under the old system the justice of the peace also held a court of special sessions to try small criminal cases.

Mr. KEIFER. Not in every State.

Mr. DRISCOLL. As it is now, there is a criminal court in this city, and the justices of the peace here do not try criminal cases. So that this proposed change is very small. The principal change from the old-fashioned justice of the peace described by the gentleman, who is a peacemaker, has already been made in this city.

Mr. KEIFER. Answering the first part of this exceedingly long question that came to be something of a speech and a very good one, I can say that I am not very familiar with the judicial system of the District of Columbia, but I have assumed that the first sentence of this bill which we are called on to pass states the truth, that the inferior court known as "justice of the peace" in the District of Columbia shall remain as now constituted. That is to say, it assumes that we have a court known as a "court of the justice of the peace."

Mr. DRISCOLL. And the court will continue so, but by a different name.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman says it will continue so, but the bill says that it shall be known as the "municipal court of the District of Columbia." Thereafter it will not continue to be a justice's court, and then the jurisdiction is also changed so that it no longer has the character or qualities of a justice's court. It ought to be an elective court, as is usual if not general in the States, because I rather like the justice of the peace that his neighbors select, not because he is a distinguished lawyer, but because of his general make-up and character as estimated by his neighbors—that he is a man of peace and order, and when a person comes to lay a complaint before him, he probably sends for the other side and settles it and charges no fee. I have known some men who held the office of that kind and tried very few cases, and held the office of justice of the peace for a lifetime, and they have been the best justices of the peace we ever had. The gentleman says the fee system is changed. The fees are usually very small, and ought to be in a justice's court, and now it is to be a salary.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Oh, but it is a salary now.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman probably gives some information that I do not possess, but it is a bad sort of thing to put justices of the peace on salaries. They are paid through a fee system in Ohio, and always should be. There is a very good story told about Gen. Arthur St. Clair, who was the first governor of the Territory of Ohio, the first Territory organized northwest of the Ohio River. He had some trouble in his administration, and he had the veto power over the territorial legislature. The people complained of the fee system, and they wanted a salary for the governor and to abolish the fee system. He, as governor, charged fees for notaries' commissions and for various things, and so the territorial legislature passed two bills—one was a bill to repeal the fee system and the other was to pay the governor a salary in lieu thereof. The governor approved the salary bill and disapproved of the other, and they had both after that. [Laughter.] That hastened the organization of the State of Ohio and brought it into the Union, and was perhaps the only good that grew out of it. Here they want to have the system of salaries extended to justices of the peace, and I am opposed to that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is not there a prevailing sentiment throughout the country to-day that the fee system of courts and officers should be changed to salaries?

Mr. KEIFER. That is so with reference to probate judges and clerks and some other state and county officers, but not, I think, as to justices of the peace.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It extends to sheriffs, county clerks, registers of deeds, and all officers.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not think it is so extensive as that.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question.

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio, on account of his experience and observation, if he thinks that the fee system as it is and was under the old justice-of-the-peace system in the country, by which the justice looked to the litigants for his fees and had to get his pay out of the cases decided—if that system tended toward impartiality in the decision of cases?

Mr. KEIFER. I think it did not work badly at all—not to the justices of the peace of the class I have undertaken to state. Many of these justices of the peace are farmers in their fields when they are appealed to, and are not looking out for their salary or their fees, but are looking out to have peace and order in their community and in their region where they were elected.

Mr. DRISCOLL. They are in our State.

Mr. KEIFER. They are in Ohio—three in every municipal township.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Justices of the peace are human, and when they are paid by fees it is apt to warp the judgment of some of them.

Mr. KEIFER. If we were to pay them a salary, they would set up as dictators, and not justices of the peace, as they ought to be.

Mr. GARRETT. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Would not the salary system beget an indifference which would be worse than whatever partiality might be begotten by the fee system?

Mr. DRISCOLL. If that is the case, the whole judicial system from top down to a justice of the peace is all wrong, because all of the judges are paid annual salaries and they do not get any more for deciding a case one way than the other; whereas under the old system of justices of the peace a justice did get his pay if he decided it one way, and if he decided it the other he was very apt not to get it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. As one justice remarked, No defendant ever brought a case in his court. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARRETT. But a decision of a justice of the peace is not final.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Neither is a decision of the trial court of unlimited jurisdiction final. But under the old system the fees might depend on the way the justice decided his case. The argument urged by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] against paying salaries would apply to our whole system of jurisprudence and to all our judges, from Chief Justice Fuller down.

Mr. GARRETT. Oh, they are human.

Mr. DRISCOLL. And you can not say that men are so high or so unselfish always as not to be influenced in their judgment by their own financial considerations. It never is safe to leave a man's pay for his work dependent on the way he decides the case.

Mr. GARRETT. That has never happened.

Mr. DRISCOLL. That is the fact under the old justice of the peace system, and I want to say that I tried a great many cases in the justice court in my first three or four years of practice. When I was for the defendant I always called for a jury of six men, on the theory that if the case was worth trying at all it was worth trying before a jury of six men, because that is the only way I ever expected to get justice, and human nature is about the same in all parts of the country.

Mr. GARRETT. The system is different, then, from that in my own State. We have no juries before justices of the peace.

Mr. KEIFER. I never knew a justice of the peace that I can recall that was influenced in his decision by the side that the costs were to come from. We have our justices in our country selected generally on the theory that they do not want costs or fees, but that they want to have peace and order and good feeling among their neighbors.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. I think the gentleman did not reserve his time.

Mr. SIMS. Yes; I reserved my time.

The CHAIRMAN. At the end of the gentleman's first speech?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; but the next time I arose was for the purpose of asking a question. I did not make a second speech—at least I did not so intend—but I simply asked questions of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has twenty minutes remaining.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to use it. I wish to make a statement that, with the misunderstanding I entertained as to the trial of cases by jury before justices of the peace, I readily agreed to the amendment to increase the amount of jurisdiction to $1,000, but if there are to be no juries in these courts and no taking of appeals, then I do not want to increase the jurisdiction, but prefer to reduce it.

Further, as to the discussion in respect to the report. This is the full report of the committee, and reduces by amendment the number from six to four.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, that is the number of years for which they will hold office.

Mr. SIMS. And not the number of justices of the peace? Then I am misled as to that. I understood the gentleman to say that there was an amendment to bring it to four.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I stated that in the committee, but it was not agreed to. We do agree to reduce the number of years from six to four.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I don't think there is any need of six justices of the peace or six judges. There is some legislation needed—there is no doubt about that—either to make these justices of the peace hold their courts centrally, where it will accommodate the greatest number of people who bring suits before them, or provide for a central place of holding the court. It seems, as was said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], that in laying out these districts the object of the law originally has been changed, ignored, avoided. If we are going to have a lot of judges of a municipal court here, before which no suit can be brought in forma pauperis, from which no appeal can be taken when, as it is admitted, the greatest amount of litigation before them is litigation between the agents of landlords and the victims of landlords, I would rather abolish all of them.

I appreciate what was said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] as to making judges of these justices of the peace. After a while they may want a gown, they may want to assume a lot of dignity and become, as it were, petty tyrants. If we are going to make judges of them, let us make a court of them, and this bill is too crude in its present form and we know too little about it. Therefore I am in favor of defeating the whole bill and having a new bill, if we have any, that will reach the objects that have been referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and make it a very different measure from this. This bill provides for the appointment of bona fide residents. A man can be a resident here and a citizen of another State, which is often the case. If we are to have a local court, let us have it filled by local citizens. Therefore I shall offer that amendment. I do not know that it will be adopted. I do think there should be opportunity for appeal in proper cases and in forma pauperis, as is the law in almost all the States that I know anything about. It is true in my State in certain cases a defendant can not appeal in forma pauperis without giving a bond; but the idea that a man sued for damages could not bring that suit in forma pauperis and appeal from the decision rendered to me is out of line with all of the States of the Union and should not be permitted in this District. As I did not pass the law which invested the justices of the peace with such jurisdiction and with lack of this kind of an appeal, I will not now vote for a bill that ratifies it and increases the jurisdiction and the power and dignity of these justices of the peace by making them judges. I think this is a good bill to defeat all along the line. I shall offer my amendments when the proper time comes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further general debate the Clerk will read the bill by sections under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the inferior court known as "justice of the peace" in the District of Columbia shall remain as now constituted, but shall hereafter be known as "the municipal court of the District of Columbia." It shall consist of the six present justices of the peace of said District, who shall serve as the judges of said court for the unexpired terms of their now existing commissions, and who shall not be required to be recommissioned for said unexpired terms. Thereafter, and upon the expiration of the commission of any of said members, his successor shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a term of six years, unless sooner removed as provided by law: Provided, That no person shall be appointed to said office unless he shall have been a bona fide resident of said District for the continuous period of at least five years immediately preceding his appointment, and shall either have been a judge of said court for at least one year, or shall have been engaged in the actual practice of law before the supreme court of the District of Columbia for a period of at least five years prior to his appointment. Each judge, when appointed, shall take an oath for the faithful and impartial performance of the duties of his office. The judges of said court shall no longer be required to give bond as heretofore, but a bond shall be given by the clerk of said court, who shall receive and account for all fees as hereinafter provided. Said municipal court shall sit for the trial of causes in one building, to be designated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to be rented by said District of Columbia at a rental not to exceed $1,800 per annum.

The said court and each member thereof shall exercise the same jurisdiction as was vested in them as justice of the peace immediately before the passage of this act, and no more, and shall be governed by the laws then in force, except as said laws and said jurisdiction are expressly changed or enlarged hereby.

Any member of said court may try any case within its jurisdiction according to law, regardless of the place and residence of the defendant therein. The jurisdiction of said court is hereby increased from $300 to $500 in the class of cases over which it had jurisdiction immediately prior to the passage of this act; that said jurisdiction shall be exclusive when the amount claimed for debt or damages or the value of personal property claimed does not exceed $100, and concurrent with the supreme court of the District of Columbia when it exceeds $100 and is not in excess of $500, with the same right to remove any case by certiorari, as heretofore, in cases of concurrent jurisdiction.

All pending actions and all actions hereinafter instituted shall be assigned for trial among the members of said court in nearly equal numbers and in such manner as may be agreed upon between them. The judges of said court shall hold separate sessions as heretofore, and are empowered to make rules for the apportionment of the business between them, and the act of each of said judges respecting the business of said court shall be deemed and taken to be the act of said court. Each of said judges is hereby empowered to administer oaths. The judges of said court shall receive the annual salary of $2,500 in lieu of the salary heretofore provided for justices of the peace by section 6 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, to be paid monthly, as heretofore, but they shall not receive the allowance heretofore granted for rent, stationery, and other expenses. In case of sickness, absence, disability, expiration of term of service of or death of either of the judges of the police court or of the juvenile court any one of the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia may designate one of the judges of the municipal court to discharge the duties of said judges until such disability be removed or vacancy filled. The justice so designated shall take the same oath prescribed for these judges.

The said court shall have power to appoint a clerk at an annual salary of $1,500 and an assistant clerk at an annual salary of $1,000, payable monthly by the District of Columbia, which clerks shall hold office at the pleasure of the court.

The clerks shall receive and care for all deposits for costs made and fees exacted under the rules governing the fee charges of said court, and shall make a weekly deposit with the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia of all fees earned during the preceding week.

He shall return to suitors making such deposits any proportion of a deposit which shall remain in his hands over and above the earned fees in completed cases, and shall render an itemized statement to the auditor of the District of Columbia of every fee earned, on such forms and in such manner as shall be prescribed by the auditor of the District of Columbia. In case there shall remain in the hands of the said clerk for a term of three years a balance or part of a deposit in any case which shall not have been called for by the party or parties entitled to receive the same, the same shall revert to the District of Columbia, and be paid forthwith to the collector of taxes as part of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

In all suits in said court process shall be signed by the said clerk or assistant clerk in the name of the court. The assistant clerk may sign the name of the clerk to any official act required by law or by the practice of the court to be performed by the clerk. In such case the signature shall be "——— ———, Clerk, by ——— ———, Assistant Clerk."

Both the clerk and assistant clerk are hereby given authority to administer oaths in all cases pending in said court, or about to be filed therein.

The clerk shall perform such other and further duties as may from time to time be prescribed by the municipal court.

He shall give bond to the District of Columbia in the sum of $5,000, with surety or sureties to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, for the faithful performance of the duties of his office, and the assistant clerk shall give a like bond in the sum of $2,000.

The said clerk shall keep a docket similar to the one heretofore provided for justices of the peace.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out of page 2, line 2, the word "six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, on page 1, line 6, I move to strike out the word "six" and substitute in lieu thereof the word "three."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "six" and insert "three," so as to read, "it shall consist of the three present justices of the peace."

And so forth.

Mr. SIMS. That is correct. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have not a bit of doubt but that three judges, who will have jurisdiction over any suit brought by anybody against anybody wherever they may live in the District, can try all of those cases and keep up. My information—I was not at the hearing and it was gathered elsewhere—is that they become crowded more or as much on account of bringing suit before the wrong justice as in any other way. Now, if people living anywhere in the District can bring a suit against anybody living anywhere in the District, or a corporation, before any one of these judges, I have not any doubt but that three judges can do all that is necessary to be done.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I understand the Committee on Appropriations are going to report hereafter that there shall be only five. Now, they having made perhaps more investigation than any of us at the present time, it seems to me that perhaps it would be the better course——

Mr. SIMS. That will be subject to a point of order. We are now legislating and reorganizing the whole system, changing it from justices of the peace to a court, and I insist on the amendment. I feel confident that three can and will do, under the jurisdiction provided by this bill, all that will be needed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I desire to say that the information we have on the subject is that they could not get along with three.

Mr. DRISCOLL. How about four?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I, of course, would be glad if they could get along with one, but it does not seem to me we ought to cripple conditions here by undertaking to have the number reduced to such a number as they could not get along with.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, it has appeared recently in legislation where the rates of railroads have been reduced that the courts would not undertake to say whether they were confiscatory on the face of them, but said they would let them try it. I am in favor of trying three judges, and I have not got a bit of doubt in my mind that if they do their duty that they can do all that is to be done, or is now being done by the six justices of the peace.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?

Mr. CHANEY. To take the floor on this amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand your amendment is to insert, on page 1, line 6 of the bill, the word "three" in lieu of the word "six." I understand there are now six justices of the peace. What will become of the other three if your amendment should prevail?

Mr. SIMS. Well, three of them would not become judges under this law.

Mr. KEIFER. Would they still be justices of the peace?

Mr. SIMS. If the jurisdiction is taken from them and business taken from them they are just with the simple title and nothing else and not even entitled to the salary.

Mr. OLCOTT. They will draw the salary.

Mr. SIMS. When you abolish the court you take the salary away, too.

Mr. KEIFER. You are paying them a salary now and the salary would still go on until they die.

Mr. SIMS. We had a case of that kind tried in Tennessee, where they abolished courts presided over by judges whose terms of office had not expired, and they brought suit to have the act declared unconstitutional, and they brought suit for the recovery of salaries and lost.

Mr. KEIFER. That is not the same case. Which three of these would you make the judges?

Mr. SIMS. I do not know any of them.

Mr. KEIFER. Who would determine it under your amendment? Who would say which of the three would be judges?

Mr. MANN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that he would have to change the language of his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. The language now reads:

Shall consist of the six present justices of the peace.

The amendment which you offered was simply to strike out six and insert three. That would read:

Shall consist of the three present justices of the peace.

What the gentleman, I suppose, means to say is:

Shall consist of three of the present justices of the peace.

Mr. SIMS. That is exactly it. I do not know but it would be a good idea to strike out "present."

Mr. MANN. No; because that might mean three new justices.

Mr. SIMS. I accept that suggestion.

Mr. KEIFER. Which three?

Mr. MANN. You will have to fix that. They are to be designated by the President.

Mr. SIMS. Let me get the amendment in shape.

That it shall consist of three of the present justices of the peace of said District, who shall be designated by the President.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend so as to read:

"It shall consist of three of the present justices of the peace of said District, who shall be designated by the President."

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment, because I have information from those who are well informed that the six justices will have all their time taken in transacting the business that comes before that court.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I have been standing here to ask somebody who can give me the information, a question. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to ask him a question. I would like to know whether the present justices of the peace now practice their profession.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They do not.

Mr. DRISCOLL. To any extent?

Mr. CAMPBELL. To any extent whatever.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Do they give all their time to this work?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; that is my information.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Under the law are they permitted to practice?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have no information on that point. I do not yield for any purpose except for a question.

Mr. DRISCOLL. That is the question. The question is, Are they permitted under the law?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I say I have no information on that subject.

Mr. DRISCOLL. The gentleman ought to be informed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have no greater obligation than the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Oh, yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have the code here, that I will turn over to him. I suggested when the bill was under consideration before the subcommittee that the number might be reduced to four. That suggestion, made at the hearing, brought a number of letters from persons in the District well informed as to the work of these justices. One of the letters says:

This municipal-court bill increases the jurisdiction of the justices of the peace by giving them exclusive jurisdiction in cases involving sums up to $100 and increasing their concurrent jurisdiction from $300 to $500. This will necessarily increase to a large extent the business usually conducted before these judges.

It has been demonstrated beyond question during the past few years that the business required to be attended to by the six justices of the peace has been of such volume as to keep them busy all the time.

Mr. NYE. Who writes that letter?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. George E. Hamilton.

Mr. NYE. Who is he?

Mr. CAMPBELL. A very reputable citizen and a lawyer here.

Mr. MANN. He is a big lawyer in town, who, I suppose, has not been in a justice's court for years.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think, however, that he knows more about the work that is done in the offices of the justices of the peace than either the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] or the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. When I have finished this letter. I will read:

In fact it has been our experience that whenever one or more of the justices has been absent on account of sickness or other cause, it was almost a matter of impossibility, not to mention the inconvenience and delay, in having the work properly attended to by the remaining justices.

In view, therefore, of the increased jurisdiction given to justices by this bill, which, as above stated, will necessarily greatly increase the amount of work to be performed by them, and also because of the increase of business generally in the District of Columbia, it would be most inadvisable to decrease the number of judges at this time.

One of the principal objects of establishing these minor courts is to give poor litigants a cheap and speedy method of having their causes determined, and the reduction in the number of the judges would, in our opinion, greatly interfere with the accomplishment of such objects.

We also desire to call attention to the fact that the expense of maintaining these courts is paid out of the fees collected by them in the cases which come before them for determination, and therefore a passage of the bill as it came from the Senate providing for six judges will not in any manner subject the Government or the District of Columbia to additional expense.

We therefore earnestly urge that the Senate bill be passed without amendment.

Very respectfully, GEORGE E. HAMILTON.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question in that connection?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I notice that this bill provides, on page 4, that the fees that are exacted shall be deposited with the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What does he do with that money?

Mr. CAMPBELL. He turns it into the District fund in the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. In other words, it goes into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Now, I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact, which evidently had escaped the attention of the gentleman who wrote this letter, that that fund is there only as belonging to the District, as the fund which the District contributes toward the appropriations. The Government contributes one-half toward the appropriations for the District of Columbia, and the District of Columbia's half is paid out of that part to the credit of the District. So that the Government pays the expense of these justices and all their fees instead of the District paying its half.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have an amendment that will cure all that.

Mr. MANN. I was calling the attention of the gentleman to that feature in the letter.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What the gentleman who wrote the letter intended to say to me was——

Mr. MANN. I am not criticising the gentleman who wrote the letter——

Mr. CAMPBELL (continuing). That the fees collected would amount in all to more than the salaries of the judges. I have another letter here along the same line, which shows that the fees amount to considerably more than the salaries of these six justices of the peace. Evidently, therefore, there is a large volume of business here before these justices. I should be glad to see it well done here. As I said in the beginning, I have no pride in this bill; I have no interest in it whatever, aside from the interest I have in seeing a good law pass.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I would ask the gentleman what is the amount of the jurisdiction of the judges of these courts?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That they have now, or is in the proposed bill?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. In the proposed bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The exclusive jurisdiction of the judge is from $100 down, and the concurrent jurisdiction with the supreme court of the District is from $100 to $500.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. The judges of the supreme court sit at all times?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think so.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. They have more than one branch, have they not?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think there are six judges.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Six judges—holding six separate courts.

Mr. OLCOTT. But that includes criminal jurisdiction and everything else.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. This would make six more having special jurisdiction.

Mr. OLCOTT. There are six now; it merely rearranges them.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Do I understand these six judges of the supreme court have jurisdiction?

Mr. OLCOTT. They have, from $1 to $500. These justices of the peace do not have any criminal cases tried before them.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. What is the population of the District of Columbia over which these judges will have jurisdiction?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The entire District of Columbia.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. What is the population?

Mr. OLCOTT. About 300,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee will not prevail. The object of having these six officers is that the business may be transacted as rapidly as possible and that these matters of dispute that go before the justices of the peace may be disposed of without unnecessary delay.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Do I understand the gentleman from Kansas to say——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I ask that the gentleman may have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Do I understand the gentleman from Kansas to say that heretofore these courts have been exclusively upon a fee basis?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not at all; they are on a salary now.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Already on a salary?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The code provides a salary of $3,000, and we are reducing the salary to $2,500. The fees that are collected by these officers amount to more than their salary.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Has that been true in the past?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That has been true in the past.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And is it the judgment of the committee that the fees that will be collected in the future will at least be equal to the salaries which are given in this bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; that is the judgment of the committee.

Mr. SABATH. What is the present salary of these judges?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Three thousand dollars; I understand, however, that the Committee on Appropriations only appropriates $2,500 a year.

Mr. CHANEY. I happen to know enough about the workings of the justice of the peace courts in the District of Columbia to know that they are occupied with very important business. More prompt action can be had in this court than in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, because that court is considerably behind in its business, and necessarily and naturally there is a delay in the prosecution of cases. As anyone can see, there is a large amount of court business in a District such as this in amounts of $500 and under. I understand from those who have talked with me about this business that they want to get the jurisdiction of the justice's court up to $500, so that this large class of cases may be tried in the justice court, relieving to that extent the business to be brought before the supreme court of the District of Columbia. In order to make that a more desirable tribunal in which to bring this business this bill undertakes to establish, instead of the justice of the peace court, a regular municipal court that would have jurisdiction in cases of the kind I have mentioned. The justices of the peace already have about as much business as the six of them can do, and when the jurisdiction is enlarged to $500 the six judges of the court will hardly be able to do more than the business that would come before that court. It is possible that five judges might do it, but it is very doubtful if they could. The bill has passed the Senate providing six judges for this municipal court, and I am disposed to think we ought to stand by the bill, and for myself I feel like voting against the amendment.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I should like to submit a few remarks on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, which, as I understand, reduces the number of these justices from six to three.

Mr. SIMS. It reduces the number of these judges, as they will be, from six to three.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. It seems to me we ought to go that far, at least. I have made some inquiries with reference to the population of the District, and I am informed that it is about 300,000, and that these judges will have jurisdiction in suits ranging from $500 down for 300,000 people. I want to say that I live in a city the population of which is about 120,000. In that city we have one district court, of about the nature of those designed to be created by this bill. The judge of that district court receives about the same salary as the judges will receive under this bill. That judge tries all the cases from $500 down arising in that city and has concurrent jurisdiction in the whole county, embracing another city of 30,000 inhabitants and comprising a total population of perhaps 250,000.

He sits but two days a week, and he gets through his cases usually in about half a day. Now, here we are proposing calmly and deliberately to have six judges appointed, to be paid the same salary that this judge receives, or perhaps a little less, and it is proposed to give them a clerk and all sorts of perquisites, when it seems to me it is absolutely impossible that there can be sufficient business in this community to occupy those judges anything like their entire time. We hear a great deal of talk about economy, and it is virtually agreed that many needed improvements will have to be cut down or abandoned. Things that everybody knows should be done are not to be done, and here we are willing lightly to enter upon the expenditure of this money, to fasten these judges upon this District, because anybody who knows anything about the way things are done in this House knows that when these judges are appointed under this act their number may be increased, but never will be diminished. Now, we, of course, have the right to appropriate this money. We have the right to throw this money away under the forms of law if we so desire; but it seems to me that there can not be any real reason why an amendment going as far at least as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] should not be adopted. It seems to me that three judges would be more than ample, would be more than we could justify; but I can not see how the committee can possibly justify itself, if it takes into consideration the expenditure, in providing for six of these judges.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the gentleman who has offered this amendment is laboring under a considerable amount of misinformation. We have here in the city of Washington now six justices of the peace. They are receiving $2,500 a year. We have made this a municipal court, and are going to keep exactly the same number of judges. The committee has not done this lightly or illadvisedly. It took all the information it could get from the corporation counsel, who appeared before the committee; it took all the information it could get from the commissioners. The greatest difficulty that comes to the people of the poorer classes who are litigants is the expense of obtaining hearings of their cases, and the delay in getting their cases tried expeditiously. The commissioners have given full acquiescence to this bill, and believe that there is necessity for the six judges. It makes, in my mind, little difference whether we call them justices of the peace or judges of the municipal courts.

For us to say when the testimony has been given to our committee that these six justices of the peace are fully occupied in the proper conduct of their duties in settling the disputes of the poorer people, for us to arbitrarily say—because no one who has spoken in favor of three judges has more information than our committee when we decided in favor of six—for them to arbitrarily say, "Let us try three judges and find out whether they can not do as well as six heretofore," is folly. I hope the amendment will not prevail. I hope that this House, unless they can show some absolute condition which we have overlooked, unless they can come to us with some facts showing that these courts are not properly performing their duties, will not say arbitrarily that the city of Washington can get along with three justices when the members of the bar of this District, the corporation counsel, and the commissioners have come before us and have said in their opinion six judges of this court are necessary; that they are necessary because the six justices of the peace are now fully occupied, and also because of the increased jurisdiction granted by this bill. I hope that the House will not adopt this amendment.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I can see some reason why the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee ought to be adopted, regardless of the fact that gentlemen who oppose it are emphatic in their statements that they believe that these justices of the peace, or judges, as they will be if this bill becomes a law, are now overworked, and will be overworked, if this bill passes. I believe that the two clerks that are being given to this court in this bill will do more work than any four of the justices of the peace have heretofore done in the matter of expediting the business of the court. Heretofore the magistrates have each had a district laid out for them, and they have been their own clerks, and a great deal of their time has been taken up with clerical work, with assessing costs, investigating the law to see what would be proper costs in each case, and in that way a great deal of their time has been taken up. Again, each of them now has exclusive jurisdiction of all matters and things brought before the court of the district he represents.

That being the case, when one of them is sick or absent from his court for any other cause, the business of that court is for the time being at a standstill, and, of course, the work of the court would accumulate. But when they are given coequal jurisdiction, when, in fact, segregated jurisdiction is practically wiped out so that each judge will have jurisdiction over the whole District of Columbia, it strikes me there can be no delay of causes or accumulation of work on that account. For if one judge is not able to sit, his work will be passed over to another judge, and in that way the work of the court will go on all the time. The business of the court will continue all the time, whereas heretofore it has had to cease with each absence of a justice of the peace for a particular district.

Again, gentlemen talk about the increased jurisdiction; they say that because the concurrent jurisdiction of the court is increased from $300 to $500 that that will entail upon the judges of the municipal court additional work. I insist, sir, that the supreme court of the District will still have the jurisdiction it has always had, and if a litigant finds that the lower court is clogged with business, and they want to bring a suit where the amount in controversy exceeds $300, that being the amount justice of the peace courts now have jurisdiction of, they will file their cases in the supreme court just as they file them there now; so there will be no reason why the municipal court should be overburdened with work on account of the increased concurrent jurisdiction.

I speak of this matter on the ground of economy. We all know that Congress is apparently going mad in the matter of appropriating the money of the people; that it is continually making appropriations without proper regard for the interests of the toiling masses of the country, passing bill after bill creating new offices, increasing salaries, and calling upon the people all the time to furnish the money "to pay the bills." I am opposed to that kind of procedure, and hence I favor the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, and I sincerely hope it will be adopted.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, in this bill we are proposing to reduce the salary of the justices, who now receive $3,000, to $2,500, and the testimony before the committee shows that the fees they collect amount to more than the salary we propose to pay. In what way, therefore, are we unnecessarily increasing salaries and expenses?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MACON. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Arkansas allow me to make a suggestion in answer to that, that a bill like this is sure to lead to bailiffs and clerks for each court?

Mr. MACON. Certainly; and in answer to what the gentleman has said, I will say that I am reliably informed that we do not pay these justices of the peace more than $2,500 each.

Mr. BURLESON. That is true.

Mr. MACON. Then, if we are paying them only $2,500, how in the name of common sense is it that we are reducing their salaries from $3,000 to $2,500 when we only propose to pay them $2,500 now, just the amount that they are receiving at this time?

Mr. OLCOTT. Because they get some fees.

Mr. MACON. I have heard that all the fees were paid into the hands of the proper officer, to go into the General Treasury.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And that it amounts to more than their salaries.

Mr. MACON. Why, if a judge is not worth more than the salary he is paid to the people he represents, then he is worth mighty little to the constituency that he happens to serve. Therefore that question does not enter into this discussion at all. To say that the services of an officer will bring into the Treasury a little more than his salary is not enough.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It goes to show what the volume of the business transacted here is and the necessity that there should be enough men to take care of that business.

Mr. MACON. Well, I believe just as sincerely as the gentleman believes on the other hand that three judges will be able to discharge the duties of the court expeditiously when it is organized, and that there will be no reason for delay when each member of it has jurisdiction of every case brought to the court, coupled with the assistance of two clerks to help them in the preparation of their cases. It ought to be done expeditiously.

Mr. OLCOTT. What facts has the gentleman to make him think that we can get along so perfectly with three?

Mr. MACON. I have this fact: I never saw a court in my life where there was a clerk attached to it that he did not do ten times as much work as the presiding officer by way of expediting the business of it.

Mr. OLCOTT. That answer satisfies me.

Mr. MACON. And with two clerks in this particular court, they will do twenty times as much work in the matter of expediting the business of the court as the presiding officers, and for that reason, if no other, I believe that three judges will be ample in this instance, and hence I support the amendment.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I am serious in offering this amendment. I have no doubt that three judges with a $1,500 clerk and a $1,000 assistant clerk, and as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] with bailiffs and other employees, can and will do all the business that will be brought before them. There is a tendency in this District to increase officeholders, and increase clerks, and increase everything, the half of which expense is to be paid by the National Treasury. Here we have the recorder of wills, with I don't know how many employees, and because the fees collected are a little more than the amount of the salaries, they want a rearrangement by increasing the fees so as to be able to pay more salaries.

The recorder of deeds wants a cashier at an increased salary. I have not a particle of doubt from the evidence that I have had given to me, but not at the hearings, that these justices of the peace are not an overworked lot of officials, and three of them as judges, when any one of them can try a case in any part of the District, and when a suit can be brought before any one of them against anyone in the District, can easily do the work. Here is an increase of $2,500 for clerk hire alone, here is an increase for rent, and if I had my way I would put these gentlemen to holding their courts in their own districts at a place most convenient to the poor people who are litigating in said courts; but at this time, when we are running behind and our revenues are running down, when our deficit is increasing, why, then, we are going to have six judges made out of six justices of the peace, with additional expense, but without additional labor or work.

Mr. HAY. Where do these justices of the peace now hold their courts?

Mr. SIMS. I understand the District has been laid out so that each district comes near or to the court-house, and they all hold their courts at practically one place.

Mr. HAY. They all hold them separately from each other?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. HAY. Therefore they can do more business separately than they could if they were to put them into one court?

Mr. SIMS. I do not think they are doing more than they can and ought to do now.

Mr. HAY. I mean it would be more convenient for the people to have these six justices sitting separately than to have one court?

Mr. SIMS. Oh, I think so—decidedly and especially if they hold court nearer the litigants—but you must have them here at a central point, so that everybody in every part of the District must patronize the street cars or walk. Now, take Mr. Hamilton, a man for whom I have the greatest respect, and who is getting $15,000 a year as president of the Capital Traction Company, a street car company, and a man who is attorney for the terminal company; he is a very worthy man, but it strikes me he is hardly the proper man to come here and plead for legislation that will cause the poor people of this District to patronize the street car lines in order to get to one central point.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does the gentleman really believe that Mr. Hamilton would advocate retaining the number of justices at six in order to create business for his railroad company? Now, honestly?

Mr. SIMS. Oh, I do not think he would advocate it for that reason alone, but I say an appeal from such a man does not weigh with me, for I know he must have almost no business before these courts as an attorney, but I say we are capable of judging of this matter for ourselves. I do not resent the letter, I do not resent any man's opinion who has an opportunity to know, but the reading of such a letter as that in this House does not appeal to me. Cut down these six justices of the peace to three judges, if you are going to make them judges, or let them remain as they are. Just as the gentleman from Illinois said, these fees are turned over to the exclusive use or credit of the District of Columbia, but the judges' salaries and clerks' salaries and the rent and all other expenses incidental to the courts come one-half out of the United States Treasury. I can see a reason that some gentlemen who have got taxes to pay might want it without impugning their motives. I do not mean Members of Congress, but gentlemen who advocate it.

The only real argument I have heard was made by the gentleman from Illinois in favor of a central court, and that of Auditor Tweedale, and that was on account of the difficulty he experienced in collecting these fees. If we are going to lose more by having these courts than we gain by having fees better collected, it makes little difference whether we collect them or not. I am absolutely in earnest about striking out "six" and putting in "three," or I do not care if you strike out the present justices of the peace and let the President appoint new judges altogether, if he sees proper.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I ask that the gentleman have two more minutes, in order that I may ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COX of Indiana. It was announced upon the floor by several gentlemen that the fees equaled the salary.

Mr. SIMS. I have heard that; I do not know.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They amount to more than the salary.

Mr. COX of Indiana. That may or may not be the cause of inducing certain Members on this floor to vote against this bill. Now, I would like to ask whether or not the gentleman knows that these fees have been actually collected and paid into the Treasury heretofore.

Mr. SIMS. As I was not on the subcommittee that had the hearings, I will have to ask some of my colleagues to answer that inquiry.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The report of the auditor is to the effect that more have been collected than the salaries of the judges.

Mr. SABATH. Can the gentleman give the amount that has been collected and what has been paid out to the judges, clerks, bailiffs, etc., to maintain these courts?

Mr. MANN. The expense is $17,000, and all that is governed by the appropriation bill. That covers salaries, rent, and stationery accounts.

Mr. SABATH. What has been turned into the Treasury? Can the gentleman state the amount that has been turned in?

Mr. SIMS. The fees are paid by the unfortunate or fortunate litigants, and usually by the unfortunate—those who lose—and are in the nature of a penalty. If litigants are paying more fees than necessary reduce the fees instead of increasing the expenses by making the justices of the peace judges of courts. Just as the gentleman from Ohio [General KEIFER] said, the litigants ought to be enabled to plead or conduct their own lawsuits without having to employ a lawyer in this sort of lawsuit, and there is no use of raising the dignity and increasing the powers of these men by making them judges.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield, I will say that the fees for the last fiscal year from the justices of the peace amounted to $28,000, turned into the Treasury.

Mr. SIMS. Twenty-eight thousand dollars?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SIMS. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 21.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

On page 2, at the end of line 4, after the words "bona fide," insert "citizen and resident of the District of Columbia who has not claimed or exercised the rights or functions of a citizen of any State or Territory or foreign country for the period of at least five years."

Mr. MANN. What is the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. SIMS. The amendment is this: Beginning at the end of line 4, after the words "bona fide," insert:

Citizen and resident of the District of Columbia who has not claimed or exercised the rights and functions of a citizen of any State or Territory or foreign country.

Mr. MANN. Make that "bona fide citizen."

Mr. SIMS. Striking out the words "resident of said District?"

Mr. MANN. We would have to employ the Secret Service in order to ascertain that information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, lines 2, 4, and 5, strike out the words "resident of said District," and after the words "bona fide" insert "citizen and resident of the District of Columbia who has not claimed or exercised the rights and functions of a citizen in any State or Territory or foreign country."

Mr. SIMS. Strike out the words "resident of said District," beginning on line 5.

The Clerk read as follows:

So that the proviso shall read:

"Provided, That no person shall be appointed to said office unless he shall have been a bona fide citizen and resident of the District of Columbia who has not claimed or exercised the rights or functions of a citizen in any State or Territory or foreign country for the continuous period of five years."

Mr. SIMS. I will amend the amendment by accepting the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois by striking out, after the words "District of Columbia," the words "bona fide resident of the District of Columbia," and striking out the rest of the amendment, so it will read "bona fide citizen and resident of the District of Columbia."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

After the words "bona fide" strike out "resident of said District" and insert "citizen and resident of the District of Columbia," so that it will read "shall have been a bona fide citizen and resident of the District of Columbia for the continuous period of at least five years."

Mr. WALDO. Will the gentleman state to the House what a citizen of the District of Columbia is?

Mr. SIMS. I explained my amendment. It is a person who does not exercise the acts of a citizen or claims of a citizen in a State, Territory, or foreign country; and a bona fide citizen may be also a resident, but a bona fide resident may not be a bona fide citizen. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is this: The bill as reported says "resident." A man is often a resident here for many years. I have heard of them being here for fifteen or twenty, who did not live in their States, and do nothing there except to go home and vote. Under the circumstances I am not censuring the gentlemen for doing that. It is the most valuable power that he can possibly have in a republic like ours, and he would rather retain and exercise it in the State of the Union from which he comes. So he continues to do so. That kind of man I do not want appointed as one of the judges of this court. This is a local court—a municipal court—that will have to do with the people that live here and who will continue to live here.

As has often been stated before, if they are sued for possession of the property the litigants are forced in those cases to be almost entirely confined to actual residents of the District.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will not these judges have jurisdiction of any case that is to be tried if they reside in the District of Columbia?

Mr. SIMS. They are already residents.

Mr. HARDWICK. Suppose one commits any offense in the District, would he not be tried here?

Mr. SIMS. They do not have any criminal jurisdiction.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. SIMS. I do not see why it is not a good experiment; it is carrying out the spirit of the bill, and is simply making it specific.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to have the amendment reported again.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 22.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Twelve gentlemen have arisen; not a sufficient number; tellers are refused. The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, on page 3, at the beginning of line 15, I move to insert, before the word "certiorari," the words "appeal or."

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 15, before the word "certiorari," insert the words "appeal or."

Mr. MANN. I do not think the gentleman wants to put that in there. Mr. Chairman, this provision, as I understand it, refers to the provision of the code providing for the removal for trial by certiorari of any case from one court to another, not merely an appeal. Now, I think a bill has already provided for the appeal.

Mr. SIMS. If the appeal is provided for, that is all I am after.

Mr. MANN. It is already provided.

Mr. SIMS. Not in this bill.

Mr. MANN. Not in this bill.

Mr. SIMS. We might repeal it by implication.

Mr. MANN. Not at all. Here is the case as it stands: These courts have now concurrent jurisdiction above a hundred dollars. If a suit is filed in the justice's court, you can go to the supreme court and sue out a certiorari and have that removed from the justice's court and be tried by the supreme court, so that it will not be tried in the justice's court at all.

Mr. SIMS. If the gentleman is absolutely sure about it.

Mr. MANN. I will not say that I am absolutely sure; but I understand that to be the case, and that is in accordance with the original bill.

Mr. SIMS. It does involve that part of the original bill, but there is no appeal provided in this bill.

Mr. MANN. It is not necessary to provide an appeal. This is to cover the increased jurisdiction from three to five hundred dollars, so that they may get a writ of certiorari and apply it to cases above $300 and under $500. It is not in lieu of appeal.

Mr. SIMS. I thought they might use the word certiorari for the purpose of removal and in lieu of appeal. The fear was that it was in lieu of or instead of an appeal.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I would like to have the gentleman from Tennessee yield while I ask the gentleman from Illinois whether the supreme court has any appellate jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN. I understand you can appeal from the justice's court in any case. It seems to me that the language should be retained.

Mr. SIMS. I will ask the gentleman from Kansas if he will answer that, as I confess to a lack of knowledge of it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I read the section to the gentleman a moment ago.

Mr. SIMS. The appeal is to provide for any sum over $300?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, yes; covering the entire jurisdiction of the subject.

Mr. SIMS. This section is not intended to take its place?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, no; not at all. That is provided for also in the code.

Mr. SIMS. All I am anxious about is that by implication we do not repeal part of the law that we now have.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It does not repeal that provision.

Mr. SIMS. If the gentleman from Kansas is correct, and the gentleman from Illinois, why, this word "appeal" would not help it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The appeal is provided for in the code.

Mr. SIMS. If that is the case, I withdraw the amendment. I only wanted to be sure about it. I withdraw the amendment with that understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I understood the gentleman from Kansas to say that he had an amendment to offer, covering the payment of fees into the Treasury.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In view of the action of the committee, I hardly think it necessary to offer the amendment. The number of justices has been reduced from six to three, and I do not think that they can do the business that comes before their court. I had an amendment that I proposed to offer here.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me that it would be wise for the gentleman to offer the amendment; because while the United States pays half the expense of this court out of the General Treasury, I suspect that all of the fees go into the Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia, which also contributes its half. It seems to me that while there are fees for this court work, it would be proper to have the expense of the court paid out of those fees.

In other words, we have been in the habit in Washington for years past to appropriate for certain officers, half of the expense to be paid out of the General Treasury and half out of the revenues of the District, and then certain fees coming in as the result of the work done by these officials are all put into the District treasury. I called the attention of the Committee of the Whole to this matter some years ago, and I think it has in the main been corrected by the Committee on Appropriations. Now, here is a proposition to contribute $17,000, half of which comes out of the General Treasury, but all of the $28,000 that comes in goes, I suspect, to the credit of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It goes into the District of Columbia fund. Hoping, Mr. Chairman, that before this bill becomes a law it will provide for enough justices to take care of the business of the District, I offer the amendment that I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MANN. Whether it is enough or not, as far as it is, it ought to go.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the expense to be incurred under any of the provisions of this bill shall not be a charge upon the United States Treasury, but shall be paid solely out of the revenues and fees of the said municipal court, and shall not in any case exceed said revenues and fees.

Mr. NORRIS. Where does that amendment come in?

Mr. MANN. Is it to be offered after line 23, on page 4?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I offer that after line 23, on page 4.

Mr. SIMS. I am certainly in hearty favor of that amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I notice from the reading of the amendment that it refers to "this bill." Would it not be better to say "this act?"

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the amendment reads "this bill," it should read "this act." I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Nebraska.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the word "bill" will be changed to "act."

There was no objection.

The amendment of Mr. CAMPBELL was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

INAUGURATION OF THE PRESIDENT-ELECT.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call up House joint resolution 202, authorizing the granting of permits to the committee on inaugural ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on March 4, 1909, and so forth.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to grant a permit to the committee on inaugural ceremonies for the use of the Pension building, in the city of Washington, on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on the 4th day of March, 1909, subject to such restrictions and regulations as the said Secretary may prescribe in respect of the period and manner of such use, including all necessary safeguards against fire and for the extinguishing of fire.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant permits under such restrictions as he may deem necessary, to the committee on inaugural ceremonies for the use of any reservations or other public spaces in the city of Washington on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on the 4th day of March, 1909, which, in his, opinion will inflict no serious or permanent injuries upon such reservations or public spaces or statuary thereon; and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may designate for such and other purposes on the occasion aforesaid such streets, avenues, and sidewalks in said city of Washington as they may deem proper and necessary: Provided, however, That all stands or platforms that may be erected on the public spaces aforesaid shall be under the supervision of the said inaugural committee and in accordance with the plans and designs to be approved by the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia, the officer in charge of the public buildings and grounds, and the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds: And provided further, That the reservations or public spaces occupied by the stands or other structures shall be restored to their original condition before such occupation, and that the inaugural committee shall indemnify the War Department for any damage to structures of any kind whatsoever upon such reservations or spaces.

SEC. 3. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to permit the committee on illumination of the inaugural committee for the inaugural ceremonies, March, 1909, to stretch suitable overhead conductors, with sufficient supports wherever necessary and in the nearest practicable connection with the present supply of light, for the purpose of effecting the said illumination: Provided, That if it shall be necessary to erect wires for illuminating purposes over any park or reservation in the District of Columbia the work of erection and removal of said wires shall be under the supervision of the official in charge of said park or reservation: Provided further, That the said conductors shall not be used for the conveying of electrical currents after March 7, 1909, and shall, with their supports, be fully and entirely removed from the streets and avenues of the said city of Washington on or before March 15, 1909: And provided further, That the stretching and removing of the said wires shall be under the supervision of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who shall see that the provisions of this resolution are enforced, that all needful precautions are taken for the protection of the public, and that the pavement of any street, avenue, or alley disturbed is replaced in as good condition as before entering upon the work herein authorized: Provided further, That no expense or damage on account of or due to the stretching, operation, or removing of the said temporary overhead conductors shall be incurred by the United States or the District of Columbia.

SEC. 4. That $23,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, payable from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and from the revenues of the District of Columbia in equal parts, is hereby appropriated to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order and protect life and property in said District from the 28th of February to the 10th of March, 1909, both inclusive. Said commissioners are hereby authorized and directed to make all reasonable regulations necessary to secure such preservation of public order and protection of life and property and fixing fares by public conveyance, and to make special regulations respecting the standing, movements, and operating of vehicles of whatever character or kind during said period. Such regulations shall be in force one week prior to said inauguration, during said inauguration, and one week subsequent thereto, and shall be published in one or more of the daily newspapers published in the District of Columbia; and no penalty prescribed for the violation of any of such regulations shall be enforced until five days after such publication. Any person violating any of such regulations shall be liable for each such offense to a fine not to exceed $100, in the police court of said District, and in default of payment thereof to imprisonment in the workhouse of said District for not longer than sixty days. And the sum of $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby likewise appropriated, to be expended by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the construction, maintenance, and expenses incident to the operation of temporary public-comfort stations and information booths during the period aforesaid.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be, and they are hereby, authorized to loan to the committee on inaugural ceremonies such ensigns, flags, etc., belonging to the Government of the United States (except battle flags), that are not now in use and may be suitable and proper for decoration and may, in their judgment, be spared without detriment to the public service, such flags to be used in connection with said ceremonies by said committee under such regulations and restrictions as may be prescribed by the said Secretaries, or either of them, in decorating the fronts of public buildings and other places on the line of march between the Capitol and the Executive Mansion and the interior of the reception hall: Provided, That the loan of the said ensigns, flags, signal numbers, etc., to said chairman shall not take place prior to the 24th day of February, and they shall be returned by him by the 10th day of March, 1909: Provided further, That the said committee shall indemnify the said departments, or either of them, for any loss or damage to such flags not necessarily incident to such use. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to loan to the inaugural committee, for the purpose of caring for the sick, injured, and infirm on the occasion of the inauguration of the President of the United States, March 4, 1909, such hospital tents and camp appliances and other necessaries, hospital furniture and utensils of all descriptions, ambulances, horses, drivers, stretchers, and Red Cross flags and poles belonging to the Government of the United States as in his judgment may be spared and are not in use by the Government at the time of the inauguration: Provided, That the inaugural committee shall indemnify the War Department for any loss or damage to such hospital tents and appliances as aforesaid not necessarily incident to such use: And provided further, That the said inaugural committee shall give bond, with security satisfactory to the Secretary of War, to do the same.

SEC. 6. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to permit the Western Union Telegraph Company and the Postal Telegraph Company to extend overhead wires into the Pension building, and to such points along the line of parade as shall be deemed by the chief marshal convenient for use in connection with the parade and other inaugural purposes, the said wires to be taken down within ten days after the conclusion of the ceremonies on the 4th day of March, 1909.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the report of the committee be printed in the RECORD, but I only ask the reading at this time of the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions, found on page 3 of the report.

The Clerk read the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions contained in the report.

The report (by Mr. SMITH of Michigan) is as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the resolution (H. J. Res. 202) authorizing the granting of permits to the committee on inaugural ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on March 4, 1909, etc., report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The joint resolution herewith reported is identical in text with the joint resolution passed by the Congress on the occasion of the inaugural ceremonies of four years ago, the only differences between the two being slight ones rendered necessary by changes in circumstances. The increase of $5,000 in the appropriation over that of four years ago is accounted for later in this report.

The joint resolution was submitted for examination and report to the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, from all of whom reports were received as follows:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, December 14, 1908.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia recommend favorable action upon House joint resolution 202, "Authorizing the granting of permits to the committee on inaugural ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on March 4, 1909, etc.," which you referred to them on the 12th instant for examination and report.

Very respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

Hon. S. W. SMITH,
Chairman of Committee on District of Columbia,
House of Representatives.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 15, 1908.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 12th instant requesting comment concerning the provisions of House joint resolution 202 "Authorizing the granting of permits to the committee on inaugural ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on March 4, 1909, etc." I have to state that no objection is perceived, so far as this department is concerned, to the legislation proposed.

Very respectfully,

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY, Secretary.

Hon. SAMUEL W. SMITH,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
House of Representatives.

[Second indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, December 15, 1908.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War.

So much of the subject-matter of the accompanying joint resolution (H. J. Res. 202) as pertains to this department is believed to be satisfactory, and the interests of the Government appear to be fully protected.

I do not know any objection to the passage of the resolution by Congress.

W. L. MARSHALL,
Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army.

(Through the Quartermaster-General.)

[Third indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, December 16, 1908.

Respectfully transmitted to the Surgeon-General.

So much of the accompanying joint resolution (H. J. Res. 202) as relates to the Quartermaster's Department is considered to be satisfactory, and no objection to its passage is known to this office.

J. B. ALESHIRE,
Quartermaster-General, U. S. Army.

[Fourth indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SURGEON-GENERAL,
December 17, 1908.

Respectfully returned to the honorable the Secretary of War.

So much of the accompanying joint resolution (H. J. Res. 202) as relates to the Medical Department is considered satisfactory, and no objection to its passage is known to this office.

R. M. O'REILLY,
Surgeon-General, U. S. Army.

[Fifth indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, December 17, 1908.

Respectfully returned to the chairman Committee on the District of Columbia, House of Representatives, inviting attention to the preceding indorsements hereon.

The War Department knows of no objection to the passage of this resolution.

LUKE E. WRIGHT,
Secretary of War.

SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., December 17, 1908.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with your request of December 12, I forward you a report from the Commissioner of Pensions relative to that portion of House joint resolution No. 202 which refers to the proposed use of the Pension building for the inaugural ball.

Neither Commissioner Warner nor I desire to raise any unnecessary question regarding this proposal, as we both appreciate the difficulty the inaugural committee has in obtaining a suitable building, but before Congress directs such use the conditions should be thoroughly understood.

If the committee determines that the Pension Office shall be used, I call particular attention to the need of providing for the use of the portion of the building occupied by the pension agency, so that pensioners can be promptly paid.

I have requested Commissioner Warner to appear before your committee at the hearing on this subject to-day, so that the committee may have opportunity to make any further inquiry.

Very respectfully,

JAMES RUDOLPH GARFIELD,
Secretary.

Hon. S. W. SMITH,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
House of Representatives.

DECEMBER 16, 1908.

MR. SECRETARY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by reference from you, of House joint resolution 202, authorizing and directing you to grant a permit to the committee on inaugural ceremonies to use the Pension building on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on March 4, 1909, and respectfully to submit the following report:

While the resolution contemplates the exclusive use of the building by the committee for the purpose indicated, it does not specify for what length of time, and in making this report I assume that the occupancy and treatment of the building and the disposition of its present contents by the committee will be substantially as that of similar committees on like occasions in the past.

While the committee may not have exclusive possession of the building more than ten days, its possession of the building in removing desks, file cases, records, and furniture from its rooms, and in arranging decorations, platforms, stands, electric-light wires, fixtures, etc., and in attempting to restore the building and its contents to the condition in which the committee found them, will, so far as carrying on the business of the Pension Bureau is concerned, amount in effect to the exclusive use of the building by the committee for twenty days, and during that time the business of the Pension Bureau and the agency for the payment of pensions therein would be practically entirely suspended.

There are at present 1,248 employees in the Pension Bureau building, the total of their daily salaries being $4,773.70, and the sum total of their salaries for the twenty days will be $95,474, which will be paid them, as they will be on enforced idleness during that time.

If the resolution passes as it now reads, its substantial effect will be the cost in money to the Government of $95,474.

If the resolution is amended so as to stop the pay of the employees in the Pension building during their enforced idleness, it will substantially compel the employees to donate to the committee that amount, and if the purpose of the resolution is to enable the committee to reimburse itself or to provide means to pay the expenses of the unofficial inaugural ceremonies it would be much better for the Government to appropriate and give the committee that amount outright instead of turning over to the committee the Pension Bureau during that time.

Since the last inaugural ceremonies there has been located in the building an agency for the payment of pensions. That agency pays between 53,000 and 54,000 pensioners, and the next payment by that agency commences on the 4th day of March, 1909. If the building is surrendered to the committee, as contemplated by the resolution, the payments due on March 4, 1909, will be delayed at least two weeks, and it is not necessary to suggest what such a delay will mean to those who confidently expect that their pensions will be paid promptly when due, as they have been in the past.

There are in the building 1,433 desks, 154 tables, 570 file cases, with their contents, each one weighing, when full, 1,600 pounds, and when empty 503 pounds, and many other articles of office furniture and books of record, and these would have to be removed before the ceremonies and afterwards replaced. The file cases contain cases and are not supplied with locks.

It would be necessary to remove all the above to some place not now provided and have them carefully guarded, at some expense at least, until returned to their proper places in the Pension building.

Heretofore the building has been greatly disfigured and damaged by the installation of an additional electric plant for its lighting and by having nailed and attached to its walls and columns the decorations provided by the committee.

In addition, heretofore on such occasions many papers that could not be duplicated have been stolen or destroyed, and on each previous like occasion fires have occurred in the building on account of the carelessness of its temporary occupants; and in moving from and returning to the building the desks, tables, file cases, etc., they have been greatly damaged.

We can not expect any less damage to the building and its contents by the contemplated occupancy than the building and its contents sustained by the like occupancy in the past, and the damage in every way by the proposed occupancy can not be estimated.

Very respectfully,

V. WARNER,
Commissioner of Pensions.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

It will be noted that the foregoing communications all give unqualified approval to the resolution except that in the report from the Commissioner of Pensions, transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior, certain suggestions are submitted regarding the use of the Pension building for the inaugural reception.

The Pension building has been successively used for the inaugural reception to the President and Vice-President elect since the inauguration of President Cleveland in 1885. No other building, public or private, is available to accommodate the many thousands who attend this function. Such receptions have been accorded each incoming Chief Executive since the time of President Washington. It has hence become by custom a recognized part of the inaugural ceremonies whereto the representatives of all the nations are invited guests. As part of the nation's quadrennial installation of its Chief Executive, it has become in a practical sense a national function.

The court of the Pension building, 400 by 116 feet, and the galleries opening thereon afford ample and safe accommodation, and as the building is wholly fireproof and all decorations of every sort, except flowers used on this occasion, are rendered noncombustible by the use of fireproof solutions, the danger from fire is practically eliminated. The building is also most effectively guarded from fire or accident by the constant presence of trained firemen and policemen, and in the successive inaugural occasions for the past twenty-five years no injury to persons or property has occurred from fire or accident. The band concerts which follow the inaugural reception afford ample opportunity for all who do not attend the reception to visit the building and enjoy a view of the decorated interior.

The suggestions of the Commissioner of Pensions as to the cost to the Government in the enforced idleness of the pension-office force during the occupancy of the building for this purpose is, in the view of the committee, met by the plain answer that such force is continuing in service, and as the work of the bureau is now substantially up to current date the suggested loss is not real—such as would occur in a manufacturing plant where the output ceases when the employees are idle.

The further suggestion that delay in payment of quarterly pensions, now carried on in part in the Pension building, will be delayed can and will be fully obviated by the reservation of proper rooms and space now used therefor on the ground floor of the building—a matter fully within the control of the Secretary of the Interior under the power conferred upon the Secretary by the express terms of section 1 of the resolution. This is a matter fully understood by the Secretary of the Interior and the inaugural committee. Therefore no delay or inconvenience on that account can occur.

The safe storage of the files and furniture of the office has been provided for on all such former occasions and, as the committee is advised, the files are removed from the great court to the basement, where they are fully protected by the same fireproof, solid brick construction which makes the entire building indestructible.

In response to the request of your committee for further information as to the necessity of the proposed increase of $5,000 in the appropriation asked for over that of four years ago, the commissioners submitted the following communication, accompanied by the statement of the auditor of the District of the expenditures from the former appropriation:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, December 17, 1908.

SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia, supplementing their letter of December 14, 1908, making report upon H. J. Res. 202, authorizing the granting of permits to the committee on inaugural ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect and Vice-President-elect, on March 4, 1909, have the honor to add that the appropriation of $23,000 provided for in section 4 thereof is necessary to enable the commissioners to maintain public order and protect life and property in the District between February 28 and March 10, 1909, both inclusive. This sum has been carefully estimated and is necessary for the pay and expenses of additional police, detective, and other services connected therewith, essential to the preservation of order and the protection of life and property during the inaugural occasion, when so many thousands of visitors are added to the normal population of the District. The commissioners therefore earnestly recommend the appropriation of the amount stated for this necessary purpose.

The commissioners inclose a statement by the auditor of the District of Columbia of the expenditures made under a similar appropriation four years ago.

Very respectfully, yours,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

Hon. S. W. SMITH,
Chairman Committee on District of Columbia,
House of Representatives.

Classified statement of expenditures under the appropriation of $20,000, provided by public resolution approved January 17, 1905, for maintaining public order, etc., at the inauguration of President Roosevelt, March 4, 1905.

Amount allowed for public order, $18,000.

EXPENDITURES.

Amount paid as compensation of detectives from outside cities	$3,500.00
Railway fare of detectives from other cities coming and returning	1,122.26
Board and lodging of detectives from cities	858.00
Compensation of special policemen	8,586.00
Pay rolls, laborers, cart hire, and mechanics	1,191.58
Services of nurses	15.00
Hire of horses and buggies	70.00

Police whistles	$31.25
Police badges and special badges	151.45
Engraving police badges	23.18
Repairs to police badges	6.00
Lunches to officers, ambulance drivers along line of parade, and to laborers on emergency work	118.95
Car tickets for police department	100.00
Printing inaugural regulations	120.02
Printing sign cards	58.59
Advertising inaugural-ball regulations and public-order regulations	53.55
Advertising regulations for inaugural receiving stand	35.10
Tin signs	6.00
Surgeon supplies	10.68
Rope	290.75
Lumber	92.34
Furnishing and hauling sand and gravel	73.35
Sewer brick	9.87
Chairs	35.00
Cement	14.40
Hardware	14.02
Brooms and mops	.24
Iron pipe	235.44
Glass tumblers	.83
Drugs	3.35
Repairing cuts in pavements	63.28
	16,890.48

Amount allowed for public comfort stations, $2,000.

EXPENDITURES.

Salaries of attendants and superintendent at public comfort stations	285.50
Pay rolls of laborers, mechanics, and cart hire	66.57
Constructing and hauling public comfort stations (temporary stations)	1,187.80
Erecting temporary information booths	250.00
Rent of oil heaters for comfort stations	32.00
Couches and chairs for comfort stations	19.20
Mirrors for comfort stations	10.00
Curtains for comfort stations	18.00
Toilet supplies	1.71
Laundry service for comfort stations	6.36
Whisk brooms, mops, buckets, and miscellaneous supplies for comfort stations	20.14
Connecting and disconnecting comfort stations with water and sewer service	15.45
Manhole frames and covers for comfort stations	5.00
Lumber for comfort stations	7.50
Lanterns and oil for comfort stations	16.80
Terra-cotta pipe for comfort stations	9.06
Plumbing supplies for comfort stations	13.74
Hauling supplies for comfort stations	7.15
Cement	1.44
Repairing sewer cuts	5.25
	1,978.67
Total amount expended from the appropriation of $20,000 for maintaining public order and public convenience stations during the inaugural ceremonies of March 4, 1905	18,869.15

After a full consideration of the premises the committee recommends that the joint resolution be passed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a brief statement: The resolution is identical with the resolution passed four years ago, with the exception of an additional appropriation of $5,000 that is asked for, and in the resolution of four years ago there was what was known as "section 7," which provided for temporary tracks in the District. With reference to the report of the honorable Commissioner of Pensions that the expense will amount to something like $95,000, I desire to say that there evidently is an opportunity to at least disagree with the commissioner as to what the cost may be. I think it fair to assume that four years ago there were more clerks in the Pension Office than at this time, because it is generally admitted that the work is less now than it was then, and if that is the case I think it is fair to assume that there is a less number of clerks. Four years ago, upon making a report of this same resolution, with two slight exceptions which I have called attention to, Mr. Hitchcock, then Secretary of the Interior, said:

As a matter of information, it may be stated that as a result of the occupancy of this building at the last inauguration, in 1901, to say nothing of the incidental damage to the building and the furniture by reason of such use, the loss of time of the employees of that bureau, I am credibly informed, aggregated in value $30,000.

That was the report of the Secretary of the Interior at that time, and the report of the honorable commissioner at this time is that it will cost ninety-five thousand and some odd dollars. With respect to that provision in the commissioner's report that there has been a new pension agency provided for and has an office in the Pension building, I desire to say that they will suffer no inconvenience, because under the provisions of the joint resolution, on the first page, it is placed entirely within the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, and I desire at the proper time to offer a slight amendment that was passed by the Senate District Committee, which makes it all the more sure and certain that these pensioners can not in any way be injured by the passage of this resolution.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman state what that amendment is?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes. On the first page of the joint resolution, line 8, at the end of the word "regulation," I shall offer at the proper time these words: "and limitations as to space." I think that will fully cover it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will that fix it so that the room occupied by the pension agent in Washington, whose duties it is to pay the pensioners on the 4th of March, will have his space reserved so that he can go on and pay the pensioners?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. His particular room will not be reserved, but there will be rooms on the first floor which he can use.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; and then you would have to move all of his records down there. Why not reserve the room that he now occupies and provide that they shall not be taken? You will delay the old pensioners at least twenty days by taking his room and compelling him to pack up his records and move them out and then move them back again before he can go on with his work. Most of these old pensioners are hungry for their pay on the first day that it is due.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The pensioner will get his pay when it is due. We are providing ample room on the first floor in the east end of the building. I am informed by those who have had charge of this arrangement for twenty years that they need this room that the commissioner occupies.

Now, there is some claim made in the report that occasionally they have had some fires in the Pension building, whereas, as a matter of fact, there was no fire four years ago, and it is my deliberate judgment that there is less danger down there at this time than there is in the ordinary public building in the city of Washington, because of the additional precautions taken at that time. To show you that these fires occasionally occur, I remember the very first day of this year in picking up a morning paper in the city of Washington and reading of a fire that had broken out in the State, War, and Navy building. From what I read it appeared that it did not do any considerable damage; but these fires, such as we occasionally read of, break out in the public buildings here in Washington as elsewhere.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. ADAIR. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not true that all the file cases on the lower floor containing the papers in the various pension cases are removed entirely out of the building into temporary quarters?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; to the basement below; and the entire Pension building from basement to the roof is a so-called "fireproof building."

Mr. ADAIR. I was informed by the commissioner that it had been done the other way, and that that was the real danger of fire.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am relying myself largely upon those who have had this particular work to do for twenty-odd years.

Mr. ADAIR. Does the gentleman know that it has never been done the other way?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; I have not been there to witness it. I am giving, to the best of my opinion, what I understand to be the facts, that in the grand court below all the file cases are taken into the basement. In the use of that building at the inaugural ball they never use the third and fourth floors of the building at all; but on the second floor, I am further informed, in these rooms where there are desks, in many of the rooms, they do not move them out of the particular room, but, as they express it, they move them out toward the window.

Mr. ADAIR. Is not this true that these papers are all removed from the lower floor even to the basement or outside, and that that stops the work in the various departments by reason of the fact that they are not able to procure the papers?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There is no denial of the fact that probably for a period of eight or ten days the entire work of the department must cease.

Mr. ADAIR. The commissioner says twenty days.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think it is apparent to anybody who goes and examines it that when they are putting the decorations on the large pillars in the grand court, and certain other preliminary work that must be done, it need not necessarily interfere with the work of the clerks.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Have not they got to take the files out before they can begin to do that and put them in the basement?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; and one has only to visit this grand court, as it is called, and examine the way the file cases are situated. You can see that these pillars can be decorated without removal of the file cases. I desire to say, for the benefit of any who may question what this additional expense is for in the resolution, that it will be noticed on pages 5 and 6 of the report of the committee that we have an itemized statement of the amount of money and how it was expended four years ago. While there was an appropriation of $20,000 they expended only $18,869.15, giving item by item what it was expended for.

It may be of interest to the committee to know that four years ago the receipts from the inaugural ball were $59,327.50 and the expenditures $42,240.36, so there was an excess of ball receipts over ball expenditures amounting to $17,097.14. Mr. Chairman, if there is no objection, I would like to insert in the RECORD the receipts and the expenditures of the last inaugural ball, in 1905. Perhaps it may be of interest also to the committee to know the receipts and disbursements of the inaugural committee four years ago. If there is no objection, I would like to insert these in the RECORD. I find if we are going to have an inaugural ball held at the Pension Office each four years, that it will save considerable time in looking up some of these items if this be done. The receipts of the inaugural ball for 1905 were $150,221.95, but I desire to say that as a part of those receipts there was the guaranty fund of $62,380.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman mean by receipts?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It will take but just a moment for me to read it. I want to say they have here in the city of Washington, and have for many years, found it wise to raise what they term a "guaranty fund," and on at least two occasions during the last twenty or twenty-five years the citizens of Washington have had to put their hands in their pockets by reason of bad weather and for other causes and meet some of these expenses.

Mr. SIMS. Are those the only pockets they have been putting their hands into—their own?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not know.

Mr. MANN. And to what extent have they ever put their hands in their own pockets for this purpose?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that while I could not give the exact figures as to that, I am informed by a gentleman who has had to do with this for more or less of twenty years that on two different occasions they did have to do so.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman any estimate as to the extent to which they contributed?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understand it was several thousand dollars.

Mr. LANDIS. Can the gentleman from Michigan give us a good reason why the people of the District of Columbia should put their hands in their pockets and pay the expenses of this inauguration of the President and Vice-President?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No.

Mr. MANN. And can the gentleman from Indiana give any good reason why they should be permitted to conduct the inauguration?

Mr. LANDIS. I do not understand that they desire to do it.

Mr. MANN. They are doing it.

Mr. LANDIS. Yes; because it is turned over to them.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I may add that it has been the custom for some years to hold a series of concerts in the Pension building for at least three or four days after the inauguration, so as to give not only citizens of the District, but many visitors, friends of ours, who come here and do not have the opportunity to attend the ball, an opportunity to visit the Pension building and view the decorations, and from that there is a revenue.

I will read to the committee a list of the receipts and disbursements of the inaugural committee for 1905. It is as follows:

Receipts.

Guaranty fund	$62,380.00
Ball tickets	46,345.00
Concert tickets	11,052.00
Supper tickets	1,676.00
Grand stand tickets, sale of privileges and of old material used on grand stands	26,759.95
Souvenirs and medals	264.50
Official programme	700.00
Old material	12.50
Certified check returned by officers in charge of public buildings and grounds	1,000.00
Sundry small checks and cash items returned to the treasurer	32.00
Total	150,221.95

Disbursements.

Inaugural	$4,906.99
Grand marshal's office	852.61
Finance	1,034.64
Reception	203.75
Press	3.50
Printing	22.10
Souvenirs and tickets	5,195.27
Medals and badges	2,256.86
Transportation	16.00
Public comfort	1,564.49
Public order	30.54
Military organizations	172.12
Civic organizations	725.39
Reviewing stands	$15,141.78
Street decoration	3,932.91
Historic sites	193.25
Illumination	4,733.00
Fireworks	3,015.23
Music	5,374.90
Ballroom decorations	17,999.19
Comfort at ball	3,007.17
Floor	116.10
Supper	5,807.70
Carriages	3,501.64
Guaranty fund	62,380.00
Deposits with officer in charge of public buildings and grounds (check returned in full to treasurer inaugural fund)	1,000.00
Transportation and care of Indians, including Carlisle Cadets	2,000.00
Care of cowboys	250.00
Auditorium committee	120.65
Relief fund (poor of District of Columbia)	4,664.17
Total	150,221.95

If we take the guaranty fund of $62,308 and add to that the $4,664.17 that was turned over by the inaugural committee four years ago to the District Commissioners to be made a part of the poor fund of the District, that will make a total of $67,444.17, which, deducted from the $150,221.95, shows that the inaugural expenses four years ago were $83,177.75.

Mr. GILLETT. How is it that $83,000 should be taken as expenses if they really made expenses by the sale of tickets to the inaugural ball, grand-stand seats, etc.?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly; but that is one of the ways that they took of raising the money.

Mr. GILLETT. So the real expense was only about $20,000?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; but that is one way they took, of selling tickets, to raise the money to pay the inaugural expenses.

Mr. KEIFER. Has the gentleman finished his preliminary statement?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; and I will yield to the gentleman. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to oppose this bill, although I am inclined to think it is not very wise practice to take the Pension Office every four years for a dance. Figured out properly, I think, taking the estimate of the Commissioner of Pensions, we could spend $100,000 in building a temporary building, if you please, and have better accommodations than we are going to get and we would save money to the Government, but, as I am not opposing this measure, I want to come to the matter I think we ought to be specific about, and that is the matter of reserving the rooms in this Pension building now used and occupied by the pension agent in paying pensions. There are five of these rooms, as I understand it, on the first floor in the southeast corner of the building. They are absolutely essential to the preservation of the records and to doing the work of paying somewhere between 53,000 and 54,000 pensioners. Pension day and pay day commences on the 4th of March next, the day of the inauguration of the new President and the day of the inaugural ball.

Some days prior to that to pay pensioners would be lost in the matter of making preparation to pay pensioners. Pension day, which of itself is an important one for certain pensioners who get their pension papers in the pension agent's office the morning of that day or early in the day, would be lost, and the length of time figured by the Commissioner of Pensions that would be lost in the way of paying pensions would be at least twelve days after the day of paying pensions begins. Some estimate the time that will be lost at twenty days, because in the matter of readjusting the records and papers and matters of that kind there would be a great loss of time, to say nothing about the loss of papers that has happened in the past by the use of the Pension Office. Now, it is said that there is a provision in this bill for the purpose of reserving these rooms used by the pension agent. There is no such provision in the bill, and the amendment suggested in that direction made by the gentleman [Mr. SMITH] in charge of this bill is of a very doubtful construction.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. May I ask the gentleman what the language means on the first page of the joint resolution?

Mr. KEIFER. I will read it, and then you will not have to ask about it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, I have read it myself, and I have not any doubt about the meaning of the language there.

Mr. KEIFER. And I will read it now. I will read from the beginning of the section so as to have the entire connection. Section 1 says:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to grant a permit to the committee on inaugural ceremonies for the use of the Pension building, in the city of Washington, on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on the 4th day of March, 1909, subject to such restrictions and regulations as the said Secretary may prescribe in respect to the period and manner of said use——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; but will the gentleman——

Mr. KEIFER. Now, the period of use carries with it the idea that all the building is to be used, and that the manner of the use relates to the matter of not use, but to the time of use, the inaugural committee having taken possession of all of it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, surely.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In line 8—I think the gentleman will recall that I said a moment ago that at the proper time I would offer an amendment—after the word "regulations," to add the words "and limitations as to space," so that is entirely in the control of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Why not have that limitation made here?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I said I would offer it at the proper time.

Mr. KEIFER. The limitation as to space would leave the matter of construction with the Secretary. What I want, if allowed the privilege, is to move to amend this section by inserting, after the word "Washington," in line 6 of the first section, these words, "except such rooms therein as are used and occupied for the payment of pensions." Then there will be no doubt about it. And if the gentleman's proposed amendment is intended to have the same effect as my amendment, let us put one of them in and have no doubt about it. That is my suggestion in reference to this matter.

I regret exceedingly that the applicants for pensions are to be delayed about twenty days in having their applications considered in the Pension Office in order that we may have on inauguration day a ball and a dance.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to state briefly as near as I can the history of the bills or resolutions for inaugurations that have been passed since I have been here. And I wish the Members of the House, and especially those who have not been here at any previous inauguration, to disabuse their minds of the supposed fact that this is any part of official inaugural ceremony. It has absolutely nothing to do with it. If we should not have it, it would be no offense to anybody, be no discrimination to the great man who has been elected President. I imagine he would feel a relief if he did not have to go over there and show himself that night in order to induce people to pay $5 for the opportunity of seeing him—$5 for yourself, $5 for your wife, and $5 for any other man's wife if you take her. The inaugural ball is no part of the official ceremony; no part of the inauguration, in fact.

In 1900 the usual legislation was had and some public property belonging to the United States was destroyed by fire, as I remember it, amounting to several thousand dollars, and the inaugural committee would not pay one cent and did not pay one cent for that damage. That resulted in the passing of the act of Congress of 1902, as follows:

> That hereafter no public building or the approaches thereto, other than the Capitol building and the White House, in the District of Columbia, shall be used or occupied in any manner whatever in connection with ceremonies attending the inauguration of the President of the United States, or other public function, except as may hereafter be expressly authorized by law.

That is the act of 1902, passed deliberately by this House. But in two years afterwards, prior to the inauguration to occur in 1905, the inaugural committee, or those representing them, came before the House District Committee and made the plea that they had not had time in that short period to provide a proper building, which they had assured us, upon the honor of gentlemen, they were able to do and would do if given sufficient time. They assured us that it was the last time that they would ever ask to hold the inaugural ball in a Government building in the District of Columbia if we would let them have it at that time. The bill was first reported here by the House Committee on the District of Columbia to allow them to use the Library of Congress building on the ground of the danger there was in using the Pension building. Then in the House it was first defeated on suspension day, and then amended so as to authorize the use of the Pension building once more, upon the sacred assurance of honorable gentlemen that they would never come to Congress and ask for its use again.

But here are the same gentlemen asking for the same thing again. We suspended the law passed in 1902 on account of conditions which the inaugural committee could not control at that time. Here is the great Capital City, the home of millionaires, with six years since that law was passed, in 1902, in which to build a proper building in which they could hold inaugural balls and all other balls, conventions, and other meetings that bring thousands of people to the District of Columbia and which are a great source of revenue to the people who live here and have business here. Yet here they come, six years after the act, and say, "Let us have it again."

Now, what equity have they got to present this time? Absolutely nothing, only they have not kept their word with Congress.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Does the gentleman mean to leave the impression that the same identical men who made that assurance are now asking again?

Mr. SIMS. I do not know that they are the same identical individuals, but the same committee, or those representing the inaugural committee. And I will state further that I believe some of the identical gentlemen that made that statement appeared before the committee in favor of this resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will ask him if in the four years that have elapsed these same gentlemen have not raised $260,000 for the building of an auditorium, and many of the citizens thought it was not a good-paying investment, and therefore they were not able to raise the amount?

Mr. SIMS. I have heard that such was the case. I do not know whether it is or not, but I do not believe anyone here thought it would appear to them to be a dividend-paying investment—never a dollar. And that is what it has come to—a matter of paying dividends and not entertainment of visiting guests. [Applause.]

Mr. LANDIS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. LANDIS. I would ask him whether he thinks there is a city in his State in which the citizens would band together and voluntarily contribute out of their own pockets a million dollars for the construction of a convention hall for the entertainment of people who came to the city if they did not think there would be some sort of compensation for it?

Mr. SIMS. There is not a city in my State that has not already, at its own expense, provided such a hall to accommodate every kind of a meeting that it is probable or likely to be held in those cities.

Mr. LANDIS. Without profit?

Mr. SIMS. I do not care anything about the profits they may make or do not make.

Mr. LANDIS. But they do.

Mr. SIMS. I do not know whether they do or not. There is not a city in the State of Tennessee making such provision, whose only object is the dividends expected of it; and I think the same remark will apply to Indiana. We have a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions, who was a soldier in the federal army, who faced the bullets in my county and in my district at Shiloh. He served many years on the floor of this House; and yet we are asked here to pooh-pooh what he says under oath as an officer, as a man who knows whereof he speaks, when he tells of three incipient fires having occurred in the Pension Office by reason of balls; when he tells us that the garret lofts in this Pension building are full of valuable records, liable to be burned; when he tells us that during the last inaugural ball valuable papers were either stolen or lost. Now, destroy these records which are necessary in order to examine pensions, and which have been gathered at Government expense, and who can go out and supply these records?

We all know that when records are lost in reference to claims or pensions or anything else, the Government suffers. Why should we do this for a thing that is no part of the official inauguration? Why, four years ago I would not say anything. I was asked why. I said I was a Democrat, and the new President was a Republican. I was pretty lonesome then, and still lonesome——

Mr. MANN. And will be for years.

Mr. SIMS. Well, that may be true; and shall I wait here, I will ask you, and shall I continue to wait until a Democratic President is inaugurated before I shall say what I think as to this matter of inaugural balls? [Cries of "No!"] Well, then, I will ask you gentlemen to do your duty when you are in full charge and responsible to the country for this pay ball—this commercial ball, that anybody can attend if he has the price.

Now, the commissioner tells us that it amounts to a loss of twenty days to 1,278 clerks; not an indirect but a direct loss of $95,000, and a delay of twenty days in the consideration of pension claims, because they will never catch up. You will not make the pension clerks work overtime in order that people coming here at great expense desiring to witness the inauguration may be relieved of some of their money in giving it for admission to the inauguration ball. It is only a commercial affair, to enable gentlemen to get money out of the people, whom they make feel they are entertaining, while the people who are being entertained are paying the expense.

Now, there are many Republicans in the United States that would make great Presidents from the Republican ideal and standpoint. I think Secretary Taft will come up to expectations, and we Democrats hope that he will even exceed that standard. Now, I have no resentment that prompts me to take this position.

Judge Taft, as soon as he was nominated, went to Virginia, and stayed until he left to go on a speech-making tour. As soon as he was elected he went down to the State of Georgia, down to the State of Bob Toombs. And, so far as I know, his feelings toward my section of the country and my party is as good, or better, than could be expected. Consequently, I do not wish any person to think I have any little, mean feeling animating me in what I am doing. Another thing which may appeal to some gentlemen here to-day:

A Member of this House has been elected Vice-President; taken from a field of great activity and usefulness, where for twenty years he has demonstrated his ability and fitness, taken from us to become the presiding officer in another body, where, of course, he will be all that any Vice-President has ever been while Vice-President; but I think the country suffered a loss when he was taken out of this House and transferred to the other. [Applause.] But he was willing to make the sacrifice. Now, do not think we are discriminating against him.

If Congress was giving a ball or an entertainment for him or for Mr. Taft, it would be a different thing. There would be no charges and no fees; but I do not believe that the Vice-President-elect and the President-elect wish a ball for the benefit of the people of this District, or I will go further and say for the benefit of those who attend, risking the destruction of property of the United States and delaying the consideration of pensions, original applications and increases, for soldiers who are dying every day. Delay the business of that office for twenty days, and it is twenty days that never can be recovered. I wrote a couple of letters to the chairman of the inaugural committee and asked him——

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman gets to those letters, which I suppose relate to the expense——

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I notice in the report of the Pension Commissioner he apparently states that the loss to the Government will be $95,474 in salaries paid——

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. In addition, the expense of moving the file cases and various other things of that sort.

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Probably a total of $100,000.

Mr. SIMS. In all probability.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman have any doubt about that being a fairly accurate estimate of the least expense to the Government?

Mr. SIMS. I have not any doubt that it will amount to $100,000 on account of this inaugural ball.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to state that four years ago Secretary Hitchcock, then a member of the Cabinet of the President who was then to be reinaugurated, estimated the expense at between $20,000 and $30,000.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am credibly informed that he said the expense aggregated $30,000.

Mr. MANN. They had at that time more employees in the Pension Office than they have now.

Mr. ADAIR. Oh, no; I think not.

Mr. MANN. Well, I will say to the gentleman that they did have more employees in the Pension Office then than they have now. We have been reducing the number of employees in the Pension Office the last few years. Now, how could they arrive at an estimate of $30,000? Upon what basis could it possibly be arrived at unless it was the basis of a cabinet officer making a report?

Mr. SIMS. It must have been upon the basis of using a less estimate of time than twenty days.

Mr. MANN. Well, even ten days.

Mr. KEIFER. If you will notice, the Secretary of the Interior four years ago did not say that there was any estimate made, but he said he was informed that $30,000 was what the Government would lose. Now we have an estimate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; and he doubtless got his information four years ago from the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. KEIFER. He does not say so.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; he does not say so.

Mr. MANN. The sum of $30,000 would not even cover one week's work in the Pension Office.

Mr. SIMS. Not at all.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it not simply a question of arithmetic?

Mr. MANN. That is the way it looks to me.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Simply to take the number of employees down there and the number of days and multiply one by the other.

Mr. MANN. That is the way it looks to me. I was trying to find out how they arrived at the estimate four years ago.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, I want to propound a question to anybody who wants to answer it. How can we justify hanging up these old pensioners for even one day, or spending even a $5 bill down there to have a dance?

Mr. MANN. There is no dance, I am sorry to say; it is a ball, not a dance. If you should take the $100,000, the admitted expense to the Government, capitalize it, even at 10 per cent it would amount to $1,000,000, at 5 per cent $5,000,000, at 2 per cent to $5,000,000; and so practically the Government is contributing this year, by this bill, the capital of $5,000,000, as against nothing paid by the District of Columbia.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman tell us how long the Pension building was occupied four years ago?

Mr. SIMS. I know nothing about it, except what the Commissioner reports.

Mr. NORRIS. It is safe to say that the Commissioner's report on the present resolution is based on his conclusion as to what actually happened four years ago, and it seems to me that it ought to be almost conclusive that he is right.

Mr. SIMS. Now, I want the committee to listen to what Secretary Hitchcock said four years ago.

Whether or not its use should be permitted as contemplated in this resolution is problematical. The according of the use of the building will necessitate the suspension of business in the Pension Office for a considerable period, the safe removal and satisfactory storage in practically fireproof quarters of all pending file cases from the court of the building, the removal to places of safety of furniture from as many of the floors of the building as will be utilized, the absolute surrender of a number of rooms on such floors, and the fixing in place in the great court of the building and along the balconies of bunting and other decorations of an inflammable character, to say nothing of the installation of additional electric lights, which will in all probability be required on that occasion. The handling of furniture in removal from the rooms for storage racks injures it considerably, and the danger of damage in the removal and handling of papers and records is necessarily great.

The element of danger from fire and loss of papers attendant upon such occupancy of the building is one which can not be lightly passed over when it is considered that the loss of papers and evidence in pending claims, which can not be duplicated, would be irreparable and work great injury upon many deserving claimants, doubtless preventing favorable action by the bureau on their claims and necessitating the petitioning of Congress for relief. Aside from the large mass of records and papers in the various divisions of the office in everyday use in the work of this great bureau, it should be borne in mind that there are stored in the upper portion of the building the papers in 1,650,400 adjudicated pension claims, and on the floor of the court there are 369 file cases, in four sections, containing 450,000 pending applications and abandoned files. All this material is of inflammable character.

As a matter of information, it may be stated that as a result of the occupancy of this building at the last inauguration in 1901, to say nothing of the incidental damage to the building and the furniture by reason of such use, the loss of time of the employees of that bureau, I am credibly informed, aggregated in value $30,000.

Now, gentlemen, could you make a stronger argument against permitting the use of this building than is made by Secretary Hitchcock, unless it be the argument made by Commissioner Warner?

I wrote to Mr. Stellwagen for some facts, and here are the letters that I received:

WASHINGTON, December 31, 1908.

Hon. THETUS W. SIMS,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As promised in my letter of yesterday, I have pleasure in sending you herewith two letters from Mr. Milton E. Ailes, giving the information asked for in your favors of December 29.

Yours, very truly,

EDWARD J. STELLWAGEN, Chairman.

THE RIGGS NATIONAL BANK OF WASHINGTON, D. C.,
Washington, D. C., December 30, 1908.

Mr. EDWARD J. STELLWAGEN,
Chairman Inaugural Committee, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt by reference from you of the letter of Hon. T. W. SIMS, dated December 29, 1908, as follows:

"Hon. CHAIRMAN OF THE INAUGURAL COMMITTEE,
"Washington, D. C.

"DEAR SIR: Will you kindly furnish me the facts as to receipts, net and gross, to the inaugural committee from the inaugural ball and incidental thereto held at the Pension Bureau building in 1904?

"I am anxious to know the amount of net profits or income to the committee above all expenses properly chargeable or pro rata chargeable to the inaugural ball.

"Very truly, yours, T. W. SIMS."

The receipts from the inaugural ball of 1905 and incidental thereto were as follows:

Receipts.

Sale of ball tickets	$46,345.00
Sale of concert tickets	11,052.00
Sale of ball souvenirs	264.50
Sale of supper tickets	1,676.00
Total ball receipts	59,337.50

The expenditures on account of the inaugural ball of 1905 and incidental thereto were as follows:

Expenditures.

Finance committee, expenses distribution and sale of ball, supper, and concert tickets	$1,034.64
Reception committee	203.75
Ball souvenirs and tickets	5,195.27
Music	5,374.90
Ballroom decorations	17,999.19
Comfort at ball	3,007.17
Floor committee	116.10
Supper at ball	5,807.70
Carriages (including construction of carriage entrances to Pension Office)	3,501.64
Total expense of ball	42,240.36

There was therefore an excess of ball receipts over ball expenditures amounting to $17,097.14.

Mr. SIMS's letter is returned herewith.

Respectfully, yours, MILTON E. AILES,
Treasurer Inaugural Committee of 1905.

THE RIGGS NATIONAL BANK OF WASHINGTON, D. C.,
Washington, D. C., December 30, 1908.

Mr. EDWARD J. STELLWAGEN,
Chairman Inaugural Committee, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt by reference from you of the letter of Hon. T. W. SIMS, dated December 29, 1908, as follows:

"Hon. CHAIRMAN OF THE INAUGURAL COMMITTEE,
"Washington, D. C.

"DEAR SIR: Please give me if you can the net and gross receipts from every source received by the inaugural committee incidental to the inauguration of President Roosevelt in 1905. And whether or not the subscriptions by citizens and corporations to the inaugural committee were returned to them out of the receipts from all sources in whole or in part.

"Very truly, yours, T. W. SIMS."

The receipts and disbursements of the inaugural committee of 1905 were as follows:

Receipts.

Guaranty fund	$62,380.00
Ball tickets	46,345.00
Concert tickets	11,052.00
Supper tickets	1,676.00
Grand-stand tickets, sale of privileges and of old material used on grand stands	26,759.95
Souvenirs and medals	264.50
Official programme	700.00
Old material	12.50
Certified check returned by officers in charge of public buildings and grounds	1,000.00
Sundry small checks and cash items returned to the treasurer	32.00
Total	150,221.95

Disbursements.

Inaugural	$4,906.99
Grand marshal's office	852.61
Finance	1,034.64
Reception	203.75
Press	3.50
Printing	22.10
Souvenirs and tickets	5,195.27
Medals and badges	2,256.86
Transportation	16.00
Public comfort	1,564.49
Public order	30.54
Military organizations	172.12
Civic organizations	725.39
Reviewing stands	15,141.78
Street decorations	3,932.91
Historic sites	193.25
Illumination	4,733.00
Fireworks	3,015.23
Music	5,374.90
Ballroom decorations	17,999.19
Comfort at ball	3,007.17
Floor	116.10
Supper	5,807.70
Carriages	3,501.64
Guarantee fund	62,380.00
Deposits with officer in charge of public buildings and grounds (check returned in full to treasurer inaugural fund)	1,000.00
Transportation and care of Indians, including Carlisle cadets	2,000.00
Care of cowboys	250.00
Auditorium committee	120.65
Relief fund (poor of District of Columbia)	4,664.17
Total	150,221.95

The balance of $4,664.17, above shown, was turned over to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the relief fund of the poor of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SIMS's letter is returned herewith.

Respectfully, MILTON E. AILES,
Treasurer Inaugural Committee of 1905.

Every one of these subscriptions was returned, if ever paid out; I do not think a cent of these subscriptions was ever paid; they are simply in the nature of a guaranty. Every cent was paid back, and after paying all expenses there was a balance of $4,464.10, which was turned over to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for local charities.

This inaugural ball paid for itself. These concessions of public property to this inaugural committee not only paid all expenses, which included profitable employment by a number of District people in connection therewith, as well as the lumber and material purchased of business men, and then they turn over nearly $5,000 after all expenses are paid to the charitable institutions of the District of Columbia. There is a net profit, because when you pay to the charitable institutions of the District of Columbia, you relieve the people of that much of a drain upon their resources.

Mr. NORRIS. If the gentleman will allow me, is he not mistaken? Is it not a little over $17,000?

Mr. SIMS. That was from the ball. Now, the impression was given in the hearings before our committee that the ball was given to get money with which to discharge expenses. They get $17,000, net, speaking in round numbers, and the Government of the United States loses $100,000 in order for them to get $17,000. Gentlemen, had we not better make a direct contribution? That is what Commissioner Warner says. I say here and now, that while I would not vote to appropriate money for the use of the building for an inaugural ball, I would vote a proper and reasonable amount as a part contribution to a building to be built by the citizens of the District of Columbia, and it would be far better than to lose directly $100,000 in order for them to make $17,000 out of our constituents, and take the risk of burning the files and depriving soldiers of what they are entitled to at the time they are entitled to receive it.

To show you that I am not actuated by any feeling on account of partisanship, I am going to have read by the Clerk a communication published in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, a paper published in Ohio, the home of the next President, written by W. S. Couch, who, I am informed, is a friend of the President-elect, and whom Mr. Taft delights to number among his friends.

The Clerk read as follows:

INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT THE ONE FINE FINANCIAL FLIMFLAM—"PATRIOTIC" WASHINGTON BUSINESS MEN "CONTRIBUTE" AND GET IT ALL BACK, TOGETHER WITH MUCH ADVERTISING—VALUABLE CONCESSIONS SOLD—FOUR YEARS AGO A FEW VISITORS TOOK THEIR WATCHES AND CLOTHES HOME WITH THEM, BUT THAT WAS AN OVERSIGHT.

[W. S. Couch.]

PLAIN DEALER BUREAU,
Washington, January 2, 1909.

The city of Washington is preparing to collect its quadrennial dividend. In other words, rapid progress is being made with the plans for the inauguration of William Howard Taft as President. Four years ago several visitors took their clothes and watches home with them. That was an oversight, and it will not happen again, if the inaugural committee can help it.

As far as the United States Government is concerned, the business of inducting a new President into office occupies about two hours and is a simple matter. At the close of these brief but impressive official ceremonies the President and the crowd are turned over to the city of Washington for exploitation, and the city of Washington makes the most of both. The climax comes when the weary Chief Executive of the United States of America is dragged to an inaugural ball as Exhibit A and shown off in all his paces before as many visitors as are willing to pay $5 to take a look at him. The inaugural ball is just as official as the annual Cuyahoga County Republican picnic at Luna Park—but it pays rather better to the promoters.

The first sign of an approaching inauguration is the noisy announcement in the Washington papers that public-spirited men of this city have subscribed from $100,000 to $150,000 for the inauguration fund. This listens very well indeed. The public-spirited men aforesaid get their photographs run in all the local papers and try to bear their Carnegie honors with the modesty conducive to collecting all possible advertising out of their contributions for the clothing and department stores they own. Some months later the soft pedal is applied to the admission that these patriotic subscribers have been repaid the total of their subscriptions, with interest, and that the "balance" remaining has been divided between the Washington hospitals.

This "subscription" list, like the inauguration hospitality, is not pocket deep. The inaugural ball and the price of the concessions for erecting stands along Pennsylvania avenue more than repay all the subscriptions made. The subscribers know this, and there is a rush of them every four years to get on the list. It means good advertising.

THE REAL INAUGURATION.

The official inauguration ceremonies are as follows: The President and Vice-President elect, with their outgoing predecessors, drive to the Capitol just before noon. They come in state, with a cavalry escort clattering about them, but this feature really has no part in the business. As far as the Constitution is concerned, they are free to come in trolley cars.

In the small Senate Chamber gathers the Senate, the House of Representatives, the diplomatic corps, the members of the Supreme Court, members of the Cabinet, and a few distinguished citizens who have secured cards. The Senate galleries are packed with the wives, daughters, cousins, uncles, and aunts of the aforesaid. Here the Vice-President of the United States is sworn in, and he takes his place. Then everybody pours out to the front of the Capitol, where a huge stand has been erected. The front of each wing is likewise decorated with a huge stand. All these seats are the property of the Senate and House Members and officials of the Government to allot as it pleases them. The great square between the Capitol and the Congressional Library is filled with the public, footsore from long standing and being trod upon by the horses of mounted policemen.

At the front of this stand, with West Point and Annapolis cadets standing between him and the public, the President-elect is sworn in by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. As soon as he is sworn in, the President reads his inaugural address, which is not a legal part of the ceremonies and which nobody can hear, as a rule. The inaugural address finished, the President rides back to the White House, which the retiring President turns over to him. This ends the official inauguration. All the rest is a part of the money-making scheme of the city of Washington.

THE PARADE.

When the President starts for the White House, with his escort clattering along, the inaugural parade steps out behind the official carriage. When the President approaches to within a block of the White House the head of the inaugural parade stops and the whole shows suspends while the new Chief Executive gets his lunch, which he takes in the White House with a few friends. Usually it is raining by this time—a cold, drizzly rain, a March rain—and the gold-laced soldier paraders and the silk-hatted political clubs stand dripping in the street and wish they had some of that lunch which is keeping everything waiting. The public wiggles miserably on the rough plank seats for which it has paid from $1 to $5 in order to see the parade and also wishes that it had some of that lunch.

Finally, the lunch finished, the President reluctantly leaves the warm shelter of the White House for a chilly stand erected on the sidewalk in front of that building. The stand is covered with dripping, discolored bunting, but minus oil stoves or foot warmers. Here the Chief Executive is supposed to sit, collecting the germs of colds, bronchitis, and pneumonia, while the long procession passes. In time he is almost as chilled and miserable as the ordinary spectators in the stands.

The inaugural parade has been developed because the opportunity to see the actual inauguration is limited to so few people. The city of Washington, which wants the money, knows that some sort of a show must be provided for the thousands who come to see a President inaugurated and who can not. Consequently the city of Washington and the inaugural committee work overtime to encourage the parade. This parade is all that most people ever see of the March 4 ceremonial.

The inaugural parade has also developed because of the passion of the average man to parade. There is a sort of hazy tradition that every member of a political marching club which passes by the White House stand is personally remembered by the President and that every marcher's name is written at the head of the list of men to be considered for appointments under the new administration. Consequently they turn out nobly, ward heelers by the thousand, under uncomfortable silk hats, wrapped in badly fitting tan coats, and carrying grotesque red, white, and blue umbrellas. As a matter of fact, the military part of the parade is long enough to take the keen edge off any spectator's enthusiasm. By the time the civic end of the procession comes along there are groans and muttered queries as to "How long, oh Lord, how long?" heard in the White House stand.

THE INAUGURAL BALL.

When evening comes everybody is tired out. Everybody is wet, as well as weary. Everybody is in the mood to make good resolutions about attending inauguration ceremonies, and the President is becoming converted to the one-term idea. The relentless local committee, like Shylock, will have its pound of flesh, however. The inaugural ball is a brutal necessity. Besides, one has purchased the tickets, at $5 per ticket.

Then is witnessed the spectacle of the tired paraders working themselves into rented evening clothes, at $2 per suit, and the trousers refusing to fit. They have to do it, though, because this is where the wives and daughters of the paraders get their innings after a chilly afternoon in the stands. Nobody bothers about dinner, because the $5 ticket for the inaugural ball covers refreshments, does it not? What do you want, two or three dinners in one day?

The hackmen of Washington get their share of the visitors' money in this one night. Nobody knows where the Pension building is located—the Pension building in which the ball is always held. So they pile into hacks for the short drive and the hackmen charge all the traffic will bear, and then some.

An inaugural ball may be safely reckoned among the saddest of life's spectacles. None of the natives go. No members of the official set go whose duties do not take them there, and the latter go in the train of the new President and hurry away when he hurries away. As for supper at the inaugural ball, six oysters and a glass of water or a cup of coffee is regarded as a full ration. If the guest shows a disposition to demand more, plain clothes men are put on his trail. For the rest, the oddest assorted crowd possible to imagine mills around helplessly and watches for the President and his party. They come, stay a few minutes, and go. There is real enthusiasm about their going. The President and his party have done their duty, however. They have shown themselves. The local committee can collect.

SLEEPING AND EATING.

Next to the inaugural ball and the parade stands, the softest thing in the inauguration line is renting rooms. The first-class hotels put their rates in the J. P. Morgan class, the second-class hotels charge like those of the first class, and the boarding houses and private houses hold a cot somewhat dearer than a Goldfield mining claim.

When the last inauguration happened, "Dry Dollar" Sullivan, of New York, had been living all winter at a Washington hotel of the second class. His rooms had three windows fronting on Pennsylvania avenue, where the parade was to pass. "Dry Dollar" had spent money without stint in this hostelry. He had a year's contract on his lodgings, too. Shortly before the inauguration, however, he was informed that he could not look out of his own windows on inauguration day unless he paid $25 apiece for that privilege. Shortly after this "Dry Dollar" returned to New York and Tammany Hall. Washington, he said, was too strong for him.

SUGGESTED REFORM.

It is this sort of an orgy for which preparations are now being made in Washington. A local chairman of the inauguration committee has been selected with great pomp and ceremony. The usual farce of collecting local subscriptions has been carried on to the usual extreme. The usual controversy has taken place as to whether the Pension Bureau building shall be used for the inaugural ball, and it has been decided, as usual, that it shall. Uncle Sam's pockets are to be picked with neatness and dispatch in the usual fashion. Four years ago the inauguration was characterized by rough riders, cow punchers, and Indians of various degrees of wildness. This time Yale clubs will have the posts of honor; the gown and mortar board will be the standard uniform, and dignity and decorum will be the keynotes. The visitors, however, will be charged just as much as usual. They will see just as little of the actual inauguration as usual.

It has been suggested that the ill feeling developed here every four years could be avoided by a simple expedient. If a local committee would meet every visitor at the train, relieve him of all his money, and give him coupons enough to cover his style of living for three or four days, it would save restaurant and hotel keepers, hack drivers, and souvenir vendors any amount of trouble. The money is taken away from the visitor anyway. The process is sure, and as it is now worked it is unpleasant and attended with quarrels and bickering. Depriving the stranger of his money on arrival, however, would avoid all this. He would be assured of as good and wasteful a time as the town could afford one of his means. He would go home with just as much money as he now carries away.

WHY DO THEY COME?

The real problem is, "Why does anyone come to an inauguration?" That question has never been answered to the satisfaction of those who are compelled to witness one of these functions after the other. Troop A, of Cleveland, has to come, of course, because it is the standing escort of presidents about to be inaugurated—Ohio presidents, at least, and as most every other one is from Ohio it works out just the same. Outside of Troop A, of Cleveland, there seems to be no real reason for anybody to come to Washington for the inauguration. Still they continue to come—and suffer.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I have had that read to show the Ohio idea of the inaugural ball. They are going to furnish us the President, and they have furnished us the reasons why we have these things. As I am not from Ohio, and not of the party of the President, I am not supposed to know the inside of matters, but I have had the article read to let Congress know how others see us and view and look upon this ball. It is a fact, I know myself by sad experience, that all the hotels in Washington—well, I will not say all, because I have not tried all, but some of them I do know, which I have tried—double their charge on inauguration day or during inauguration. If the ordinary charge is $2, they make it $4; and if $4, then they make it $8. The railroads reduce their fares to get the people here, and then the hotels double their fare in order to obtain what they have after they get here.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the gentleman admit that this is a pictorial criticism for the amusement of the American people rather than anything that will affect them in legislation?

Mr. SIMS. I do not know how it appeals to the gentleman from New York. I suppose he is treating it as a pictorial matter, not paying much attention to it.

Mr. MACON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. McMILLAN] can not help but see, however, that this pictorial amusement fits like a glove. The writer of it describes the situation from A to Z.

Mr. SIMS. In other words, it is the truth told in an entertaining way so Congress will listen to it. Now, let us take another thing. They talk about this great parade down these avenues. Go down here and try to get a window for your friends, and you, unless you are a rich man, will have to view the parade from the cellar, as you will not be able to pay for a window for even two hours. [Laughter.] Why, it is the best season in four years that can occur to the people of Washington. They even charge you to look out on an avenue. They charge you for everything you can be charged for. They do not do like the railroads, reduce the rates, but, not following them, they increase them, they double them, and the so-called "subscription to entertain people" is one merely in form and not in fact.

Mr. McMILLAN. Are they not the owners of this privilege for which they charge? Have they not paid the taxes for that right?

Mr. SIMS. They are the owners of these buildings, or the lessees, or they could not charge, but their patriotism is such that when your constituents and mine pay one-half of the taxes of this city to relieving these buildings to that extent they charge them outrageous prices to occupy even a window of a building.

Mr. McMILLAN. One other question, please.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly, and one other answer.

Mr. McMILLAN. What is exorbitant? Does the gentleman know of any exorbitant charge that has been made whereby he can base this statement?

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman think when a hotel charges one price all the time until inauguration and then doubles it, that that is not exorbitant?

Mr. McMILLAN. I claim that a hotel that has a license from the Committee on the District of Columbia, that is under the jurisdiction of that committee, is answerable to that committee.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I have been on that committee a long time, and when it comes to my dealing with hotels I find they have always got the upper hand and I am the gentleman that has to yield and not them. [Laughter.] If the gentleman by his association on that committee for a short time has found out what I have not been able to in ten years, I want to confer with him. [Laughter.] Of course, it will be in the cellar and not looking out of these Washington windows.

Mr. McMILLAN. Another question, please.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLAN. I just want to say that my short experience on the committee with the gentleman has been very pleasant.

Mr. SIMS. I thank the gentleman, and say that so has mine with him, and nobody regrets more than I do that he is going to leave us.

Mr. McMILLAN. I thank the gentleman, for that is complimentary, but I want to say I believe the unearned increment which belongs to the soil and the privilege of Washington belongs to the people of Washington, and I can find no spot or place within my short experience where they have abused it.

Mr. SIMS. Then why do they not build their own buildings, like the gentleman's city does and like mine does? Why do they come to us and pledge us that they will build them if we will only let them have it one time more, and then come back and practically admit that they have made no effort? But, away from all these things. I do not care how much my colleague from New York dances here or elsewhere. I would be glad to see him dance; he is of a happy disposition, and should be called "SUNNY MCMILLAN," for such he is.

But let us not dance over the delayed claims of the old soldiers of this country. How could you feel merry while they look on and wait? It is a commercial dance. If it were a dance or a ball really in honor of the President, you would not hear me making a word of complaint, but it is a dance to get money without any reference to any other object that I can see than getting the money by that enterprise, and, as suggested by a friend on my right, there never will be any building built by the people of Washington as long as Congress will go along year after year, as we have done heretofore, authorizing the use of the Pension Office every four years simply for the asking.

I am opposing this bill, looking to having a building here to hold these conventions and public gatherings in, for these public gatherings are the very life of the people of Washington, added to the official salaries paid out here and the expenses that are incurred by the people who come here.

You have a great man elected as President, who would not regard this ball as essential. He is too big to do it. He will justify your action, and he no doubt will be glad to be relieved of attending the so-called "inaugural ball" rather than have it in the Pension building, should that be the case. Why, I have a sympathy for him many of you do not realize, and that is that I come nearer weighing as much as he does than any one of you; but after a whole day, after his inaugural speech making and standing in that reviewing stand on Pennsylvania avenue for hours he will no doubt be delighted and relieved not to have to go to that ball, where ladies exhibit their beautiful faces, their arms, and their shoulders, with beautiful necklaces of pearls, and diamond brooches, and when he thinks that the old soldiers' pensions have been delayed twenty days in order that this may be, when he knows that possible fires may destroy valuable records, how much do you think he will enjoy that ball? If we are going to have an inauguration ball, make a direct appropriation for it.

You ought not to go home to your Christian constituents, to the people of your district, and say you voted against the soldier in favor of a commercial dance, in favor of a so-called "inaugural ball" that has nothing pertaining to the inauguration except the name. If you are going to provide a ball, then do it at government expense and under government supervision, and do not charge $5 or any other amount, but give the invitations to those whom you think will do honor to the ball by their presence. There is no better time to call a halt in this matter. Four years ago the amount of the appropriation asked for was $20,000. They did not spend it as the report shows. Now, they come and ask for $23,000. Is it the custom that the Appropriations Committee allow what people think they may want? No; they report what it is shown they need and have to have. I shall offer an amendment to reduce this to $20,000, and I shall offer an amendment to strike out the Pension Office. It is true that these secretaries of the other departments, the Secretary of War, and so forth, as far as their departments are affected, say that they have no objection.

I am not making any fight on account of taking up space for the erection of stands, and so forth, and charging from $1 to $5 for a seat in the rain; but let us protect the Pension Office. We can not do otherwise in good faith to ourselves, and to treat the demand of this inaugural committee, or those who represented it four years ago, when they said if we would let them have it then they would never again ask for it. I do not see any better use we can put a minority Member to than telling the truth about matters that a majority Member might feel embarrassed to tell himself, but which he recognizes and believes. I would honor these gentlemen who have been elected to these high offices, but I do not consider this ball does them more honor than would a Coney Island dance——

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield for a question? I would very much like to know whether the gentleman himself would like to have this resolution defeated.

Mr. SIMS. Unless you can take out the Pension building I want to help to defeat the whole business.

Mr. DRISCOLL. You really would not have a ball if you could.

Mr. SIMS. Not at such a risk as that.

Mr. DWIGHT. Will the gentleman allow me a question? Have you any assurance if you do not allow them to have the Pension building that citizens will build a new hall?

Mr. SIMS. I believe as truly as that I am standing here that if we refuse to give them these public buildings one time, at the next inauguration a suitable building will be erected. They will lose nothing on it, and if necessary we can make an appropriation to help the thing along.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield? Is not the converse certain, that if we do give them the building this time they never will build one?

Mr. SIMS. Absolutely, when they see that Congress is so easy. Each and every time an inauguration takes place we give them just what they want. I suppose I would be just like them. They have got a soft, easy snap up here, so they go ahead and do not put up their own money. The enterprise will return dividends. There are a great many conventions held here. They had an international tuberculosis congress here this summer, with no place in which to hold it. If we stop this thing, let them know we are in earnest, they will erect the building. If we do not, the same thing will occur in four years from now.

I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has four minutes remaining.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I think the mind of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] is unnecessarily perturbed in regard to the resolution which is before this committee. It is only to make possible the proper and dignified conduct of a great and important event. We provide in this resolution that the police will have some additional powers to those now given to them. We provide that the Department of War may, in its discretion, lend such bunting and decorations as may be a part of their supplies, in order to give dignity to a national occasion. There is nothing that so attracts me as to see the flag of our country used as our best decoration; and that use, in my opinion, must add to the pleasure of those who come to Washington to see the President of the United States inaugurated.

There are provisions in this resolution for the proper extension of the hospital service and of the ambulance service, of the additional wires that the telegraph companies and the telephone companies need in order to provide for the comfort of people who flock to this city, as we all know, in such great numbers that the present facilities could not care for them. That is the most important part of this resolution.

Of course I appreciate that there has been from almost time immemorial a gay and festive part of the inaugural proceedings, known as an "inaugural ball," and it has been the custom for a number of years to charge admission to it. The money so obtained has gone through the hands of the inaugural committee to pay the expenses that were unusual. I can see no serious reason why this should not be continued. I appreciate perfectly, provided the White House were large enough, unquestionably the incoming President, provided he had money enough, would be only too happy to entertain, with something in the way of refreshments, all of the people who take part on the festive occasion, but unfortunately that can not be done under the limitations of the White House. Therefore it has seemed fitting in times gone by, and I think it is proper now, to allow the inaugural committee to hold a ball at which they ask the outgoing President and the incoming President, and such people of distinction as may be in the city of Washington, to appear, to show themselves, if you choose; and the people that come here from our several constituencies would rather go to that inaugural ball at the price of $5 apiece than take any other part in the inaugural ceremonies, unless they were of the comparatively few who could get into the Senate Chamber at the time of the actual ceremonies of the inauguration.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the article that was read from a newspaper at the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS]. But, honestly, it did not convince me very much. It struck me that that was a clever, facetious article, written by some gentleman connected with some newspaper who knew if he wrote so clever and readable an article he would probably get a higher amount of pay than he otherwise would have received. But it scarcely seems to me it is fitting for the gentleman from Tennessee to give that as an argument against the passage of a resolution that must in some way be passed, because you can not have the inauguration ceremonies in the city of Washington, and have 350,000 or 400,000 people coming here, without making some particular and especial police and hospital regulations for the care of those people.

Mr. GILLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. OLCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. GILLETT. Even if this first section were stricken out, that remaining would provide for the purposes that you speak of, would it not?

Mr. OLCOTT. The bill was not being read under the rule. The gentleman was not speaking to any amendment; he was speaking generally on the bill.

Mr. GILLETT. I am asking your opinion.

Mr. OLCOTT. He stated that if the provision for the use of the Pension building for the use of the inaugural ball remained in he hoped the resolution would not pass.

Mr. GILLETT. I am asking, if the first section were stricken out, would the remainder take care of most of the things you speak of?

Mr. OLCOTT. I beg your pardon; I was rather answering the gentleman from Tennessee than the gentleman from Massachusetts. Unquestionably that is true.

In regard to this question. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] talked about the expense it is to move the files of the Pension Office. I think it is unquestionably true the expense is considerable, but we have appropriated $23,000 under this resolution for it. I do not believe there is going to be any such loss as is calculated by the commissioner because certain employees of the Pension Department will not have any place to work. Personally I believe that under the resolution, with the supervision and instruction of the Secretary of the Interior, such portion of the Pension Office can be reserved that there can be no danger of having any payments that are due to the old soldiers delayed for a minute. I know perfectly well that in the city where I live we have very much inferior quarters for those who are conducting the distribution of such payments to those which they have in the city of Washington, and the amount of space is entirely inferior to that used especially for that purpose in the city of Washington and the number of checks very much larger.

Is it for Congress to call upon the citizens of Washington to erect some enormous convention building suitable for these purposes? I do not think the Pension building itself can be injured; I do not think that the expense is extravagant; I do not think that any serious disturbance of the business of the Pension Office will occur. I do believe that a great majority of the people that come here, and the people throughout this country, would prefer to have an inaugural ball, even if it is sneeringly referred to as a "pay ball." Most people who go to balls have to pay something for admission, whether in subscription beforehand or in the mere purchase of tickets, so that it still takes on a social character.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How many people come to the city of Washington during the inauguration?

Mr. OLCOTT. Something like 425,000 people.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How many will attend the ball?

Mr. OLCOTT. As many as can possibly get in the building.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How many will that be?

Mr. OLCOTT. I suppose ten or fifteen thousand people.

Mr. MANN. Forty-five thousand dollars was raised at the last inaugural ball at $5 apiece.

Mr. OLCOTT. That would be 9,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Is there any method of extending invitations to people to attend the ball, or is it for anybody who pays the $5?

Mr. OLCOTT. I think anybody who pays the $5 can get in there. There are no invitations. I know I have always seen tickets for sale in the hotels when I have been here before in inauguration times.

Mr. McMILLAN. Is it not for the purpose of giving everybody an opportunity to attend, making it universal, and not making it up for different classes and stations? Does it not mean that any man can go who pays?

Mr. OLCOTT. Unquestionably.

Mr. McMILLAN. Is not that Americanism? [Applause.]

Mr. OLCOTT. I think unquestionably the object in charging is so that anybody can have an opportunity of attending who desires to do so.

Mr. McMILLAN. They are compelled to raise money?

Mr. OLCOTT. Of course the inaugural committee wants money so as to make both ends meet. But the gentleman from Tennessee had something to say about the hotels. He talked considerably in regard to the hotels putting up their fare. He does not live in a great city. I have attended conventions in several instances when hotels have charged a great deal more than they do when fewer people are clamoring for accommodation.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OLCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. ADAIR. The gentleman stated that he does not believe that the business of the office will be materially delayed, or that the expense will be enormous, in holding the ball in the Pension building. Now, the Commissioner of Pensions has made a statement in which he says that it will lay off 1,248 clerks for a period of about twenty days, which will cost the Government $95,400 and some odd.

Mr. OLCOTT. Yes. That is his statement.

Mr. ADAIR. Now, does the gentleman believe that the Commissioner of Pensions does not know what he is talking about when he makes this statement?

Mr. OLCOTT. Oh, no; there is no one who has higher regard for the present Commissioner of Pensions than I have——

Mr. ADAIR. Then why does the gentleman say——

Mr. OLCOTT. But I think at this particular time the natural feeling that the head of that great department would have in regard to anything like disturbance in his work has led him (it is entirely an estimate, anyway) to greatly exaggerate the possible disturbance. And in this connection I should like to read what the Secretary of the Interior, his superior officer, has said. He says:

> Heretofore the building has been greatly disfigured and damaged by the installation of an additional electric plant for its lighting and by having nailed and attached to its walls and columns the decorations provided by the committee.
>
> In addition, heretofore on such occasions many papers that could not be duplicated have been stolen or destroyed, and on each previous like occasion fires have occurred in the building on account of the carelessness of its temporary occupants; and in moving from and returning to the building the desks, tables, file cases, etc., have been greatly damaged. damaged.
>
> We can not expect any less damage to the building and its contents by the contemplated occupancy than the building and its contents sustained by the like occupancy in the past, and the damage in every way by the proposed occupancy can not be estimated.

Mr. ADAIR. It will delay the progress of the work in the consideration of claims before the department.

Mr. OLCOTT. But you appreciate that in the very first paragraph of the resolution we have expressly given the use of this building, subject to such restrictions as the Secretary of the Interior may impose.

Mr. ADAIR. I understand that all right, but the Commissioner of Pensions has stated the cost and the delay that will be incurred in the use of the building. That is not denied or disputed, is it?

Mr. OLCOTT. Oh, yes.

Mr. ADAIR. Except in so far as the gentleman has stated that he believes that the matter is somewhat exaggerated.

Mr. OLCOTT. Except in so far as the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia has stated and put into the RECORD the report of exactly what the delay cost at the last inauguration, which was something like $20,000, I believe.

Mr. MANN. Oh, he did not make any such statement as that.

Mr. ADAIR. That was not an estimate.

Mr. OLCOTT. Well, at any rate, very much less than $90,000.

Mr. MANN. He made no statement at all as to what the cost was before.

Mr. NORRIS. That was just in regard to the damage.

Mr. MANN. That was a statement made before the last inauguration was had.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It was a statement made by Secretary Hitchcock, under the same circumstances as Secretary Garfield now makes his statement.

Mr. MANN. But it was not a statement as to what it had cost.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; as far as I know there is nobody who has made a statement of that.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the gentleman tell us how long the operations of the office were suspended on the last occasion?

Mr. OLCOTT. They were never suspended. They were somewhat disturbed.

Mr. NORRIS. How long were they somewhat disturbed?

Mr. OLCOTT. They were disturbed for twenty days.

Mr. NORRIS. Four years ago?

Mr. OLCOTT. That is the information I have.

Mr. NORRIS. If they were disturbed for twenty days, then the Commissioner of Pensions is correct in his estimate.

Mr. OLCOTT. No; I think not; because he takes every employee in the building in his estimate.

Mr. NORRIS. To what extent was the suspension four years ago? Were they not all compelled to suspend?

Mr. OLCOTT. Oh, no; of course they were not.

Mr. NORRIS. What proportion of them were?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The whole force, not over eight or ten days.

Mr. MANN. My information is that four years ago it was three weeks.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to ask the gentleman, Does he regard this as a national function?

Mr. OLCOTT. In my opinion it certainly is a national function.

Mr. McMILLAN. What is the fatherhood of the expense of the District of Columbia? Is it national or is it upon the District or divided?

Mr. OLCOTT. As most of us know, one-half of the expenses is paid by the National Government and one-half by the District of Columbia.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then why is it not reasonable, this being a national function, that we should honor the inauguration of the great head of our Nation by supporting it from the money of the function by which it was created?

Mr. OLCOTT. I think it is reasonable, and am entirely in favor of the use of the Pension building for the inaugural ball, and hope that the resolution as reported from the committee will pass.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, it seems that this is a very seasonable occasion to discuss inaugurations in general. Nobody that knows anything about it will charge that I have any partisan feeling in this matter, or that I am undertaking to mar the pleasure of Judge Taft in his inauguration. I have a very high opinion of him, personally, and have had since the first time I ever laid eyes upon him. This proposal to hold an inaugural ball in the Pension Office has nothing whatever to do with the inauguration ceremony. The truth is, that the first thing the new Congress should do, the House at least, after we get rid of the tariff bill, is to address ourselves to a change of the date of inauguration. The President of the United States ought to be elected for six years, and he ought to be made forever ineligible for another term. The presidential election ought to be held the first Monday in August, and the President ought to be inaugurated the first Monday in October. The new Congress ought to be elected at the same time he is elected and start in the same day that he is inaugurated. The dates of inaugurating a President and the convening of Congress were fixed with reference to the exigencies of the stagecoach age and not for the age of steam and electricity.

There is no sort of sense in seeking out the man you suppose to be best fitted—as you gentlemen did—for President of the United States; go to all the expense and loss of business and worry of electing him, and then expect him to stand out on the east portico of the Capitol on the 4th day of March, in such weather as we usually have here on that day, and imperil his life speaking to a crowd that he can not reach the limits of with his voice, when his inaugural address could just as easily be read the next day in the newspapers.

The President of the United States ought to be inaugurated in the House of Representatives. That is where he was originally inaugurated, and where he ought to be inaugurated now. [Applause.] The circumstances of the country, with its progress and growth, will bring larger and larger crowds to each succeeding inauguration as long as the Republic exists. If we were going to inaugurate a Democratic President here on the 4th of March there would be at least 250,000 visitors in this town, and they would not be asking for anything except to spend their money.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And a job. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It so happens that I have been here fourteen years, and about this time quadrennially we repeat this same debate.

I think the people of Washington are the most sociable people in the world, the kindest, the most accommodating. None of them has ever gouged me in prices. I have no complaint to make whatever on that score; but the very fact that they are so kind and polite is one reason why they are always getting things out of Congress that Congress has no right to give them. They come around to the best of us, and the least polite of us, and beg of us and plead with us until we do not want to be hard on them, and we agree inadvertently and unadvisedly to do these things, and then when the time arrives, if we are honest, we go on and do what we promised to do.

Four years ago they promised solemnly that they would never ask for the use of the Pension Office again. If we do this thing that these men want done—I do not know how many of us will be here four years from now; I hope we all will, except vacant seats enough on that side to give us the House [laughter], and I would like to pick them out [laughter]—but those of us that will be here four years from now will be going through this same debate again, and the Congress four years after that will be going again through it, and so on ad infinitum.

Last summer one of the most distinguished bodies of men in the civilized world met in this city, the International Tuberculosis Congress, made up of the very best of the medical profession the wide world over. There was not any place in Washington outside of a public building where they could be properly entertained. A proposition was brought in here to give them the use of the Hall of the House of Representatives and the use of the House Office Building, and I voted against it. I did so with the greatest reluctance, because they were engaged in a great and noble work.

But here was this trouble about it. If we gave them the right to use this Hall, if we gave them the right to use the House Office Building, we could not turn down the innumerable requests made in days to come, and the House acted wisely.

Mr. OLCOTT. We did provide them some accommodations that proved fitting, did we not?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Certainly we did; we did the best we could.

Mr. McMILLAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri if he ever knew a bride that did not want a wedding, and if he ever knew of a President of the United States that did not want an inaugural ball?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I never heard of a President of the United States that wanted an inaugural ball.

Mr. McMILLAN. All right, but——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How many of them want it? I do not know.

Mr. McMILLAN. Well, do you know of anybody that did not?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why, no; I do not say that I knew any President that did not; but I will tell you how I have acted for a long time about this committee. Here is my friend from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], who has been one of the leading members of this committee for several years. I have found that he was honest; I have found that he was intelligent; I have found that he was industrious and courageous, and I have followed him. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I can not learn everything for myself, so in District matters I support him. Now, let us go back to this other proposition. These people in Washington are a fine set of people. I want to repeat that so that nobody can take exceptions to what I am saying, but the people of Washington ought to be taught to walk alone. This is the only time in the United States——

Mr. McMILLAN. Hold on, let us have another question. Walk alone? Is this not our national home?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes. It ought to be out in the Ozark Mountains, but it is here.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then, if it is our national home, it does not need to walk alone.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I can not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. McMILLAN. The question is, This is the home of the United States; this is where we all come. This is the Paris of the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is no more the home of the United States than is the city in which I live.

Mr. McMILLAN. This is where every deed and every work that is done in the great United States should show the best.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Oh, wait a minute. I did not yield to the gentleman for a speech. I yielded for a question. I started to say—and I believe I am within the strict limits of truth when I do say—that this is the only city of any considerable size in the United States where the people do not go down in their own pockets and fish up the money to build a large auditorium, or whatever you please to call it, in which to entertain great public gatherings.

I will give two examples of that: Eight years ago the Democratic national convention was located at Kansas City. After it was located, a magnificent coliseum or auditorium which they had there was burned down. The enterprising people of that enterprising town went to work and built a new auditorium before that convention met that would seat 15,000 people. [Applause.] Kansas City is not as big as Washington, although it is growing very fast. Even the two Kansas Cities—Kansas City, Mo., and Kansas City, Kans.—practically one town, are not as big as this town. Last year the national Democratic committee met here to decide where they were going to have the national convention. I was not a member of that committee, but I was present in a kind of advisory capacity. I had an interest in it. I was opposed to Denver. Among other things, I did not believe they had an auditorium in Denver that would house a national convention. The Denver people won out. They did not have an auditorium that would seat a national convention, but with that splendid spirit which prevails in the western country they went to work and built an auditorium which is not only a credit to Denver and to Colorado but which is a credit to the United States of America. [Applause.]

I can prove by my friend from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], by my friend from Minnesota [Mr. HAMMOND], by my other friend from Alabama [Captain HOBSON], by my friend from Kentucky [OLLIE M. JAMES], and by every man who made a speech in that auditorium, that it is the best auditorium in America for the purpose of making speeches. I cheerfully bear testimony to that fact. Now, what Denver did on such a short notice, what Kansas City did on shorter notice, what every other city of any consequence in the United States has done on its own motion, the people of Washington ought to do. They ought to build an auditorium, and then if they want to give this ball they will have a place in which to give it. I understand the fact to be that real estate in the city of Washington is extremely profitable.

Mr. McMILLAN. But are they an independent civic body? They are trammeled by the National Government, and the things such as the District of Columbia Committee puts in their way and this House puts in their way.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I can not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. McMILLAN. Well, the gentleman can understand this, that we are oleomargarine; we are neither butter nor grease, we are half national and half civic. Does the gentleman understand that?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, what of it? [Laughter.] I say this, that the Congress of the United States ought to quit loaning them buildings, and the people of Washington should go to work and build a suitable auditorium in this city to accommodate the wants of this city; but they will never do it until we cut off their free use of the United States buildings. Now, coming down to the question before the House—whether the Pension Office ought to be turned over to them—I am dead against it, and I am against it on good grounds. In the first place, it will cost somewhere from $75,000 to $100,000 of actual money to do it; that is, money lost to the Government in clerk hire. That money does not belong to us to give away. It is not our money. It is the money of the people of the United States, and there is not a man living who can justify that waste of public money, I do not care a straw where he comes from. Another thing about it. It holds up the granting of these pensions for twenty or thirty days. If a man is ever going to get it at all, he ought to get a pension before he dies. Then there is another thing. If that building should accidentally catch fire and burn up all the public records in there, it would cost from ten to twenty millions of dollars to replace those papers.

You can not afford to take any such risk. A great many of them could not be replaced, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] says. Some years ago there was a murderer acquitted in Cincinnati whom everybody except his lawyers and the jury thought ought to be hanged. They made up a mob and burned down the court-house. I have heard it said that it cost the city of Cincinnati and the county of Hamilton at least $10,000,000 to replace the papers in that building. I do not know whether the people of this town practice extortion or not. They never practiced it on me. Nobody ever turned me out of a hotel or boarding house because an inauguration came around; but there is a man sitting on that side of the House, a Republican brother of high character—I have him in my eye now and I look away so as not to seek him out—and I met him on a street car a day or two before either the last inauguration or the one before. He was in great distress. He said his landlady or his landlord—I have forgotten which, but generally it is a landlady—where he was boarding and where he had boarded the winter with his family had notified him two or three days before that he had to give up those rooms he was occupying or pay four or five dollars a day apiece, I have forgotten which. Such things do happen. And what does it amount to after you have seen an inauguration?

Judge Taft would be just as much President of the United States if he went down before one of the justices of the peace we have been talking about to-day and took the oath of office and walked over to the White House and assumed the functions of the President. This great hullaballoo that goes on in front of the east portico of the Capitol is not a very hilarious performance for men sitting on benches out in the snow and catching their death of cold. I understand, as my friend from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] says, it killed Senator Bate. The day that Cleveland was inaugurated the second time was the worst I ever saw in America, and I was caught in a Kansas blizzard once. It hailed and snowed and rained and blew, and I understood afterwards, as stated by the papers, that the death of at least 60 men could be fairly attributed to marching around in the snow and mud that day. I repeat, if I had my way about it, Judge Taft would come in and be sworn in the House of Representatives, but that can not be.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the gentleman permit? It puts a million and a half dollars into circulation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, it will get into circulation anyhow. I do not intend for the inaugural committee to put any of my money into circulation this time; they have done it before.

Mr. McMILLAN. That is all it is.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to one inaugural ball once, because my wife wanted me to go. I never spent so sad an evening anywhere in my lifetime, except at a funeral.

Mr. BONYNGE. Was it at a Republican inauguration?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; but that was not it; that did not have anything to do with it. I did not see 100 people down there whom I knew, and I had a lonesome time of it. I want to repeat, Mr. Chairman, that the three arguments that no man can answer against letting out this Pension building for the inaugural ball are that we are not justified by any process of reasoning known among men in spending the amount of money that it would cost. In the second place, it holds up the issuance of pensions to a multitude of old men and women. In the third place, we run the risk of destroying the records down there, which are worth millions of dollars, and I do not believe it should be done. [Applause.]

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak for the pensioners. There is not one of them to-day but will sacrifice the time, or twice the time, with that same patriotic impulse with which they bore the stress and the rigors of war. [Applause.]

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, the hour is getting late, and therefore I shall not trespass upon the patience of the committee any further than to say I do not believe there is a nation on earth that installs, inaugurates, or crowns a head of the nation the ceremonies incident to which are as simple as the ceremonies that mark the inauguration of the President of the United States. [Applause.] I noticed a short time ago that there was spent for the harness on the horses that drew the equipage that carried Prince Albert at the time of his coronation, $80,000. That is almost as much money as we spend for all the ceremonies incident to the inauguration of an American President. I contend that the ceremonies that we witness quadrennially are not elaborate. They are simple ceremonies, and ceremonies befitting our people and our form of government, possibly a little more elaborate than I would frame if it were left to me.

I do not know but that I would follow the suggestion made by my friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] if I had my way about it, and have the President elect come to Washington unattended, stop at a third-class hotel, take the oath of office before a justice of the peace, and then proceed to business; but that is not the way we have been doing it. We have been having an inaugural parade, we have been having ceremonies on the east portico of the Capitol, and we have been having an inaugural ball.

The first inaugural ball in the Pension building, I am informed, was held in 1885, when Mr. Cleveland was elected President of the United States. This ball has been held every four years since, as I understand it, in that building.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LANDIS. All right.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the gentleman know that President Arthur was sworn in by a notary public in New York City before he came on here?

Mr. LANDIS. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And that President Hayes was sworn in by a justice of the peace, or something like that, over here in the White House the day before he was inaugurated?

Mr. LANDIS. Yes; and I contend that Mr. Cleveland would have made just as good a President as he did make, and that we would have had just as good times as we did have under him, if that inaugural ball had not been held in the Pension building.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No doubt.

Mr. LANDIS. But we had the ball then, we have had it every four years since, and it is just as much a recognized function of this inaugural season as is the splendid parade down Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Has he not a clear recollection that four years ago we were assured here upon the floor by the gentlemen representing, or proposing to represent, the business people of the city of Washington that if we would permit the inaugural ball once more in the Pension building by the next time the President came in they would have erected a great convention hall?

Mr. LANDIS. Yes; I remember that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is the gentleman not also aware of the fact that the business men of Washington make a great deal of money out of this grand concourse of people who come here?

Mr. LANDIS. No; not at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And that they also get a great deal out of the Federal Government in one way or another and give very little in return? Now, does not the gentleman think the best way and the only way of impressing upon them the proper civic pride and making them erect a building suitable for conventions and inaugural balls is for Congress to quit appropriating for it?

Mr. LANDIS. I will answer that question toward the close of my brief remarks. I was speaking of the Pension building. My friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] stated that among the objections laid against granting the use of this building for this purpose was the expense it would be to the Government by reason of the effect it would have in obstructing the force at work in the Pension building. I do not imagine that that will be great. As a matter of fact, the clerks in the Pension Bureau by accelerating their activities just a little could make up what might be lost by their possible eight or ten days' absence from the building.

I recently had a conversation with the gentleman who is going to do the decorating and with another gentleman who has had to do with the decoration of that building. They both assured me that the time this building would be required would not exceed eight days, so the expense, as even figured by the Commissioner of Pensions, would be divided in three. No one has a higher regard for the Commissioner of Pensions than I. I do not know that we ever had a more admirable gentleman or a more capable Commissioner of Pensions than he, and I can understand his natural prejudice against turning the building over for this purpose. But this ball is a recognized feature of the inaugural season, and this House will not be justified in taking a position that will lead to its elimination. We hear mention of danger from fire. Everyone knows that if there is an absolutely fireproof building in the city of Washington it is the Pension building. As General Sheridan once said, "that is the regrettable feature as regards that building." I am given to understand that no bunting, no flags, nothing in the way of decorations will be placed in that building that has not been treated in such a way as to render it absolutely free from danger of taking fire. It could not be burned if a torch were applied to it. The building with the decorations will be absolutely fireproof.

Now, my friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] referred to the pledges that were made to this House four years ago with reference to the construction of a convention building. I heard those pledges made at that time. I thought then that the gentlemen who made them would never be able to make them good, because I remembered that of the 300,000 people in Washington 100,000 were colored people and 100,000 to 150,000 of them were clerks in the employ of the Government, or those who were dependent upon them in some way, leaving from 50,000 to 75,000 people who were recognized as citizens who might be expected to contribute to an enterprise of this character. Many, although residents, are not citizens—birds of passage—people who do not pay taxes upon anything here except a house that they may live in, if they have even gone that far. They are nonproducers. Should you circulate a petition asking for subscriptions for a great convention hall, this class of people would not sign it. Many of these splendid apartment houses, these splendid hotels, most of these buildings in the city of Washington that are attracting attention and indicate wealth and stability, independent of the government buildings, are not owned by the people of Washington. They are owned by people in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Pittsburg, and other cities.

Washington, in so far as the people who actually reside here are concerned, is not a wealthy city. But suppose Washington were a wealthy city, will you give me any reason why her citizens should bear the expense of this inauguration?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Because they get the profit of it.

Mr. LANDIS. They did not elect the next President; they did not vote for the next President. We elected him; we cast the votes for him. The Republicans and many Democrats. [Cries of "Oh, no!" on the Democratic side.] We voted for him; we bring him down here to be inaugurated, and yet you say to the citizens of Washington: "You pay for the expense of his inauguration."

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman will permit, I will venture the assertion that if any other city of the United States were to be given the privilege of having the inaugural ball held there and the inauguration, that they would be very willing to pay for the hall in which to hold it. Another question I would like to ask the gentleman: Does not the gentleman think that Cincinnati, Chicago, or Pittsburg would be wealthier if they could swap off 100,000 day laborers, who receive from $1.50 to $3 a day, for the same number of clerks and other officials of the Government, who are receiving from $900 to $2,500 a year?

Mr. LANDIS. No, I do not, because I say that the clerks spend their money——

Mr. WILLIAMS. They certainly make a better market than the same number of day laborers.

Mr. LANDIS. Those people work in the factories in those manufacturing cities. They build up the wealth of those great productive localities and remain there permanently building homes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The capital remains here permanently.

Mr. LANDIS. The people of Pittsburg and other cities are not on all fours with the people of Washington. I have always contended, and do now contend, that Congress should bear the expense incident to this inauguration.

It is a national function. It is not a function originated by the people of the District of Columbia, or for which they should be held responsible.

Mr. SABATH. Does the gentleman from Indiana contend that the ball is any portion of the inauguration?

Mr. LANDIS. No; nor is the parade.

Mr. SABATH. Or that it is absolutely necessary?

Mr. LANDIS. No; I do not; but this Congress shifts to the people of the District of Columbia the responsibility of the care of this inauguration. These people circulate a paper, and $100,000 expense money is guaranteed. These men do not want to go down into their pockets and pay the expense of this inauguration, and they should not be expected to do so.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not——

Mr. LANDIS. Wait a minute. They are willing to guarantee the expense, unless it can be made good in some other way.

Mr. GARRETT. And this is the way.

Mr. LANDIS. They have this inaugural ball and concerts in the Pension Office. They charge for tickets to the inaugural ball. They charge for tickets to the concerts in the Pension building, and in that way they raise the money to pay the expense incident to the inauguration.

Mr. SIMS. How much?

Mr. LANDIS. In other wards, a——

Mr. SABATH. Is not this ball a purely commercial venture?

Mr. LANDIS. In other words, they go to a great deal of trouble to raise the money to pay the expense of a national function that this Congress should shoulder, but which it has shifted upon them.

Mr. SIMS. How much does the inaugural ball net? Seventeen thousand dollars last year?

Mr. LANDIS. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. You want to make it cost the Government a hundred thousand dollars and take the risk of burning up those files, in order that the inaugural committee may make $17,000?

Mr. LANDIS. Oh, there is no danger of burning, the gentleman knows.

Mr. SIMS. Why not propose to pay them $17,000 and have done with it?

Mr. LANDIS. I would pay the entire expense if I had my way about it.

Mr. GARRETT. You can do it.

Mr. LANDIS. I would pay the entire expense.

Mr. SIMS. There is no expense. It is a profit. They make money out of it.

Mr. LANDIS. No man makes a dollar out of it. The gentlemen in charge donate their services. The ball forms a feature of this inauguration, just as much as the parade down Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. SIMS. The inaugural committee does it all.

Mr. LANDIS. There are many people who come here to attend the inaugural ball. I shall never forget the time I saw the gentleman from Tennessee, to the inspiring strains of a Strauss waltz, floating rhythmically down that great hall——

Mr. SIMS. If the gentleman thinks he ever saw me there doing anything of that kind, the gentleman was not in a condition to know what he did see. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANDIS. Does the gentleman deny it?

Mr. SIMS. I never was at any inaugural ball in my life, and I never expect to be, if they have 10,000 inaugurations and all Democrats.

Mr. LANDIS. Greatly to the loss and disadvantage of the ball. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman permit just a word?

Mr. LANDIS. Yes.

Mr. ADAIR. Are we not getting away from the real issue? I am opposed to this resolution, not because of the appropriation. I would be perfectly willing to appropriate any necessary sum of money to pay the expense of these inaugural ceremonies, no matter whether it was $100,000 or $200,000. I think we are going to inaugurate a great President, and I want him to be inaugurated in modern style. [Applause.] But what I object to is the delay caused by the use of this Pension building and these inaugural ceremonies. We care little for the money expense, but we do not want to deprive the old soldiers of this country of the pensions that they ought to have had many years ago.

Mr. LANDIS. I agree with the gentleman on that proposition; but we have shifted the responsibility of this expense to the people of the District of Columbia in that way, and by erecting seats along the Avenue and by selling privileges they raise the money to make themselves good. As long as we do not shoulder this financial burden I am willing to assist them by any means in my power in raising the money necessary to inaugurate the President whom we elect.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be read by paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further debate, the bill will be read under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to grant a permit to the committee on inaugural ceremonies for the use of the Pension building, in the city of Washington, on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on the 4th day of March, 1909, subject to such restrictions and regulations as the said Secretary may prescribe in respect of the period and manner of such use, including all necessary safeguards against fire and for the extinguishing of fire.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 1.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I think it is in order to perfect the section before a vote is taken upon a motion to strike out. I offer an amendment now to the section proposed to be struck out.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee move to strike out the first section or the enacting clause?

Mr. SIMS. The first section.

The CHAIRMAN. All except the enacting clause?

Mr. SIMS. All of the first section except the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 5, after the word "building," insert:
"Except such rooms therein as are used and occupied for the payment of pensions."

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, this provision is one that is proposed to be inserted to make the section clear. If the building is to be taken, these rooms, consisting of five on the southeast corner of the first floor of the building, should be excepted. I am assured by the Secretary of the Interior, who was here this afternoon, and by the Commissioner of Pensions and the pension agent, that it is absolutely essential that they should have these five rooms reserved for the payment of pensions, and that it could be done without destroying the use of the building for the ball. They can make some arrangement for making payments outside the windows, and payment can go on and the dance can go on.

Mr. SIMS. If the gentleman's motion does not interfere with the motion which I have made to strike out, I have no objection.

Mr. KEIFER. My motion takes precedence. We can perfect the section and then vote on striking it out afterwards. Your motion is to strike it all out, and my motion is to amend it before you vote on striking it out.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am opposed to the motion to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Ohio takes precedence.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I desire to say that I do not object to any amendment that will in any way aid in paying the pensions as suggested in the resolution, but I do object to striking out the whole section.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. SIMS) there were 62 ayes and 41 noes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. SMITH of Michigan and Mr. SIMS.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were 58 ayes and 37 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I raise the point, Mr. Chairman, that there is no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and three Members present, a quorum.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Did the Chair announce the result of the vote on the motion to strike out?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did announce that the ayes had it, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Let us read the next section.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS and others) there were 40 ayes and 51 noes.

So the motion was lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk continued and concluded the reading of the bill, the last section of which is as follows:

SEC. 6. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to permit the Western Union Telegraph Company and the Postal Telegraph Company to extend overhead wires into the Pension building, and to such points along the line of parade as shall be deemed by the chief marshal convenient for use in connection with the parade and other inaugural purposes, the said wires to be taken down within ten days after the conclusion of the ceremonies on the 4th day of March, 1909.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the last section by striking out, in line 25, page 6, and line 1, page 7, the words "into the Pension building and," so that it will read "to extend overhead wires to such points along the line of parade."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pages 6 and 7, strike out the words beginning on line 25, page 6, "into the Pension building and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. SMITH of Michigan) there were 47 ayes and 26 noes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I ask for tellers.

The question was taken, and tellers were refused.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois is agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I move that the committee do now rise and favorably report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. STERLING, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 6359) to change the name and jurisdiction of the inferior court of justice of the peace in the District of Columbia, and resolution (H. J. Res. 202) authorizing the granting of permits to the committee on inaugural ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on March 4, 1909, etc., and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bills as amended be passed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the resolution and all amendments to its final passage.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for additional land for target range at Fort Leavenworth, Kans. (H. Doc. No. 1309)—to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for care of insane Philippine soldiers (H. Doc. No. 1307)—to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Connecticut River between Hartford and Holyoke (H. Doc. No. 1311)—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of St. Lucia Inlet, Florida (H. Doc. No. 1312)—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting abstracts of proposals received during the year ended June 30, 1908, for materials and labor in connection with works under the Engineer Department (H. Doc. No. 1314)—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for construction of a new hospital at Fort H. G. Wright, N. Y. (H. Doc. No. 1308)—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a list of vessels requiring repairs of an estimated cost exceeding the limit of law (H. Doc. No. 1306)—to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an estimate of appropriation for collecting the revenue from customs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910 (H. Doc. No. 1313)—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to enable Indians in certain cases to relinquish their allotments (H. Doc. No. 1304)—to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting draft of proposed legislation to set aside land in San Carlos Indian Reservation, Ariz., containing tufa stone (H. Doc. No. 1305)—to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation on the subject of unsurveyed lands in Oklahoma belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes (H. Doc. No. 1310)—to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for completion of the bridge at Fort Snelling, Minn. (H. Doc. No. 1303)—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. CAULFIELD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4535) to amend section 714 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the resignation of judges of the courts of the United States, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1833), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 25806) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1832), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23595) granting an increase of pension to John B. Peters—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 23684) granting an increase of pension to Patrick A. Galvin—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 25710) granting an increase of pension to Andrew McClory—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 25728) granting an increase of pension to Arthur B. Carr—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 17377) granting a pension to Sarah Goff Beach—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 25316) granting an increase of pension to Lucretia Ritchhart—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 25317) granting an increase of pension to Denton P. Sheeks—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 24326) for the relief of owners of outstanding and unsatisfied military bounty-land warrants heretofore issued by the United States, and all outstanding and unsatisfied certificates of location heretofore issued by the United States under the closing part of section 3 of the act of June 2, 1858 (11 Stat., p. 294)—Committee on War Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

A bill (H. R. 3690) granting a pension to George A. De Voe—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 25381) granting an increase of pension to William Briney—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 25424) granting an increase of pension to William J. Smalling—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 24925) granting an increase of pension to James F. Kilburn—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. JENKINS: A bill (H. R. 25807) to authorize the maintenance of actions for negligence causing death in maritime causes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25808) to permit the owners of certain vessels and the owners or underwriters of cargoes laden thereon to sue the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FULTON: A bill (H. R. 25809) to provide free homes for settlers in Oklahoma—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT: A bill (H. R. 25810) limiting the expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior of the reclamation fund, and other matters relating to the Reclamation Service—to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25811) providing that hereafter no national forest shall be created nor additions made to one heretofore created within the limits of the State of California except by act of Congress—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 25812) to make the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln a legal holiday in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KEIFER: A bill (H. R. 25813) to authorize the appointment of a board of engineers to make a preliminary location, survey, and plans for a ship canal connecting the waters of Lake Erie and the Ohio River on the line of the Miami and Erie Canal from Toledo to Cincinnati, Ohio, and to estimate the cost thereof—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HULL of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 25814) authorizing the President to appoint a professor of mathematics in the navy, etc.—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. THISTLEWOOD: A bill (H. R. 25815) making appropriation for the protection of the banks of the Mississippi River at Cairo, Ill., and immediate vicinity—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. GORDON: A bill (H. R. 25816) requiring railroads and other common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to make prompt acknowledgment and adjustment of claims for overcharge on freight and for loss and injury to same—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MUDD: A bill (H. R. 25817) to amend an act authorizing the Washington, Spa Springs and Gretta Railroad Company of Maryland to enter the District of Columbia, approved February 18, 1907—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MAYNARD: A bill (H. R. 25818) providing for the survey and examination of the Nansemond River in Virginia, with a view to widening and straightening the channel and increasing the depth thereof to 25 feet—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. McCALL: A bill (H. R. 25819) providing for the appointment of probation officers and for the suspension of sentence in United States courts—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina: A bill (H. R. 25820) to survey Thoroughfare Bay, Carteret County, N. C., or the waters of eastern Carteret County known as "The Thoroughfare"—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HOWELL of Utah: A bill (H. R. 25821) to limit the jurisdiction of certain judges appointed under the authority of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McLAIN: A bill (H. R. 25822) for the protection of Marengo Bend, near Natchez, Miss.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. LAFEAN: A bill (H. R. 25823) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the time for the completion of the Valdez, Marshall Pass and Northern Railroad, and for other purposes," approved February 21, 1907—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. HOWELL of New Jersey: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 227) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver a condemned cannon to the Grand Army of the Republic—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: A bill (H. R. 25806) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors—to the Private Calendar.

By Mr. ANDREWS: A bill (H. R. 25824) granting a pension to Edward Johnson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARCLAY: A bill (H. R. 25825) granting an increase of pension to Abram V. Miller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BENNETT of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 25826) granting an increase of pension to James M. Howe—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25827) granting an increase of pension to Levie H. Colburn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25828) granting an increase of pension to Daniel Dalton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25829) granting an increase of pension to Peter Stamm—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25830) granting an increase of pension to Richard Swearingin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25831) granting an increase of pension to John Holliday—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25832) granting an increase of pension to John Gillon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25833) granting an increase of pension to George Hedge—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25834) granting an increase of pension to David M. Ferguson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25835) granting an increase of pension to Montville Cooksey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25836) granting an increase of pension to William Thompson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25837) granting an increase of pension to William M. Barber—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25838) granting an increase of pension to William J. Collier—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25839) granting an increase of pension to Cad Ingram—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25840) granting an increase of pension to Harvey W. Cartee—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25841) granting an increase of pension to Isaac N. Slade—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25842) granting a pension to Mary M. Hurd—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25843) granting a pension to Martha A. Ham—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25844) granting a pension to Martha J. Warner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25845) granting a pension to Louisa Borders—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25846) granting a pension to George L. Goodpaster—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25847) granting a pension to Stephen McKinney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25848) granting a pension to Trave W. Myers—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BROUSSARD: A bill (H. R. 25849) for the relief of the heirs of James Billiu—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BROWNLOW: A bill (H. R. 25850) granting a pension to James Collins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURLESON: A bill (H. R. 25851) for the relief of Carl G. and John Palm—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CALDWELL: A bill (H. R. 25852) granting an increase of pension to Mary W. Baker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25853) to remove the charge of desertion now standing on the records against John F. Harbaugh—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CAMPBELL: A bill (H. R. 25854) granting an increase of pension to James E. Noble—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHAPMAN: A bill (H. R. 25855) granting an increase of pension to David Strickland—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 25856) granting a pension to Lucinda M. Peck—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25857) granting an increase of pension to John Beidelman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DAVIS: A bill (H. R. 25858) granting an increase of pension to William G. Le Duc—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DAWSON: A bill (H. R. 25859) granting an increase of pension to Levi Runyan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DENVER: A bill (H. R. 25860) granting an increase of pension to John Hiett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DOUGLAS: A bill (H. R. 25861) granting an increase of pension to George W. Brittenham—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DRISCOLL: A bill (H. R. 25862) granting a pension to Liston H. Pearce—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25863) granting a pension to Lucy A. Emerson—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25864) granting a pension to Mary J. Kitter—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25865) granting an increase of pension to Martin V. B. Northrop—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25866) granting an increase of pension to Edward Beebe—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25867) granting an increase of pension to Michael Campion—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DWIGHT: A bill (H. R. 25868) granting a pension to Elizabeth M. Seacord—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25869) granting an increase of pension to Seth Barrows—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FAIRCHILD: A bill (H. R. 25870) to correct the military record of Cleveland W. Goff—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FULTON: A bill (H. R. 25871) granting an increase of pension to Zachariah T. Underwood—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GILHAMS: A bill (H. R. 25872) granting an increase of pension to David S. Hurst—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25873) granting an increase of pension to Uriah Clark—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GREENE: A bill (H. R. 25874) granting a pension to Henry Malone—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25875) granting a pension to Thomas Gurnett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25876) granting a pension to Elizabeth Brownell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25877) granting a pension to George C. Pratt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25878) granting a pension to Jacob S. Johnson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25879) granting a pension to John Marshall—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GUERNSEY: A bill (H. R. 25880) granting a pension to Martha J. Gordon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HALE: A bill (H. R. 25881) granting a pension to Frank C. Griffith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25882) granting an increase of pension to Richard P. Chandler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAYES: A bill (H. R. 25883) granting an increase of pension to Theodore Messinger—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HINSHAW: A bill (H. R. 25884) granting an increase of pension to Milton B. Bishop—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25885) granting an increase of pension to William S. Shuster—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25886) granting an increase of pension to John Driskell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25887) granting an increase of pension to John L. Lashells—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25888) granting an increase of pension to David Dowd—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25889) granting an increase of pension to Byron C. Elms—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25890) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Miller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25891) granting an increase of pension to Lyman D. Stilson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25892) granting an increase of pension to William McKenney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25893) granting a pension to Lucy B. Miller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25894) to correct the military record of William Walther—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HOWELL of Utah: A bill (H. R. 25895) granting an increase of pension to Joseph M. Westwood—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULL of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 25896) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Norris—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25897) to remove the charge of desertion standing against Elijah Randolph—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25898) directing the Secretary of the Interior to pay to Newton Hodge his pension, without deducting same from his liability to the Government—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of Washington: A bill (H. R. 25899) granting an increase of pension to Charles T. Shepard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25900) granting an increase of pension to Albert H. Jenkins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 25901) granting an increase of pension to David Bash—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KNAPP: A bill (H. R. 25902) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Appenzeller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LANING: A bill (H. R. 25903) granting a pension to Maggie Osborn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25904) granting a pension to George M. Patterson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25905) granting an increase of pension to Harvey Johnson—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25906) granting an increase of pension to George C. Jeffries—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEGARE: A bill (H. R. 25907) for the relief of Clarendon County, State of South Carolina—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LONGWORTH: A bill (H. R. 25908) granting a pension to Sarah E. Wiggins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LOVERING: A bill (H. R. 25909) granting an increase of pension to John H. Walker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MADDEN: A bill (H. R. 25910) granting an increase of pension to Henry Harrison Pond—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NORRIS: A bill (H. R. 25911) granting an increase of pension to Lewis C. Olson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NYE: A bill (H. R. 25912) granting a pension to Margaret Fowler Merritt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PRATT: A bill (H. R. 25913) granting an increase of pension to Jessie G. Hoppock—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25914) granting an increase of pension to William F. Terry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RAUCH: A bill (H. R. 25915) granting an increase of pension to James R. Bruner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25916) granting an increase of pension to Isaac Smithson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25917) granting an increase of pension to Burgess Ray—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25918) granting an increase of pension to John Crawford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RHINOCK: A bill (H. R. 25919) granting a pension to William Dickson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25920) granting an increase of pension to Winfred Munson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBINSON: A bill (H. R. 25921) granting an increase of pension to Mary J. Utter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25922) granting an increase of pension to Albert McConnell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25923) for the relief of the heirs of J. A. Patillo—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 25924) for the relief of James W. Fisher—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25925) granting a pension to Hiram Downing—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHEPPARD: A bill (H. R. 25926) for the relief of John H. Claiborne—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 25927) granting an increase of pension to William Francis Ball—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25928) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Tifft—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SNAPP: A bill (H. R. 25929) granting a pension to Sarah Jane Schafer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SPERRY: A bill (H. R. 25930) granting an increase of pension to Mathew Sullivan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEENERSON: A bill (H. R. 25931) for the relief of Hugh Thompson—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25932) for the relief of Sylvester Peterson—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25933) for the relief of R. J. Montague—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. STURGISS: A bill (H. R. 25934) granting an increase of pension to Isaac Gour—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25935) granting an increase of pension to George W. McVicker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25936) granting an increase of pension to Margaret E. Pierce—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25937) granting an increase of pension to Edward D. Madden—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25938) granting a pension to John A. McCauley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SULLOWAY: A bill (H. R. 25939) granting an increase of pension to Alphonso B. Rayner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25940) granting an increase of pension to William B. Underhill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SWASEY: A bill (H. R. 25941) granting a pension to Sarah E. Averill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25942) granting an increase of pension to Ansel G. Marston—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina: A bill (H. R. 25943) for the relief of the heirs of William Swindell—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25944) for the relief of the heirs of John B. Wolf, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25945) for the relief of the estate of Seth Waters—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. THOMAS of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 25946) granting an increase of pension to Henry H. Kellogg—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25947) granting an increase of pension to Thomas T. Miller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TOU VELLE: A bill (H. R. 25948) granting a pension to Arvilla Boop—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25949) granting a pension to Manuel P. Grundisch—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. VREELAND: A bill (H. R. 25950) granting an increase of pension to Wallace M. Bennett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHEELER: A bill (H. R. 25951) granting an increase of pension to Jonas L. Mull—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 25952) to correct the military record of Hiram B. Willson—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BENNET of New York: A bill (H. R. 25953) granting an increase of pension to Guy Mazza—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CAPRON: A bill (H. R. 25954) granting an increase of pension to Henry Bucklin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25955) granting an increase of pension to Henry J. Le Valley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25956) granting an increase of pension to James Buchanan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25957) granting an increase of pension to John P. Case—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DE ARMOND: A bill (H. R. 25958) granting an increase of pension to William Miller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DIEKEMA: A bill (H. R. 25959) granting an increase of pension to Harvey Hilton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25960) granting an increase of pension to Edwin R. Hunt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25961) granting a pension to Alexander L. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HALE: A bill (H. R. 25962) granting an increase of pension to Albert Varnell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25963) granting an increase of pension to Robert Godfrey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULL of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 25964) granting an increase of pension to William L. Davis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KIPP: A bill (H. R. 25965) granting an increase of pension to James Corby—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25966) granting an increase of pension to Emmet Flint—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25967) granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Storrs—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25968) granting an increase of pension to John W. Furgison—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25969) granting an increase of pension to Daniel Younker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25970) granting an increase of pension to Locern W. Kelley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25971) granting an increase of pension to Abraham Kizer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25972) granting an increase of pension to Martin V. Billings—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25973) granting an increase of pension to George Fetzer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25974) granting a pension to Charles R. Green—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 25975) granting an increase of pension to James Arnold—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25976) granting an increase of pension to Milton Cooper—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEGARE: A bill (H. R. 25977) for the relief of Mrs. Julia Borner, widow of Fred. C. Borner, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25978) for the relief of John P. Daly and others, heirs at law of Benjamin Chaplin, sr., deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 25979) granting a pension to Ann Elizabeth Davis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MAYNARD: A bill (H. R. 25980) for the relief of Sarah J. Fowler—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. VREELAND: Resolution (H. Res. 482) to pay to Clarence M. Hooker and others certain sum of money—to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ANSBERRY: Petition of Farmers' Institute of Williams County, Ohio, for a parcels-post law and postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Paper to accompany bill for relief of John C. Thomas—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Thanesville Grange, No. 1443, favoring bill (S. 5122) providing for a system of parcel delivery on rural mail routes, and bill (S. 6484) for postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BEALL of Texas: Petition from United States Navy recruiting station, for legislation retiring petty officers and enlisted men of the United States Navy after twenty-five years of actual service—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. BEDE: Petition of citizens of Big Fork and Duluth, Minn., favoring parcels-post and postal savings banks laws—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BENNET of New York: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Guy Mazza—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRADLEY: Petitions of I. A. Hendricks, of Rye; A. W. Burton, of Tappan; and John H. Wood, of Ossining, all in the State of New York, favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BROUSSARD: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Ferdinand Venissat—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BURKE: Petition of Federation of Jewish Organizations, for appointment of a chaplain in the army and navy for the well-being and comfort of Jewish soldiers—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of Merchants' Association of New York, for legislation to encourage the return of railway business to normal conditions—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of board of public charities of Philadelphia, favoring appropriation of $50,000 to defray expenses of the International Prison Congress—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, petition of W. S. Buvinger, favoring legislation permitting illustration of postage stamps for educational purposes—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of Thomas L. Montgomery, Pennsylvania state librarian, against taking public library books from the free list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Armstrong Cork Company, of Pittsburg, Pa., favoring H. R. 24137, to purchase the Oldroyd collection of relics of Lincoln—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Della R. Rowe—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER: Petition of C. W. Cowtay, favoring H. R. 19250, providing for retirement of civil-war volunteer officers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Samuel E. Larsen, favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CAPRON: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Henry J. Le Valley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Rhode Island State Grange, favoring H. R. 21318, 18204, etc., for protection against insecticides and fungicides and for benefit of agricultural schools—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also paper to accompany bill for relief of James Buchanan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Hill Grange, No. 27, Patrons of Husbandry, and Arthur G. Kennedy and others, favoring parcels-post and savings banks laws—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: Petition of residents of Racine County, Wis., against passage of Senate bill 3940—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of Du Lac Grange, of Milton, Wis., favoring parcels-post and postal savings banks laws—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DAVENPORT: Paper to accompany bill for relief of heirs of Anna Irons (H. R. 17158)—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DAWSON: Petition of Commercial Club of Council Bluffs, Iowa, favoring legislation to provide for expenses of railway mail clerks while on their runs—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of Cheyenne Branch of Railway Postal Clerks, against H. R. 21261 (retirement plan for superannuated employees)—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DRAPER: Petition of New York Board of Trade and Transportation, against legislation inimical to railway interests—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DUREY: Petition of business men of Johnstown, N. Y., against parcels post on rural free-delivery routes and for postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: Petition of American Prison Association of Richmond, Va., for legislation to provide for preliminary work of International Prison Congress—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, petition of Federation of Jewish Organizations, favoring appointment of chaplains in army and navy for the religious comfort of Jewish citizens enlisted therein—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, favoring the Littlefield bill, designed to protect prohibition territory against liquor traffic through interstate commerce—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Cheyenne Branch of Railway Postal Clerks, against retirement plan for superannuated employees in the classified service (H. R. 21261) unless the plan be made wholly voluntary—to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

Also, petition of merchants of New York, for enactment of legislation only imperatively demanded to regulate railroads—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of New York Public Library, against taking public library books off the free list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FOCHT: Petition of citizens of Altenwald, Franklin County, Pa., favoring parcels-post and postal savings banks laws—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Michael Nave—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FULLER: Petition of Edward P. North, for repeal of duties on goods to and from the Philippines and other islands when carried in American vessels—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of National Negro Fair Association, of Mobile, for an appropriation to aid National Negro Exposition near city of Mobile—to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

By Mr. FULTON: Petition of citizens of Oklahoma, against Johnston Sunday bill (S. 3940)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of citizens of Oklahoma, favoring legislation allowing homesteaders in Beaver, Texas, and Cimarron counties to make final proof on their homesteads after one year's bona fide residence without payment of $200 now required—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. GRAHAM: Petition of the Merchants' Association of New York, for legislation to encourage return of railway business to normal conditions—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Federation of Jewish Organizations, for appointment of a chaplain in the army and navy for promotion of comfort and well-being of Jewish soldiers and sailors—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GREENE: Petition of J. F. Adams and others, of West Tisbury, Mass., favoring a parcels post and postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GRONNA: Petition of citizens of Nelson County, N. Dak., against passage of Senate bill 3940—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HALE: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Richard P. Chandler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan: Petitions of business men of Buchanan, Three Oaks, Dowagiac, and Niles, Mich., against parcels-post and postal savings banks laws—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petitions of citizens of Sturgis, Mich., and of Berrien and Cass counties, Mich., against passage of Senate bill 3940—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HAMMOND: Petition of J. J. Durve & Son and others, against parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HAYES: Petition of state board of health of California and the city board of health of San Francisco, asking for the continuation of the antiplague measures in San Francisco—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Theodore Messinger—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petitions of J. M. McIntosh and 143 citizens of Bakersfield, Cal.; W. E. Anderson and 38 citizens of Wendall, N. C.; Adam Cramer and 35 citizens of Cockeysville, Md.; J. Riley Rogers and 47 citizens of Byfield, Mass.; James Rogers and 123 citizens of Bakersfield, Cal.; and Lou Smith and 95 citizens of San Jose, Cal., favoring an effective Asiatic exclusion law against all Asiatics save merchants, students, and travelers—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. HINSHAW: Papers to accompany bills for relief of Joseph T. Roller (H. R. 23579), Joseph Miller, and Milton B. Bishop—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOUSTON: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Eveline B. Weakley—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HOWELL of Utah: Petitions of citizens of Salt Lake City and Eureka, Utah, against reduction of tariff on lead and lead ores—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HUFF: Petition of Merchants' Association of New York, against unjust censure of railroad management—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey: Petition of citizens of New Jersey, for parcels-post and postal savings banks laws—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. JOHNSON: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Matt C. Mayes—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LANING: Petition of citizens of Mansfield, Ohio, against passage of Senate bill 3940—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. LINDBERGH: Petitions of citizens of Alexandria, Minn., and of Stevens and Wadena counties, Minn., against passage of Senate bill 3940—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. LONGWORTH: Petition of citizens of Cincinnati, Ohio, for an effective exclusion law against all Asiatics save merchants, students, and travelers—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. McCALL: Petition of the American Peace Society, against further appropriation for increase of the navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. MADISON: Petition of citizens of Gray County, Kans., against passage of Senate bill 3940—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Edmund J. Davis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBERTS: Petition of postal clerks, for increase of salaries of railway postal clerks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. ROBINSON: Papers to accompany bill granting an increase of pension to Stephen P. Moore (H. R. 16249), and papers to accompany bill granting a pension to R. B. Rankin (H. R. 23704)—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RHINOCK: Papers to accompany bills for relief of James W. Mullins (H. R. 11186) and Coleman Reynolds—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PADGETT: Papers to accompany bills for the relief of William C. Hodge, James Johnston, Nancy E. Pullen, and Andrew B. Phillips—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. POLLARD: Petition of citizens of Collegeview, Nebr., against passage of Senate bill 3940 (Johnston Sunday law)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. PRATT: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Jessie G. Hoppock—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PRAY: Petition of Basin Miners' Union, Western Federation of Miners, of Basin, Mont., for legislation providing investigation of the Treadwell Mining Company, of Alaska—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Also, petition of J. J. Coffee, chairman of Montana Pharmaceutical Association and secretary of state board of pharmacy, against H. R. 21982, to amend food and drug act—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. STEENERSON: Petition of Bottlers' Association, requesting the retention of duties on soda, ginger ale, and other carbureted beverages—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STURGISS: Petition of the C. A. Miller Grocery Company, of Martinsburg, W. Va., favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SWASEY: Petition of citizens of North Jay, Me., favoring a parcels-post and postal savings banks laws—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina: Papers to accompany bills for relief of William Swindell, estate of Seth Waters, and heirs of John B. Wolf—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. VREELAND: Petition for parcels-post and postal savings banks laws—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 12, 1909.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Edward Everett Hale.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. KEAN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

U. S. TUG APACHE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, requesting that the name of the U. S. tug Apache be added to the list formerly submitted of vessels requiring general overhauling to the extent of $200,000 or more (H. Doc. No. 1306), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

ELECTORAL VOTE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, authenticated copies of the final ascertainment of electors for President and Vice-President in the States of Pennsylvania and Nevada, which, with the accompanying papers, were ordered to be filed.

GEORGETOWN BARGE, DOCK, ELEVATOR AND RAILWAY COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator and Railway Company for the fiscal year ending December 31, 1908 (S. Doc. No. 650), which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16954) to provide for the Thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CRUMPACKER, Mr. BURLEIGH, and Mr. HAY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. 653) to authorize commissions to issue in the cases of officers in the army retired with increased rank, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HULL of Iowa, Mr. CAPRON, and Mr. HAY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 6418) authorizing the sale of land at the head of Cordova Bay, in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MONDELL, Mr. VOLSTEAD, and Mr. GAINES of Tennessee managers at the conference on the part of the House.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the Merchants' Association of New York, praying for the limiting of proposed new legislation with respect to new railroads to such measures as have been carefully investigated and studied, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. FRYE presented the petition of F. W. Hitchcock and sundry other citizens of the State of Maine, praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. PLATT presented the memorial of B. F. Witback, of New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against the enactment of any legislation inimical to the railroad interests of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of Local Grange No. 480, of Dewittville; of Local Grange No. 956, of Ellenville; and of Bristol Valley Grange No. 109, of Bristol Center, all Patrons of Husbandry, in the State of New York, praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BURROWS presented petitions of Local Grange No. 296, of Trowbridge; of Local Grange No. 459, of De Witt; and of Local Grange of Ypsilanti, all Patrons of Husbandry, in the State of Michigan, praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DILLINGHAM presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Vermont, praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SCOTT presented the petition of D. Mayer, of Charleston, W. Va., praying for the enactment of legislation to create a volunteer retired list in the War and Navy Departments for the surviving officers of the civil war, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HEYBURN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Canyon County, Idaho, praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of Miners' Union No. 11, United Mine Workers of America, of Genesee, Idaho, praying that an investigation be made into the conditions of mines operated by the Treadwell Mining Company on Douglas Island, Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. DICK presented petitions of Local Grange No. 499, of Bryan; of Local Grange No. 644, of Bryan, and of Local Grange No. 1491, of Milford, all Patrons of Husbandry; and of the Farmers' Institute, of Barnesville, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CURTIS presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HOPKINS presented a memorial of the Trades and Labor Assembly of Belleville, Ill., remonstrating against certain decisions of the judiciary against organized labor, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HALE presented petitions of Local Grange of Fryeburg; of Crooked River Grange, No. 32, of Harrison; of West Brook Grange, of Highland Lake; of Local Grange No. 10, of North Jay; of Local Grange No. 214, of Pittston, all Patrons of Husbandry; and of sundry citizens of Palermo, all in the State of Maine, praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MCENERY presented a petition of sundry citizens of New Orleans, La., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to the surviving members of the United States Military Telegraph Corps who served in the civil war, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented a petition of sundry members of the bar of Milwaukee, Racine, Kenosha, Sheboygan, Fond du Lac, Green Bay, Manitowoc, Neenah, Eau Claire, Grand Rapids, Delavan, and Beaver Dam, all in the State of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for an increase in the salaries of district and circuit court judges, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the Milwaukee Retail Grocers' Association, of Milwaukee, Wis., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "parcels-post bill," which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of legislation to investigate and develop methods of treatment of tuberculosis, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Adams and Juneau counties, Wis., praying that an appropriation of $20,000 be made for the construction of an iron bridge across the Wisconsin River, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Racine County, Wis., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit Sunday banking in post-offices in the handling of money orders and registered letters and also against the enactment of legislation requiring certain places of business in the District of Columbia to be closed on Sunday, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of Rushford Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Ono, Wis., praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Janesville, Wis., praynig for the enactment of legislation to create a volunteer retired list in the War and Navy Departments for the surviving officers who served in the civil war, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 23849) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 728) thereon.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 23850) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 729) thereon.

Mr. PILES, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 23866) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge between Fort Snelling Reservation and St. Paul, Minn.," approved March 17, 1906, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7971) for the relief of Samuel W. Campbell, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 731) thereon.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7631) to grant an honorable discharge from the navy to John McKinnon, alias John Mack, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 734) thereon.

Mr. FULTON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4033) to satisfy certain claims against the Government arising under the Navy Department, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 733) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4984) for the relief of James D. Elliott, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 732) thereon.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 24344) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 730) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 8358) providing for the free transportation of all mail matter sent by Mrs. Frances F. Cleveland, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also introduced a bill (S. 8359) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the time for the completion of the Valdez, Marshall Pass and Northern Railroad, and for other purposes," approved February 21, 1907, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also introduced a bill (S. 8360) for the relief of the executor of the estate of William Boyle, deceased, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8361) granting an increase of pension to John Mack;

A bill (S. 8362) granting an increase of pension to William H. Fetter; and

A bill (S. 8363) granting a pension to Maggie Wickersham.

Mr. PENROSE introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8364) granting an increase of pension to George M. Jordan; and

A bill (S. 8365) granting an increase of pension to Patrick Ambrose.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming introduced a bill (S. 8366) to amend section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DICK introduced a bill (S. 8367) granting an increase of pension to Margaret W. Goodwin, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 8368) to regulate the retirement of certain veterans of the civil war, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HEYBURN introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8369) granting an increase of pension to James K. Watts;

A bill (S. 8370) granting an increase of pension to John Todd;

A bill (S. 8371) granting an increase of pension to Leander McGrew;

A bill (S. 8372) granting an increase of pension to Lafayette Platt;

A bill (S. 8373) granting an increase of pension to Simon Jenson;

A bill (S. 8374) granting an increase of pension to Michael Savage; and

A bill (S. 8375) granting an increase of pension to James R. Vassar.

Mr. HEYBURN introduced a bill (S. 8376) providing for the reappraisement of unsold lots in town sites on reclamation projects, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

Mr. FRYE introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8377) granting a pension to Emma C. Orr; and

A bill (S. 8378) granting a pension to James Welch (with the accompanying papers).

Mr. FULTON introduced a bill (S. 8379) for the relief of the owners of the British steamship Maroa, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MONEY introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 8380) for the relief of the heirs of B. Strong;

A bill (S. 8381) for the relief of the heirs of M. L. Strong; and

A bill (S. 8382) for the relief of the heirs of E. Strong.

Mr. TAYLOR introduced a bill (S. 8383) for the relief of Louis L. Coleman, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8384) granting an increase of pension to Jesse M. Moore;

A bill (S. 8385) granting an increase of pension to Winslow Hart Reaves;

A bill (S. 8386) granting a pension to Darius Gregg;

A bill (S. 8387) granting a pension to William Manly (with the accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 8388) granting an increase of pension to Francis M. Brannon.

Mr. BRIGGS introduced a bill (S. 8389) appropriating $10,000 to aid in the erection of a monument in memory of the late President James A. Garfield at Long Branch, N. J., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. BEVERIDGE introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8390) granting an increase of pension to John Martin;

A bill (S. 8391) granting an increase of pension to Robert I. Patterson; and

A bill (S. 8392) granting an increase of pension to Henry M. Krouse.

Mr. BEVERIDGE introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8393) granting an increase of pension to Samuel J. Taylor; and

A bill (S. 8394) granting a pension to Jane M. Harris.

Mr. LODGE introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (S. 8395) incorporating the National Institute of Arts and Letters; and

A bill (S. 8396) incorporating the National Academy of Arts and Letters.

Mr. LODGE introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles:

A bill (S. 8397) to authorize the maintenance of actions for negligence causing death in maritime causes;

A bill (S. 8398) to permit the owners of certain vessels, and the owners or underwriters of cargoes laden thereon, to sue the United States; and

A bill (S. 8399) providing for liens on vessels for repairs, supplies, or other necessaries.

Mr. LODGE. I am not sure whether those bills should go to the Judiciary Committee or the Committee on Commerce. They propose changes in the law in regard to certain actions, but they are all actions to be taken in an admiralty court. Therefore I suppose the bills will properly go to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bills will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 8400) granting an increase of pension to Don F. Willis, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WETMORE introduced a bill (S. 8401) granting an increase of pension to William F. Chappell, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan introduced a bill (S. 8402) granting an increase of pension to Napoleon B. Bowker, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DEPEW introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8403) granting a pension to Augusta Hendricks; and

A bill (S. 8404) granting an increase of pension to Barbara Downer.

Mr. JOHNSTON introduced a bill (S. 8405) for the relief of the estate of Mrs. Susan Augusta Jones Wilson, deceased, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOPKINS introduced a bill (S. 8406) granting an increase of pension to Eugene H. Harding, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 8407) to amend an act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

Mr. BORAH introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8408) granting an increase of pension to Recorder M. Mudgett;

A bill (S. 8409) granting an increase of pension to David Sutherland;

A bill (S. 8410) granting an increase of pension to Amos W. Melugin; and

A bill (S. 8411) granting an increase of pension to Volney H. Maxwell.

Mr. CURTIS introduced a bill (S. 8412) granting an increase of pension to Hubbard D. Carr, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 8413) for the relief of Cumberlain Smith, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DOLLIVER introduced a bill (S. 8414) granting a pension to Susan C. Carpenter, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8415) granting a pension to William J. Ludley; and

A bill (S. 8416) granting an increase of pension to Alvin Eck.

Mr. BEVERIDGE introduced a bill (S. 8417) granting a pension to George W. Clain, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced the following bills which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8418) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Welker; and

A bill (S. 8419) granting an increase of pension to Theodore Pridemore.

Mr. McENERY introduced a bill (S. 8420) granting an increase of pension to Kate B. Jarvis, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE introduced a bill (S. 8421) granting an increase of pension to Henry F. Houser, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. KNOX submitted an amendment authorizing the President to appoint by and with the consent of the Senate an Under Secretary of State, and also a Fourth Assistant Secretary of State, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LONG submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $90,000 to increase the limit of cost for an addition to the public building at Kansas City, Kans., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. CRANE (for Mr. BULKELEY) submitted three amendments intended to be proposed to the omnibus claims bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

IMPERIAL VALLEY OR SALTON SINK REGION.

On motion of Mr. FLINT it was:

Ordered, That Senate Document No. 212, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, "Imperial Valley or Salton Sink Region," be reprinted.

IMPROVEMENT OF HARBOR AT PORT SANILAC, MICH.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. C. Res. 66), which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary survey to be made of the harbor at Port Sanilac, Sanilac County, Mich., with a view to deepening the same to a depth of 20 feet, and to submit a plan and estimate for such improvement.

IMPROVEMENT OF HARBOR AT FORESTER, MICH.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. C. Res. 67), which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary survey to be made of the harbor at Forester, Mich., with a view to deepening the same to a depth of 20 feet, and to submit a plan and estimate for such improvement.

PAYMENTS FROM EMERGENCY FUND.

Mr. FORAKER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 247), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate in detail, item by item, all payments and expenditures and the purposes of the same, made out of the appropriation of $3,000,000, made in the deficiency act of March 3, 1899 (30 S. L., p. 1223), to be expended at the discretion of the President for emergency fund to meet contingencies constantly arising, which appropriation is in the following language:

"For emergency fund to meet unforeseen contingencies constantly arising, to be expended at the discretion of the President, $3,000,000."

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

The Senate having under consideration the bill (S. 5729) providing for the reenlistment of the soldiers of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, discharged without honor, Mr. FORAKER said: Mr. President, in the first Brownsville message, sent to the Senate by the President December 19, 1906, when there was nothing before him except only the testimony collected by Major Blocksom and some private letters and official reports, he stated that, according to this testimony, it was shown that certain members of the battalion were guilty of the "murderous conduct of shooting up the town of Brownsville," and that many of the other members of these companies were guilty of a "conspiracy of silence" to save the criminals from justice.

Further commenting on this testimony, he said:

Major Blocksom's report is most careful, is based upon the testimony of scores of eyewitnesses—testimony which conflicted only in non-essentials and which established the essential facts beyond chance of successful contradiction.

He then sets forth the facts as established by Major Blocksom's investigation, and states that they "have not been and, in my judgment, can not be successfully controverted."

He further states in this same message:

As to the noncommissioned officers and enlisted men, there can be no doubt whatever that many were necessarily privy, after if not before the attack, to the conduct of those who took actual part in this murderous riot. I refer to Major Blocksom's report for proof of the fact that certainly some and probably all of the noncommissioned officers in charge of quarters who were responsible for the gun racks and had keys thereto in their personal possession knew what men were engaged in the attack.

* * * * * * *

The effort to confute this testimony so far has consisted in the assertion or implication that the townspeople shot one another in order to discredit the soldiers—an absurdity too gross to need discussion and unsupported by a shred of evidence. There is no question as to the murder and the attempted murders; there is no question that some of the soldiers were guilty thereof; there is no question that many of their comrades, privy to the deed, have combined to shelter the criminals from justice.

Further along in his message, he says:

In short, the evidence proves conclusively that a number of the soldiers engaged in a deliberate and concerted attack, etc. * * * It (the attack) has been supplemented by another, only less black, in the shape of a successful conspiracy of silence for the purpose of shielding those who took part in the original conspiracy of murder.

In a later paragraph of this same message he says:

Yet some of the noncommissioned officers and many of the men of the three companies in question have banded together in a conspiracy to protect the assassins and would-be assassins who have disgraced their uniform by the conduct above related. Many of these noncommissioned officers and men must have known, and all of them may have known, circumstances which would have led to the conviction of those engaged in the murderous assault. They have stolidly and as one man broken their oaths of enlistment and refused to help discover the criminals.

All those declarations and repetitions of declarations were made in one message.

Anyone reading this message and not examining for himself the testimony upon which these statements are based would naturally conclude that the facts stated had been established by clear and overwhelming evidence, especially so if he had no previous knowledge of the President.

To show that this testimony upon which the President made these unqualified statements was utterly unreliable and that it failed absolutely to establish the facts so unqualifiedly set forth by him in his message, it was not necessary to do more than analyze it in the presence of the Senate.

By that analysis it was shown that, instead of "scores of eyewitnesses" to the shooting, there were only eight, all told, who even claimed to be eyewitnesses to any of the facts, and their testimony was so indefinite and uncertain as to be entirely insufficient to warrant the serious and unqualified conclusions that were drawn therefrom.

In recognition of the manifest weakness and insufficiency of this testimony when thus pointed out, the President directed Mr. Purdy, an assistant to the Attorney-General, and Major Blocksom to return to Brownsville and retake, ex parte, in affidavit form, without any notice whatever to the soldiers and without any representative of the soldiers present, the testimony that had been submitted and to gather such additional testimony as it might be possible to secure.

January 14, 1907, this testimony was submitted to the Senate by the President in a message in which he stated that he had directed it to be taken because the sufficiency of the testimony formerly submitted had been questioned, which was only one way of admitting that it had not stood the test to which it had been subjected.

Speaking of the new testimony, he says in this message that the exhibits attached to it, consisting of clips, bullets, and empty shells, were proof of themselves—

Conclusive that the new Springfield rifle was the weapon used by the midnight assassins, and could not by any possibility have been any other rifle of any kind in the world. This of itself establishes the fact that the assailants were United States soldiers, and would be conclusive on this point if not one soldier had been seen or heard by any residents in Brownsville on the night in question.

Speaking of the testimony of these eye-and-ear witnesses, he said:

The testimony of these eye-and-ear witnesses would establish beyond all possibility of contradiction the fact that the shooting was committed by 10 or 15 or more of the negro troops from the garrison, and this testimony of theirs would be amply sufficient in itself if not a cartridge or bullet had been found; exactly as the bullets and cartridges that were found would have established the guilt of the troops even had not a single eyewitness seen them or other witnesses heard them.

The testimony of the witnesses and the position of the bullet holes show that 15 or 20 of the negro troops gathered inside the fort, and that the first shots fired into the town were fired from within the fort; some of them, at least, from the upper galleries of the barracks.

Later on in his message, in his further comments upon this testimony, he says:

There is conflict of testimony on some of the minor points, but every essential point is established beyond possibility of honest question. * * *

Nobody could doubt and be honest about it.

Indeed, the fuller details as established by the additional evidence taken since I last communicated with the Senate make it likely that there were very few, if any, of the soldiers dismissed who could have been ignorant of what occurred. It is well-nigh impossible that any of the noncommissioned officers who were at the barracks should not have known what occurred.

The additional evidence thus taken renders it, in my opinion, impossible to question the conclusions upon which my order was based. I have gone most carefully over every issue of law and fact that has been raised.

Later, on March 11, 1908, after the Committee on Military Affairs had made its report, the President sent another message to the Senate, in which he sets forth that the Committee on Military Affairs "finds that the facts upon which my order of discharge of November 9, 1906, was based are substantiated by the evidence."

Thereupon, he recommends, as a result of it all—though we had come to the end of taking testimony, as we all supposed, and had a right to suppose—that he be authorized by appropriate legislation to reinstate all who may be able to come forward and "prove their innocence to his satisfaction!"

It will be noted that the guilt of these soldiers, as charged by the President, was, according to the President, "conclusively" established by the testimony first submitted. He took occasion to repeat this in his first message over and over again. Why he should so often repeat it is inexplicable except upon the theory that he is, after all, like other men, and that, notwithstanding all he had said, he had some doubt about the sufficiency of the testimony upon which he had acted; for, if he had no doubt, there could have been no necessity for such unusual repetition of the statement of that fact. At any rate, it would at least appear to the ordinary mind that after the weakness and insufficiency of this testimony was pointed out he recognized the necessity for strengthening his case, and thereupon dispatched Mr. Purdy and Major Blocksom to Brownsville to secure the evidence reported by them.

When he submitted these affidavits to the Senate he again, as in his former message, affirmed that it "conclusively and overwhelmingly" established the guilt of the men, as charged by him, and went so far as to say that there was no room left for any "honest difference" of opinion, and to intimate that men who professed to have doubt had some unworthy motive prompting that doubt or that they merely pretended to have doubt in order that they might accomplish some unworthy purpose.

In the message he sent to the Senate after the report of the Committee on Military Affairs he reiterated that the facts claimed by him had been, by that testimony, thoroughly established.

Hence it was that when the committee reported everybody apparently supposed the investigation was ended, and if anyone had thought about it at all he surely would have supposed that the President, who had formally, in his messages to the Senate, over and over again, more than a dozen times, asserted that the testimony "overwhelmingly" and "conclusively" and "beyond any doubt" and so thoroughly as to admit of "no honest difference of opinion" about it established the guilt of the soldiers, would be content to rest upon the testimony that had in these numerous ways been gathered together.

But not so. As though conscious that, notwithstanding all his assertions and declarations as to the sufficiency of the testimony, it was, in fact, unreliable and insufficient to justify his order of discharge, we were favored with the further message of December 14, 1908, in which we were informed that detectives have been employed by the War Department and that they have been at work for months, ever since April 16, 1908, just a month, speaking in a round way, after the report was made by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate and while we were engaged here in this Chamber in discussing the case upon the merits of it as presented by the testimony so reported. Ever since that date these detectives have been traveling about over the country, visiting these discharged soldiers wherever they can find them, trying to secure from them incriminating statements and confessions of guilt, and as a result we now have another batch of "conclusive and overwhelming testimony which no honest man can doubt."

We learn from this message and the exhibits submitted therewith that these detectives have personally visited thirty States of the Union, and that they have "located"—whatever that may mean—130 of these discharged soldiers. We are told that—

* * * the report and documents contain some information of great value and some statements that are obviously worthless, but I submit them in their entirety.

This report enables us to fix with tolerable definiteness—

Tolerable definiteness—

at least, some of the criminals who took the lead in the murderous shooting of private citizens at Brownsville. It establishes clearly the fact that the colored soldiers did the shooting; but upon this point further record was unnecessary, as the fact that the colored soldiers did the shooting has already been established beyond all possibility of doubt. The investigation has not gone far enough to enable us to determine all the facts, and we will proceed with it; but it has gone far enough to determine with sufficient accuracy certain facts of enough importance to make it advisable that I place the report before you. It appears that almost all the members of Company B must have been actively concerned in the shooting, either to the extent of being participants or to the extent of virtually encouraging those who were participants. As to Companies C and D, there can be no question that practically every man in them must have had knowledge that the shooting was done by some of the soldiers of B Troop, and possibly by one or two others in one of the other troops. This concealment was itself a grave offense, which was greatly aggravated by their testifying before the Senate committee that they were ignorant of what they must have known. Nevertheless, it is to be said in partial extenuation that they were probably cowed by threats, made by the more desperate of the men who had actually been engaged in the shooting—

Probable, probable, all the way through it is "probable," as though you were to convict men of murder upon probabilities, and they growing out of the imagination, not resting upon any testimony.

Probably cowed by threats, made by the more desperate of the men who had actually been engaged in the shooting as to what would happen to any man who failed to protect the wrongdoers. Moreover, there are circumstances tending to show that these misguided men were encouraged by outsiders to persist in their course of concealment and denial.

I do not know, but I suppose that has reference to a letter I wrote, which was read to the Senate when this report was sent to the Senate, a letter which every Senator knows who heard it read was free from anything whatever that would justify any such deduction.

I feel, therefore, that the guilt of the men who, after the event, thus shielded the perpetrators of the wrong by refusing to tell the truth about them, though serious, was in part due to the unwise and improper attitude of others, and that some measure of allowance should be made for the misconduct. In other words, I believe we can afford to reinstate any of these men who can truthfully tell what has happened, give all the aid they can to fix the responsibility upon those who are really guilty, and show that they themselves had no guilty knowledge beforehand and were in no way implicated in the affair, save by having knowledge of it afterwards and failing and refusing to divulge it. Under the circumstances, and in view of the length of time they have been out of the service, and their loss of the benefit that would have accrued to them by continuous long-time service, we can afford to treat the men who meet the requirements given above as having been sufficiently punished by the consequences they brought upon themselves when they rendered necessary the exercise of the disciplinary power. I recommend that a law be passed allowing the Secretary of War, within a fixed period of time, say, a year, to reinstate any of these soldiers whom he, after careful examination, finds to have been innocent, and whom he finds to have done all in his power to help bring to justice the guilty.

Meanwhile the investigation will be continued.

With this message and its exhibits before us, I felt it my duty to ask for full and detailed information, and as a result I offered a resolution calling therefor, which has been answered by the Secretary of War as follows.

I shall not stop to read it, but will ask to have it incorporated in my remarks as a part of them at this point as though read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The communication referred to is as follows:

[S. Doc. No. 626, 60th Cong., 2d sess.]

EMPLOYMENT OF HERBERT J. BROWNE AND W. G. BALDWIN BY THE WAR DEPARTMENT AT BROWNSVILLE.

Letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, by direction of the President, in response to Senate resolution of December 16, 1908, a report as to when Herbert J. Browne and W. G. Baldwin were employed by the War Department to investigate what happened at Brownsville on the 13th and 14th of August, 1906, the terms of that employment, etc. January 5, 1909.—Referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 2, 1909.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a resolution adopted by the Senate on December 16, 1908, to the effect that—

"The Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate when Herbert J. Browne and W. G. Baldwin, mentioned in the President's message of December 14, 1908, relating to the Brownsville shooting affray, were employed by the War Department to investigate what happened at Brownsville on the 13th and 14th of August, 1906, the terms of that employment, and whether any other; and, if so, who were, or at any time have been, employed to assist them or to render a like service, and whether white or colored, with full names and residences of same; and whether the said Herbert J. Browne and W. G. Baldwin and any others who may have been so employed are still in such employment, and under what instructions they have been acting; and if such instructions are in writing to send to the Senate a copy of the same; and what has been paid said parties, or any of them, on such account either as compensation for services rendered or on account of expenses by them incurred in connection with said employment; and also by what authority they, or any expense they may have incurred, were paid, and out of what fund or funds, giving such account item by item."

In response to the foregoing resolution I have the honor to submit the following report, by direction of the President:

Since the order directing the discharge of certain enlisted men of Companies B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth Infantry was promulgated frequent applications for reenlistment have been received from former members of those organizations. As it appeared to the department that some members of the command had not participated in the unlawful acts which were alleged to have been committed on August 13–14, 1906, and with a view to enable testimony showing their nonparticipation in those occurrences to be submitted, an opportunity was extended to such as desired to appear for that purpose, and officers of the army were designated by my predecessor, Secretary Taft, to communicate with such applicants and to hear any testimony which could properly be considered in connection with their application for reenlistment. These hearings were directed to be held at places in the South which were convenient of access to the former members of the companies constituting the garrison at Brownsville. Applications continue to be received at the department from time to time in which the innocence of the applicants is confidently asserted and a desire to reenter the military service is expressed.

During a considerable portion of the time which has intervened since the discharges were executed, a committee of the Senate has been engaged in the prosecution of a similar inquiry, and as a result of such legislative interest two resolutions looking to the reinstatement of some of the discharged men have been introduced in the Senate and a day fixed for their consideration. In May last Mr. Herbert J. Browne, a journalist of this city, who, during a visit to Brownsville in April and May of 1907, had made the occurrence the subject of considerable study, was authorized by the department to undertake an independent investigation of the incident and to associate with him in that undertaking Mr. William G. Baldwin, a railway detective of large experience and of unusual ability in the prosecution of similar inquiries. Mr. Baldwin's character and capacity had been cordially commended to the department by the presidents of several of the principal lines of railway in the South.

As the ordinary agencies at the disposal of the Executive, which had been employed from time to time with a view to place the department in possession of the facts, had not been completely successful, especially in determining what particular individuals, if any, had been engaged in the affair as participants, it was determined by the President, as an incident of his authority as Commander in Chief, on the recommendation of the Secretary of War and in the execution of the discretion vested in him by the act of March 3, 1899, to accept the offer of Messrs. Browne and Baldwin and to place the conduct of the investigation in their hands.

To that end an expression of view from the Judge-Advocate-General as to the legality of the undertaking was called for, and it was his opinion, in view of the existing executive and legislative conditions above referred to, that a contingency existed sufficiently urgent in character to bring it within the operation of the emergency clause of the deficiency appropriation act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat. L., 1223), which provided that—

"For emergency fund to meet unforeseen contingencies constantly arising, to be expended at the discretion of the President, $3,000,000."

The discretion provided for in the statute above cited having been exercised by the President, and an allotment of funds having been made in conformity to the requirements of the enactment above cited, an agreement was entered into with Messrs. Browne and Baldwin on April 16, 1908, in the operation of which they charged themselves with the duty of ascertaining what members of the regiment, if any, were engaged in the commission of unlawful acts on the night of August 13–14, 1906. In consideration of the service so rendered, the department undertook to pay the sum of $5,000 in installments, as provided for in their contract of April 16, 1908, a copy of which is attached to this report as Appendix A.

Considerable difficulties were encountered in locating the former members of the regiment, but before the expiration of the time mentioned in the contract sufficient information had been obtained to warrant the department in continuing the investigation under the same persons, and a supplemental agreement to that end was entered into on September 1, 1908, for a further consideration of $5,000. Payments under these agreements are fully set forth in Appendix D. The final report of Messrs. Browne and Baldwin, embodying the results of their investigations, was submitted to the department on December 5, 1908, and was duly transmitted to the Senate by the President.

The whereabouts of some of the former members of Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, whom the agents employed by the department had considerable difficulty in finding, were finally traced and located, and, as it seemed not only desirable but highly important to the public interest that the part taken by them in the disturbance should be determined, a new agreement looking to a further prosecution of the inquiry was entered into by the Judge-Advocate-General, with my approval, on December 11, 1908. The report of this supplemental investigation will be transmitted to the Senate as soon as it has been received and examined at the department.

The selection of individual agents in the prosecution of the inquiry was left to the contractors and, save as they are alluded to in their report of December 5, no reports have been received of the names of the agents so employed. I am advised that a very considerable force was employed by the contractors, at an expense averaging considerably above $100 per day. The instructions under which the contractors have acted in the prosecution of the inquiry are embodied in the contract of April 16, 1908, the details of the investigation, except as they were embodied in that instrument, being committed to their discretion. The contract of April 16, 1908, provides that—

"The parties of the first part shall conduct such investigation and inquiries into the conduct of certain enlisted men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, at Brownsville, Tex., on the 13th and 14th days of August, 1906, as will enable the principal participants in such unlawful acts to be identified and determined. They shall also inquire into and investigate the facts connected with a subsequent conspiracy entered into by certain enlisted men of said regiment, with a view to prevent the identification and discovery of the participants in such unlawful acts and the identification and disclosure of the names of said participants. (Contract of April 16, 1908, Appendix A.)"

No specific instructions in writing have been communicated to the contractors at any time. Copies of the contracts are attached to this report as Appendices A, B, and C. I ask your especial attention to the copy of a report from Secretary Taft to the President, dated April 16, 1908. For the reasons above stated, no account of expenses incurred by the contractors has been submitted to the department. The payments set forth in Exhibit D, all of which were made in the execution of the contracts hereinbefore referred to, constituted a charge against the deficiency appropriation act of March 3, 1899, from which the several obligations incurred in the operation of the undertakings hereinbefore referred to were satisfied.

Very respectfully,

LUKE E. WRIGHT,
Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT UNITED STATES SENATE.

APPENDIX A.

These articles of agreement made this 16th day of April, 1908, between Herbert J. Browne and William G. Baldwin, of the first part, and the Secretary of War, acting for and on behalf of the United States, of the second part, witness, that it is hereby agreed between said parties as follows:

1. The parties of the first part shall conduct such investigation and inquiries into the conduct of certain enlisted men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry at Brownsville, Tex., on the 13th and 14th days of August, 1906, as will enable the principal participants in such unlawful acts to be identified and determined. They shall also inquire into and investigate the facts connected with a subsequent conspiracy entered into by certain enlisted men of said regiment with a view to prevent the identification and discovery of the participants in such unlawful acts and the identification and disclosure of the names of said participants.

2. The parties of the first part shall make and submit to the Secretary of War a preliminary report, in writing, of the information obtained by them, on or before May 10, 1908, and a final report containing the names of participants, accompanied by affidavits of witnesses and such other testimony as they shall have succeeded in obtaining, such final report to be submitted to the department not later than June 15, 1908.

3. In consideration hereof the United States shall make payments as follows: One thousand two hundred and fifty dollars to be paid to the parties of the first part on Monday, April 20, 1908; $1,250 on Monday, April 27, 1908; $1,250 on Saturday, May 16, 1908; and $1,250 on Saturday, May 30, 1908.

4. The party of the second part reserves the right to terminate this agreement, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, on May 15, 1908, by giving five days' telegraphic notice thereof to the parties of the first part, in which case the payments hereinbefore provided for after that date shall cease and shall not become payable to the parties of the first part.

Witness our signatures the date first hereinbefore written.

In presence of—

GEO. B. DAVIS, as to HERBERT J. BROWNE.
FRED W. CARPENTER, as to WM. G. BALDWIN.

WM. H. TAFT,
Secretary of War.

APPENDIX B.

These articles of agreement, made this 1st day of September, 1908, between Herbert J. Browne and William G. Baldwin, of the first part, and George B. Davis, Judge-Advocate-General, U. S. Army, acting for and on behalf of the United States, of the second part, witness, that it is hereby agreed between said parties as follows:

1. The parties of the first part shall conduct such investigation into certain unlawful acts committed by enlisted men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry at Brownsville, Tex., on the 13th and 14th days of August, 1906, as will enable the participants in such unlawful acts to be identified and determined. They shall also investigate the facts connected with a subsequent agreement among the enlisted men of said regiment with a view to prevent the identification and discovery of the participants in such unlawful acts, and the verification and disclosure of the names of said participants.

2. The parties of the first part shall report to the Judge-Advocate-General of the army, in writing, from time to time, any information obtained by them in connection with said investigation, and shall submit a final report, containing the names of participants, accompanied by affidavits of witnesses and such other testimony as they shall have succeeded in obtaining, such final report to be submitted to the department not later than October 10, 1908.

3. In consideration hereof the United States shall make payments to the parties of the first part as follows: Two thousand dollars to be paid to the parties of the first part on September 10, 1908; $1,000 on September 20, 1908; $1,000 on September 30, 1908; and $1,000 on October 10, 1908.

4. The party of the second part reserves the right to terminate this agreement, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, on September 30, 1908, by giving five days' telegraphic notice thereof to the parties of the first part, in which case the payments hereinbefore determined upon to be made after that date shall cease and shall not become payable to the parties of the first part.

Witness our signatures the date first hereinbefore written.

In presence of—

JNO. BIDDLE PORTER, as to HERBERT J. BROWNE.
ESTELLE L. MEADOWS. WILLIAM G. BALDWIN.
JAMES P. DODSON.
JNO. BIDDLE PORTER, as to GEO. B. DAVIS,
Judge-Advocate-General U. S. Army.
JAMES P. DODSON.

Approved.

LUKE E. WRIGHT,
Secretary of War.

APPENDIX C.

These articles of agreement, made this 11th day of December, 1908, between Herbert J. Browne, of the first part, and George B. Davis, Judge-Advocate-General, U. S. Army, acting for and on behalf of the United States, of the second part, witness, that it is hereby agreed between said parties as follows:

1. The party of the first part shall conduct such investigation into certain unlawful acts committed by enlisted men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry at Brownsville, Tex., on the 13th and 14th days of August, 1906, as will enable all the participants in such acts to be identified and determined. He shall also investigate the facts connected with a subsequent agreement among the enlisted men of said regiment with a view to prevent the identification and discovery of the participants in such unlawful acts, and the verification and disclosure of the names of said participants.

2. The party of the first part shall report to the Judge-Advocate-General of the Army, in writing, from time to time, such information obtained by him in connection with said investigation, and shall submit a final report, containing the names of all parties and accessories to said transactions, accompanied by affidavits of witnesses and such other testimony as he shall have succeeded in obtaining, such final report to be submitted to the department not later than January 15, 1909.

3. In consideration hereof the United States shall make payments to the party of the first part as follows: Two thousand five hundred dollars to be paid to the party of the first part on December 12, 1908, and $2,500 on January 1, 1909.

Witness our signatures the date first hereinbefore written.

HERBERT J. BROWNE.

In the presence of—
JNO. BIDDLE PORTER.
L. W. CALL.

GEORGE B. DAVIS,
Judge-Advocate-General, U. S. Army.

APPENDIX D.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 2, 1909.

Report of payments under the contracts with Herbert J. Browne and William G. Baldwin, dated April 16 and September 1, 1908, and with Herbert J. Browne, dated December 11, 1908:

April 24, 1908	$1,250.00
April 27, 1908	1,250.00
May 16, 1908	1,250.00
June 2, 1908	1,250.00
September 10, 1908	2,000.00
September 21, 1908	1,000.00
September 30, 1908	1,000.00
October 10, 1908	1,000.00
December 12, 1908	2,500.00
January 2, 1909	2,500.00
	15,000.00

Respectfully submitted.

SYDNEY E. SMITH,
Disbursing Clerk.

APPENDIX E.

[Confidential.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 16, 1908.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The Brownsville investigation before the Senate, while it establishes beyond any reasonable doubt the correctness of the conclusion reached by you on the report of the inspectors and the other evidence, has done nothing to identify the particular members of the battalion who did the shooting or who were accessories before or after the fact. If the bill now pending, introduced by Mr. WARREN, passes, it will throw upon you the duty of a further examination into the evidence to determine whether certain of those now discharged ought not to be restored on the ground that they were not parties to the shooting, did not know the persons who did it, and were unable to give any clues to the perpetrators. It becomes your duty, therefore, and that of the department, to make every effort possible to identify the men who did the shooting and to establish the innocence of as many as are innocent among those discharged.

In pursuit of that purpose I have had a conference with Herbert J. Browne, who, under circumstances not necessary to repeat, made an investigation into the circumstances of the affray, and is a journalist of considerable experience; and with Mr. W. G. Baldwin, the head of a large detective agency at Roanoke, Va., serving the three great railways that pass through that town. I have written to the presidents of the three railways which Mr. Baldwin serves to know whether he is considered by them to be trustworthy, reliable, and skillful, and until I have an affirmative answer from them on this subject I shall not sign the contract. The contract has been prepared by the Judge-Advocate-General. I have talked with Mr. Baldwin and with Mr. Browne, and they think that unless within thirty days the prospects of success are bright it would be useless to continue the investigation further. If, however, their clues are found, as they expect to find them, through the use of the large force of detectives in the employ of Mr. Baldwin, then thirty days further may be needed in order to render the proof satisfactory. There is, as you will see in the contract, the right to cancel the contract at the end of thirty days and thus save half of the expense proposed should it turn out that the effort is wholly useless. You will find written upon the back of the contract a formal indorsement and authorization for you to sign in order that the money to satisfy the contract may be withdrawn and paid from the appropriation there mentioned.

Very sincerely, yours,

WM. H. TAFT.

The PRESIDENT.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to make a few comments on the report before passing it.

In the resolution, in response to which this communication came to the Senate, I asked not only for the authority by which the detectives had been employed, but I asked to have the Secretary of War state the number of detectives who have been employed, whether they were white or colored, and if both, how many of each kind, and to give us the name and address of each. The Senate will remember that I asked also that he state out of what funds these men had been paid and were being paid. In this answer the Secretary of War says he is unable to state the number of detectives that have been employed and is unable to give us any information in regard to them, because the whole transaction was in the nature of a contract between the United States Government on the one part, represented by the Secretary of War, and Mr.

Herbert J. Browne and Mr. W. G. Baldwin, on the other part, representing themselves.

We are told that Mr. Browne is a journalist and that Mr. Baldwin is the head of one of the most important detective agencies in the country; that the details of the work were left to them and no instructions given them, except only such as were embodied in the contracts of which they submit copies. I will call attention to those in a moment.

The Secretary of War, in making this report to the Senate, says that Mr. Baldwin is a railway detective of large experience and of unusual ability. He further says:

As the ordinary agencies at the disposal of the Executive, which had been employed from time to time with a view to place the department in possession of the facts, had not been completely successful, especially in determining what particular individuals, if any, had been engaged in the affair as participants, it was determined by the President, as an incident of his authority as Commander in Chief, on the recommendation of the Secretary of War and in the execution of the discretion vested in him by the act of March 3, 1899, to accept the offer of Messrs. Browne and Baldwin and to place the conduct of the investigation in their hands.

It will be noted—and I want to comment on that in passing—that prior to the employment of these detectives, the departments and the Government usually had been employing all the facilities and agents of the "ordinary" kind to try to accomplish the results they are seeking now specifically to accomplish under this employment; that they had failed to accomplish any such results; in other words, that they had failed to identify any man in that battalion as a participator in that shooting affray; they had failed to identify any man in the battalion as guilty of this newly described crime—a conspiracy of silence—that they had failed to find one guilty of membership in that new order. So they resorted to the employment of these detectives.

I am going into this with some detail, because I have some remarks to make about it a little bit later. Now, when this was determined upon, the Secretary tells us:

To that end an expression of view from the Judge-Advocate-General as to the legality of the undertaking was called for, and it was his opinion, in view of the existing executive and legislative conditions above referred to, that a contingency existed sufficiently urgent in character to bring it within the operation of the emergency clause of the deficiency appropriation act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat. L., 1223), which provided that—

"For emergency fund to meet unforeseen contingencies constantly arising, to be expended at the discretion of the President, $3,000,000." (Act of March 3, 1899, 30 Stat. L., 1223.)

He attaches copies of three contracts which were entered into between the Government and Mr. Browne and Mr. Baldwin. The first is dated April 16, 1908, and it recites that it is made between the United States and these parties, as I have already set forth.

1. The parties of the first part shall conduct such investigation and inquiries into the conduct of certain enlisted men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry at Brownsville, Tex., on the 13th and 14th days of August, 1906, as will enable the principal participants in such unlawful acts to be identified and determined. They shall also inquire into and investigate the facts connected with a subsequent conspiracy entered into by certain enlisted men of said regiment with a view to prevent the identification and discovery of the participants in such unlawful acts and the identification and disclosure of the names of said participants.

All that was to be done in consideration of the payment by the Government to Browne and Baldwin of the sum of $5,000, to be paid in four equal installments of $1,250 each.

The 1st day of September following a similar contract was entered into between Browne and Baldwin, of the first part, and the United States, represented by George B. Davis, Judge-Advocate-General of the United States Army. Five thousand dollars were to be paid under that. A third contract was entered into on the 11th day of December, after Congress had reconvened, and a few days before this matter was coming up as a special order of the Senate.

The third contract is between the United States and Herbert J. Browne alone. Mr. Baldwin's name is not mentioned in this contract, although I have been told he is still engaged in this important service. This contract undertakes to pay $5,000. There is an appendix attached, which shows that the whole $15,000 was contracted to be paid, and has been paid.

Under this last contract, on the 12th day of December $2,500 was paid, and on January 2, 1909, after the President had sent his report to the Senate and after enough had been presented here in answer to it to put him on guard that he was being imposed on, there was paid $2,500 more.

I am not using strong language when I say "after he had been imposed upon," and every Senator here will agree with me before I have concluded. My only astonishment is at my moderation.

On April 16, 1908—nine months ago—Herbert J. Browne says in his report that he was employed at that time and that he has been continuously engaged in this employment ever since. We have an account of only this $15,000 having been paid out, but Secretary Wright tells us in his report:

I am advised that a very considerable force—

Of detectives he was referring to—was employed by the contractors at an expense averaging considerably above $100 per day.

At $100 a day the sum would amount to a great deal more in nine months than $15,000, and I have reason to believe that a much larger sum than $15,000 has been paid by the Government to these men and others to prosecute this infamous work.

Attached to this report is a very singular document. It is a letter from the then Secretary of War, Mr. William H. Taft, the President-elect, to the President. Mr. Taft was then a Cabinet officer; he was communicating to the President his opinion and his advice with respect to a very important public matter, a matter that every man in the country had a right to know all about, at least in due season; and yet this letter is marked "confidential." Why confidential? Let some one answer who can. But what I want to say is that, if properly confidential, why is it sent to the Senate now and given to the public in the way in which it has been? Why should there be any confidential communication of this character? But the fact that it is marked "confidential" does not detract from its importance in considering this case. It is dated April 16, the very day the contract was signed, and reads as follows:

APPENDIX E.

[Confidential.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 16, 1908.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The Brownsville investigation before the Senate, while it establishes beyond any reasonable doubt the correctness of the conclusion reached by you on the report of the inspectors and the other evidence, has done nothing to identify the particular members of the battalion who did the shooting or who were accessories before or after the fact. * * *

I call attention to that as a very important statement. Nearly two years had elapsed; these men had been examined over and over again; they had been subjected not only to examination and cross-examination, but to examinations of the most rigid character. They had been brought here to this great Capitol, where most of them had never before been; they were ushered into that committee room where were seated at a table 12 Senators who were examining and cross-examining these poor men, helpless and ignorant, without any assistance, except only such little as I might be able to give, and yet, simply because of the power of truth they were able to meet successfully all the efforts of the Government, both ordinary and extraordinary, to convict them—efforts of the Government they had been protecting during long years of faithful service—to convict them of a crime which, in my judgment, they had nothing whatever to do with, any more than the men sitting in this Chamber participated in it. This letter reads:

If the bill now pending, introduced by Mr. WARREN—

Evidently that meant Mr. WARNER—passes, it will throw upon you—

The President—

the duty of a further examination into the evidence to determine whether certain of those now discharged ought not to be restored on the ground that they were not parties to the shooting, did not know the persons who did it, and were unable to give any clues to the perpetrators. It becomes your duty, therefore, and that of the department, to make every effort possible to identify the men who did the shooting, and to establish the innocence of as many as are innocent among those discharged.

In pursuit of that purpose I have had a conference with Herbert J. Browne, who, under circumstances not necessary to repeat, made an investigation into the circumstances of the affray, and is a journalist of considerable experience; and with Mr. W. G. Baldwin, the head of a large detective agency at Roanoke, Va., serving the three great railways that pass through that town. I have written to the presidents of the three railways which Mr. Baldwin serves to know whether he is considered by them to be trustworthy, reliable, and skillful, and until I have an affirmative answer from them on this subject I shall not sign the contract.

His letter is dated April 16. The contract purports to have been signed on that date. So he was not long in hearing, apparently:

The contract has been prepared by the Judge-Advocate-General. I have talked with Mr. Baldwin and with Mr. Browne, and they think that unless within thirty days the prospects of success are bright, it would be useless to continue the investigation further. If, however, their clews are found, as they expect to find them, through the use of the large force of detectives in the employ of Mr. Baldwin—

I call especial attention to this phrase—

If, however, their clews are found, as they expect to find them, through the use of the large force of detectives in the employ of Mr. Baldwin, then thirty days further may be needed in order to render the proof satisfactory. There is, as you will see in the contract, the right to cancel the contract at the end of thirty days, and thus save half of the expense proposed should it turn out that the effort is wholly useless. You will find written upon the back of the contract a formal indorsement and authorization for you to sign in order that the money to satisfy the contract may be withdrawn and paid from the appropriation there mentioned.

Very sincerely, yours,

WM. H. TAFT.

The PRESIDENT.

This message of the President, with its exhibits, and this report of the Secretary of War present a new and most serious feature of this unhappy business. They not only disclose determined effort on the part of the President to again bolster up the case against these men, which he has heretofore, on numerous occasions, both officially and unofficially characterized as "conclusive" and "overwhelming," but that he has resorted to a method in his effort to secure such testimony that can not be fittingly characterized without the use of language which, if employed, might appear to be disrespectful to the Chief Executive. And worst of all, in this endeavor to secure such testimony the President has, himself, committed the serious offense—condemned by every court that administers the common law that has ever had occasion to speak on the subject—of holding out to these men an inducement, or a reward, for giving such testimony, in the form of reenlistment, with full pay, of which they had been deprived, and reinstatement to all their rights as soldiers.

It does not lessen the gravity of his offense that it appears to be imperceptible to him; or, if not so, that he has become utterly oblivious to all the restraints of law, decency, and propriety in his mad pursuit of these helpless victims of his ill-considered action. I shall be able to show, I think, that all this has been done without the authority of law and with public money that has been literally filched from the Public Treasury in flat defiance both of the Constitution of the United States and of statutes enacted by Congress applicable thereto.

I do not hesitate to say that in my opinion, aside from the question whether there has been a misappropriation of public funds, no precedent for anything so shocking can be found in all the history of American criminal jurisprudence.

It will appear from the President's message—and that is what I refer to when I say that, and the exhibits thereto attached showing the mode in which the detectives are operating, and the testimony in answer thereto, which I shall submit presently—that fraudulent impersonation, misrepresentation, lying, deceit, treachery, liquor, and intoxication, coupled with promises of immunity and the excitement of hope and fear and the offer of employment and remunerative wages, have been resorted to to secure the testimony sought for, and that the so-called "confessions" are not confined to such as affect the parties making them, or to those affected by them who may be present when such confessions are made, but extend also to those not present when they are made, but who are absent and without knowledge of what is transpiring, and without any opportunity whatever to be heard in their own defense, even to make an objection that such statements and such confessions are untruthful.

These facts make all such testimony utterly incompetent and worthless according to the decisions of all the courts in which is administered the common law.

The following letters show how they approached George W. Gray, one of the discharged soldiers, and with what proposals they sought to deceive him and make him their tool in the accomplishment of their purposes:

HOTEL RUFFNER,
Charleston, W. Va., December 17, 1908.

SENATOR FORAKER: I am a member of C Company, and was suppœnaed before the committee. Now, I have a point to lay before you. I have been troubled a great deal with Col. W. G. Baldwin. I had a very good job at the time, and Mr. Baldwin writes and offers me a job at $60 a month and expenses. I told him I would accept, so he asked me if I would go around and try to see if I could get anything out of them. I told him I would, as I was innocent and ignorant, and if the guilt could be found that easy, I would try. So there was nothing I found, and he tried very hard to get me to say something false; and after he found out he could not handle me, he failed to come up to his promise in regards to the pay. Then I came back, and since then he sends me $25 and asked me if I would make a statement that the shooting came from B Company, and there was none in C or D; and I have the letter that he sent me, his name signed, and I thought it might do you some good, and if you want the letter where he pays me to make a false statement, write to 500 Capitol street.

Respectfully,

G. W. GRAY.

And then he adds a postscript:

I have three or four of his letters.

That letter was received at Cincinnati in my absence. It was answered by one of my clerks, as follows:

CINCINNATI, OHIO,
December 23, 1908.

G. W. GRAY, Esq.,
No. 500 Capitol street, Charleston, W. Va.

DEAR SIR: In the absence of Senator Foraker, I write to acknowledge the receipt of your letter to him of the 17th instant, and to say that he will be home to-morrow, and it will then be brought to his attention. The information you give him is important. If you could send him the Baldwin letters, they might be very helpful to him. Anything you may send to him at No. 1004 Traction Building, Cincinnati, Ohio, will reach him promptly.

Hoping you will comply with the above suggestion, I remain,

Very truly, yours, etc.,

S. C. CHENOWETH.

In answer he sent me a number of letters, from which I quote only two:

Roanoke, Va., May 2, 1908—

These are but samples of what the others are—

ROANOKE, VA., May 2, 1908.

Mr. GEORGE W. GRAY, Sun, W. Va.

DEAR SIR: As your name has been handed me as a reliable colored man, who has served in the United States Army as a soldier, and in whom I could place confidence, I am writing you to know if you will accept a position under me at $60 per month and your expenses. If you are not engaged at this time, please reply at an early date in the inclosed envelope.

Very truly,

WALLACE L. GRAY,
P. O. Box 25, Roanoke, Va.

It turns out from the testimony that "Wallace L. Gray" was an alias name for W. G. Baldwin, the contractor and representative of the Government dealing with some of the discharged soldiers of the Government.

Here is the second letter he sent:

ROANOKE, VA., October 8, 1908.

Mr. GEO. W. GRAY,
Hotel Dunglen, Thurmond, W. Va.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed I hand you a check for twenty-five dollars ($25). I wish you would try and see if you can locate your brother or John Brown, who is in Philadelphia.

Could you make a statement that from the sounds of the guns and flashes that you are satisfied that the shooting came from B barrack, and that you are satisfied that no shots were fired by either C or D?

Yours, truly,

W. G. BALDWIN.

As reflecting further light on the operations of these representatives (?) of the Government, I call attention to the following letters:

Oklahoma City, December 20, 1908—

I might read many more if I cared to do so. I read just enough to show the scope of their operations and the character of them:

OKLAHOMA CITY, December 20, 1908.

DEAR SENATOR: I am writing to inform you that a Mr. Ward called to see me on the 15th instant and said that he had instructions from you to see me and get other information, if any, concerning the Brownsville affair.

He also stated that you had notified me to give him all the aid I possibly could, in order that he might see as many of the discharged soldiers as was in the city, which I did.

But since I have failed to hear from you, as he stated, thought I would call your attention to the matter.

I had no new information, as I don't know any more about the Brownsville affair now than I did when it first happened.

Best wishes for your success in the fight you are now in, for which we all feel proud.

Yours, truly, JERRY E. REEVES.

No. 225 West Grand avenue.

Reeves was a sergeant of one of the companies, and testified as a witness before the Military Affairs Committee.

Now, again:

OMAHA, NEBR., December 22, 1908.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Last Thursday a man who gave his name as G. S. Ward—

The same man, evidently, as the "Mr. Ward" referred to in the previous letter—was in Omaha and called upon Corpl. J. A. Coltrane, who was in Company B of the Twenty-fifth Regiment when the company was discharged in 1906. He pretended to be representing you, and had with him a list of names which he claimed were the names of the soldiers who had confessed their complicity in the Brownsville affair.

He interviewed Corporal Coltrane for three hours and a half, but failed to get any information. But during the course of the interview he asked Corporal Coltrane if he had seen any communication from you since the Senate hearing. Corporal told him he had seen a letter which you had written to me concerning the affair. Your letter to me was dated May 18, 1908. Nothing further was said about the letter that night. However, on the following day Mr. Ward sent a telegram to Corporal Coltrane from Des Moines, Iowa, which read as follows: "Please request loan of letter from Senator FORAKER to Lawyer Pinkett and mail same to me, general delivery, Des Moines, Iowa."

* * * * * * *

He then goes on to say that he did not send my letter to him.

Thanking you for the fight you have made and are making, I am,

Sincerely,

H. J. PINKETT.

Senator J. B. FORAKER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

I do not know Lawyer Pinkett. He is somebody who wrote me in regard to it, and, if he is so disposed, he can publish my letter to all the world; for, Mr. President, let it be said and understood now, once and for all, that I have written no letter or word of any kind to any human being on earth in regard to this or any other matter, so far as that is concerned, that the world may not know about if it wants to; and I give my permission without any qualification whatever for such publication. I have doubtless written some letters that might need explanation. I may have written some letters, as perhaps every other man has, that I would not have written if I had at the time of writing the benefit of information subsequently acquired; but I never wrote a line since I left my mother's knee that all the world might not see. I may have written what might need explanation, but it would not require any lying, or any dodging, or any misrepresentation, or any evasion on my part, to satisfy anybody that it was honest, sincere, and truthful, as I understood the truth.

But, resuming, we have a lot of men employed as hired detectives, going about over the country to convict men of a crime that I do not believe them guilty of; and, in connection with that, trying to pry out something in the nature of private correspondence that might be sent to the Senate, as another communication has been recently sent to the Senate.

If I show zeal in commenting upon this or display any energy, it is not through anger, but only because of that indignant resentment which any self-respecting man must feel to be spied upon by paid detectives at the expense of the Government he is himself trying to serve, employed to hound him, and this, that, and every other man. Mr. President, no language is adequate fittingly to describe such a shameful performance, and I do not exempt anybody who is connected with it from that remark, from the highest to the lowest.

These men wrote similar letters to Boyd Conyers and then sought to mislead and entrap him with slanderous lies that his comrades were "peaching," as he expressed it, and that if he would escape arrest and extradition to Texas, from where he would probably never return to his young wife and child, he, too, must make a statement falsely accusing his absent comrades; and then, when he refused to comply, asserting his innocence, they fabricated a story of confession and attempted suicide, which was a base falsehood from beginning to end, as I shall completely, and to the satisfaction of every man who hears or will read, show by the testimony I shall offer.

In all the history of crime and its detection nothing more atrocious, disreputable, and disgraceful has ever been recorded.

It seems a waste of time to cite cases in support of propositions so elementary as that confessions involving criminal guilt are never permitted in any court, unless it can be shown that they were given voluntarily, without inducement or hope of reward, or promise of immunity, or without any duress, or without any suggestion of benefit of any kind or nature whatsoever to the party making the confession. This elementary principle of the law was well known to the detective, Herbert J. Browne, who made the report transmitted to the Senate by the President, for in it he takes care to say that "no promises of immunity were made."

This statement falls to the ground, however, with all the rest of his wicked fabrications, in the presence of the established facts, as I shall presently establish them.

This is not the first time men have resorted to misrepresentation to make it appear that so-called "confessions" secured by them were voluntary.

The case of Bram v. United States (168 U. S., p. 532) is an illustration in point. It shows how jealously the law, and the courts in expounding the law, protect men who are accused of crime from the danger of conviction upon such testimony. In that case three homicides had been committed on the high seas. It was claimed that Bram, the accused, had made a confession. The officer to whom it was alleged he made the confession testified, in response to the interrogatories of the court, as follows:

> Q. You say there was no inducement to him in the way of promise or expectation of advantage?—A. Not any, your honor.
> Q. Held out?—A. Not any, your honor.
> Q. Nor anything said in the way of suggestion to him that he might suffer if he did not—that it might be worse for him?—A. No, sir; not any.
> Q. So far as you were concerned, it was entirely voluntary?—A. Voluntary, indeed.
> Q. No influence on your part exerted to persuade him one way or the other?—A. None whatever, sir; none whatever.

These statements were made under oath; they were made in the presence of the court; they were made in answer to interrogatories propounded by the judge presiding over the court; and such were the answers.

Thereupon counsel for the defendant interrupted the examination the court was making and urged that inasmuch as the defendant was at the time of his alleged confession in the custody of the officer to whom he had made his alleged confession his statement could not be free and voluntary, as the law required to make it competent.

The objection was overruled, and the defendant excepted.

Thereupon the officer, in response to the inquiries of the court, continued his statement, as follows:

> When Mr. Bram came into my office, I said to him: "Bram, we are trying to unravel this horrible mystery." I said: "Your position is rather an awkward one. I have had Brown—

He was another man charged with complicity in the crime and was under arrest—> in this office, and he made a statement that he saw you do the murder." He said: "He could not have seen me. Where was he?" I said: "He states he was at the wheel." "Well," he said, "he could not see me from there." I said: "Now, look here, Bram; I am satisfied that you killed the captain, from all I have heard from Mr. Brown. But," I said, "some of us here think you could not have done all that crime alone. If you had an accomplice, you should say so and not have the blame of this horrible crime on your own shoulders." He said: "Well, I think, and many others on board the ship think, that Brown is the murderer; but I don't know anything about it." He was rather short in his replies.

> Q. Anything further said by either of you?—A. No; there was nothing further said on that occasion.

It should be stated that not only was Bram accused of the murder of the captain of the vessel and two others on board, but also the man Brown, referred to in the examination, was similarly accused. Brown was not present when Bram made his alleged confession.

It will be noted that this officer, who is shown by the record in the case to have been one of many years' experience, testified that he held out no inducement and made no suggestion calculated to influence the accused to make a confession; and yet under examination he was compelled to testify that he told the accused that his position was an awkward one, and that Brown, the other defendant, had been in that same office and had made a statement that he saw him (Bram) commit the murders, and that he told Bram that he was satisfied that he was guilty from what he had heard from Brown, but that some of them thought he (Bram) could not have done all that crime alone, and if he had an accomplice he should say so and not have all the blame saddled upon his shoulders.

Notwithstanding these statements, the trial court admitted the confession; but the Supreme Court, in reviewing the case, among other things, said:

> In 3 Russell on Crimes (6th ed.), 478, it is stated as follows: "But a confession, in order to be admissible, must be free and voluntary; that is, must not be extracted by any sort of threats or violence, nor obtained by any direct or implied promises, however slight, nor by the exertion of any improper influence. * * * A confession can never be received in evidence where the prisoner has been influenced by any threat or promise, for the law can not measure the force of the influence used or decide upon its effect upon the mind of the prisoner, and therefore excludes the declaration if any degree of influence has been exerted."
> And this summary of the law is in harmony with the doctrine as expressed by other writers, although the form in which they couch its statement may be different. (Citing Greenleaf, Wharton, Taylor, Bishop, etc.)
> These writers but express the result of a multitude of American and English cases, which will be found collected by the authors and editors either in the text or in notes, especially in the ninth edition of Taylor, second volume, tenth chapter, and the American notes, following pages 588, where a very full reference is made to decided cases. The statement of the rule is also in entire accord with the decisions of this court on the subject. (Citing 110 U. S., 574; 156 U. S., 51, 55; 160 U. S., 355; and 162 U. S., 613.)

After a rather elaborate discussion of the whole subject and the citation of many authorities, the court proceeds, at page 546, to say:

> Gilbert, in his Treatise on Evidence (2d ed., published in 1760), says, at page 140: "* * * But then this confession must be voluntary and without compulsion; for our law in this differs from the civil law, that it will not force any man to accuse himself; and in this we do certainly follow the law of nature, which commands every man to endeavor his own preservation; and therefore pain and force may compel men to confess what is not the truth of facts, and consequently such extorted confessions are not to be depended on."

In support of its ruling, the court, on page 547, among other quotations, gives the following as a note to Gilham's case, 2 Moody, pages 194–195:

> The human mind, under the pressure of calamity, is easily seduced; and is liable, in the alarm of danger, to acknowledge indiscriminately a falsehood or a truth, as different agitations may prevail. A confession, therefore, whether made upon an official examination or in discourse with private persons, which is obtained from a defendant, either by the flattery of hope, or by the impressions of fear, however slightly the emotions may be implanted, is not admissible evidence, for the law will not suffer a prisoner to be made the deluded instrument of his own conviction.

The quotations I have made were in cases where the accused were in the custody of the law, under arrest, and charged with crime, and in some instances indicted and being proceeded against. The soldiers from whom these detectives are now, by the methods shown, seeking to get confessions and statements that will show guilt, are not under indictment nor under arrest, for the controlling reason, among others, that there is no testimony on which to find an indictment and no testimony to warrant any man in taking the responsibility of causing the arrest of any one of them.

It will be remembered that 12 of them were arrested immediately after the affray, at the suggestion of Captain McDonald, of the Texas Rangers, and that they were held in custody at San Antonio until the grand jury of Cameron County, Tex., in which Brownsville is situated, could investigate and determine whether or not they should be indicted; and that this grand jury, after investigating the charges against these 12 men for a period of three weeks, found that there was not even probable cause on which to indict any one of them, and they were thereupon discharged.

But the books are full of cases where so-called "confessions," when made after mere accusation but before arrest and when there was no official duress and no proceeding against the accused of any kind, were held to be incompetent upon the same general principles that are applied in the rulings already quoted—if the inducements or threats or rewards or punishments or persuasions were held out by one claiming to represent or have authority to speak for the Government.

In Rex v. Thompson (1783), 1 Leach (4th ed.), 291, cited in Bram v. United States (168 U. S., 551) it was held that—

> * * * A declaration to a suspected person that unless he gave a more satisfactory account of his connection with a stolen bank note his interrogator would take him before a magistrate was held equivalent to stating that it would be better to confess, and to have operated to lead the prisoner to believe that he would not be taken before a magistrate if he confessed. Baron Hotham, after commenting upon the evidence, in substance and said that the prisoner was hardly a free agent at the time, as, though the language addressed to him scarcely amounted to a threat, it was certainly a strong invitation to the prisoner to confess, the manner in which it has been expressed rendering it more efficacious.

As illustrating how careful the law is in protecting the accused from confessions that are not absolutely voluntary and free from fear, threat, menace, persuasion, or hope of reward, the Supreme Court has in the Bram case cited, at page 552, numerous cases, from which are culled the following:

> In Cass's case (1784) (1 Leach, 293), a confession induced by the statement of the prosecutor to the accused, "I am in great distress about my irons; if you will tell me where they are, I will be favorable to you," was held inadmissible. Mr. Justice Gould said that the slightest hopes of mercy held out to a prisoner to induce him to disclose the fact was sufficient to invalidate a confession.

In Rex v. Griffin, decided in 1809 (Russ & Ry., 151), a statement made by a prisoner was rejected because it was shown that he had been told that "it would be better for him to confess."

In another case it was held by the same court that the statement of the prisoner should be rejected because it was shown that the prosecuting witness said to the accused that—

> He only wanted his money, and if the prisoner gave him that, he might go to the devil if he pleased.

In another case, decided in 1830 (reported in 4 Car. & P., 387), a so-called "confession" was rejected because it was shown that some one said to the prisoner:

> You are under suspicion of this, and you had better tell all you know.

The same ruling was made in the case of Rex v. Enoch and Pulley, decided in 1833, because it was shown that some one said to the prisoner:

> You had better tell the truth, or it will lie upon you and the man go free.

In Rex v. Mills, cited in the same connection, the confession was rejected when it was shown that it was said to the prisoner:

> It is no use for you to deny it, for there is a man and the boy who will swear they saw you do it.

While in Sherrington's case the same ruling was made because it was shown that the remark was made to the prisoner:

> There is no doubt thou wilt be found guilty: It will be better for you if you will confess.

In another case the confession was rejected because it was shown that the prisoner was told:

> You had better split and not suffer for all of them.

The ground of rejection in another case was the statement to the prisoner:

> If you are guilty, do confess. It will perhaps save your neck. You will have to go to prison. If William H. (another person suspected, and whom the prisoner had charged) is found clear, the guilt will fall on you. Pray tell me if you did it.

In Reg. v. Croydon, decided in 1846, the confession was rejected because it was shown that it was said to the witness:

> I dare say you had a hand in it; you may as well tell me all about it.

While in the case of Reg. v. Garner the ground of objection was the statement to the prisoner:

> It will be better for you to speak out.

So I might go on and cite a dozen more cases similar in character.

It will be noted that in no one of these cases was there any promise of immunity, but only the suggestion, in an advisory way, that it would probably secure favor or redound to the benefit of the prisoner if he should make a confession. These are all English cases, but they are all cited with approval by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Numerous American cases of the same general character are also cited in this same opinion.

Before turning away from the English cases I call attention to another—the latest of the decisions cited by our Supreme Court. It was that of Reg. v. Thompson (2 Q. B., 12). Our Supreme Court, in citing this case and the rule made, says:

> At the trial a confession was offered in evidence which had been made by the defendant before his arrest upon the charge of having embezzled funds of a certain corporation. Objection was interposed to its reception in evidence, on the ground that it had been made under the operation of an inducement held out by the chairman of the company in a statement to a relative of the accused, intended to be and actually communicated to the latter, that "it will be the right thing for Marcellus (the accused) to make a clean breast of it." * * * And added: "If these principles and the reasons for them are, as it seems impossible to doubt, well founded, they afford to magistrates a simple test by which the admissibility of a confession may be decided. They have to ask, Is it proved affirmatively that the confession was free and voluntary—that is, was it preceded by any inducement to make a statement held out by a person in authority? If so, and the inducement has not clearly been removed before the statement was made, evidence of the statement is inadmissible."

Coming to the American authorities, the court said (p. 557):

> In this court the general rule that the confession must be free and voluntary—that is, not produced by inducements engendering either hope or fear—is settled by the authorities referred to at the outset.

After reviewing the American cases and the statutory provisions of some of the States, and pointing out how, by the courts of the different States, confessions had been rejected and the grounds therefor, the court reviewed the facts of the case as heretofore set forth, and held that they showed that the confession was not voluntary and that the court below erred in admitting it.

Applying now what the Supreme Court of the United States has in this recent case held to be the law governing the admissibility of confessions and incriminating statements as evidence to establish guilt, it will be found from an examination of the testimony already produced that the so-called "confessions and statements" relied upon to again establish the guilt of these soldiers is wholly inadmissible as evidence, and that not only is the testimony itself condemned by all authority as unreliable and incompetent, but also the methods whereby it has been secured. They are condemned as contrary to the elementary principles of common-law justice and as so unworthy and reprehensible in character that nothing so produced will be received, but all must be condemned and excluded wherever human life or human rights or human liberty may be involved.

If, therefore, the statements of Browne, Lawson, Baldwin, and others, acting under employment by the War Department and under the immediate direction of the President, to whom they personally report, were absolutely truthful, all that they have done would be incompetent, according to all authority, as evidence to show the guilt of any of these discharged soldiers, either as participators in the shooting affray or as participators in a conspiracy of silence to withhold knowledge of facts that might lead to the identification of those who did participate.

But, happily for these unfortunate soldiers, it is not necessary for them or for me, speaking in their behalf, to rely upon any technical objections to the legality or sufficiency or propriety of this kind of testimony or the unwarranted and unlawful methods whereby it has been secured.

It will be remembered that when the President's message of December 14, 1908, was read in the Senate I immediately read in answer thereto a number of letters from Boyd Conyers, the discharged soldier who is charged with being one of the leaders in getting up the conspiracy, and in executing it, to shoot up the town of Brownsville, which letters by chance I had with me at my desk that morning. He is now living at Monroe, Ga., and it was charged that he had made a confession. In the letters he fully and unqualifiedly denied and refuted all that was said against him in that regard. I called attention to the fact while engaged in reading these letters that, according to his statements, the sheriff of the county, Hon. E. C. Arnold, and Captain Mobley, a cashier in one of the banks, and other citizens—white men of character and position—were shown by the letters to have knowledge as to the truthfulness of what Conyers had written, and that if his statements were not true, as I believed them to be, it would be easy by the testimony of such men to overthrow his defense.

On the next day there appeared in all the newspapers an Associated Press dispatch giving an interview with Hon. E. C. Arnold, of Monroe, Ga., sheriff of Walton County, fully confirming and supporting all the statements of Conyers and denying the truthfulness of all the essential statements of Browne and the detectives.

The letters of Conyers, coupled with this confirmation from Sheriff Arnold, at once satisfied every fair-minded man from one ocean to the other who wanted to look at this matter honestly that the so-called testimony submitted by Browne, Baldwin, et al., was unworthy of credence. But I am now able to answer those charges more specifically and completely. I invite the attention of the Senate to the following affidavits and unsworn statement of Capt. Albert B. Mobley.

I have copied them as they are here on this table, and any Senator who wishes may examine the originals, because I have been accused of so much in this matter that I do not want to take anything for granted. I have been accused, I hope, of about all I will ever be accused of. There is ahead—not far ahead—of us a time when men will not lightly fall into such invective and such base charges and insinuations, when they will be out of power and where they can be called to account as other men can be called to account.

I read first the affidavit of Boyd Conyers:

GEORGIA, Walton County:

In person appeared before me Boyd Conyers, who on being duly sworn deposes and says: The statements made by me in the several letters written by me to Senator FORAKER and published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 14, 1908, are true.

Senators will remember the report that Boyd Conyers made a confession to William Lawson, a negro detective, ignorant and illiterate, who signed his name with his mark. He gave the day and date that the confession was made to him. Then Browne testified under oath that he interviewed Conyers in Georgia and secured a confession. Here is what Conyers says under oath:

I desire to further say that I did not have any conversation with William Lawson, the negro detective, as stated by him, on the morning of June 8, because I was at work 3 miles from the city of Monroe at that time, helping to grade the target range for Company H, Second Georgia Regiment, National Guard. I did not go to Gainesville, as stated by him, on the negro excursion June 15, for I was at work cleaning up the post-office until dinner time that day, and after dinner I went out to the target range and helped to put up the targets. I did not see and talk to him on June the 29th, as stated by him, for my wife was dangerously sick at that time and expected to die. I never did at any time have any private talk with him, and I most solemnly swear that every word of his statement as to talks had with me or confessions made by me to him, or statements made by me to him, in regard to the Brownsville affair, or affecting me in any way, is utterly and absolutely false.

I desire to say, further, that Sheriff E. C. Arnold was present at all of the interviews between Mr. Herbert J. Browne and me and took an active part in trying to get me to make a confession. He knows, for he was present and heard every word that I said, that I made no confession, that I denied all the time knowing anything about it; and I here say that I made no confession of any kind to Mr. Browne, and that the statement or report made by him and published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 14, in so far as the same refers to me or affects me in any way, is not true, but a misrepresentation of the real truth.

BOYD CONYERS.

Sworn to and subscribed to before me January 4, 1909.

J. O. LAWRENCE,
Notary Public, ex-officio Justice of the Peace,
Walton County, Ga.

Now I will read the affidavit of E. C. Arnold. I see present the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY]. I should like to know whether he knows E. C. Arnold, sheriff of Walton County; and if so, what kind of a man he is.

Mr. CLAY. I have known Mr. Arnold for fifteen or twenty years. He is a most excellent man in every respect.

Mr. FORAKER. I should judge so from this affidavit and from the position he holds in his county. I do not think Mr. Arnold needs a certificate of character, except only to those who imagine that every man who does not agree to what is put out from certain places is dishonest or actuated by some unworthy purpose or motive. I venture to say he would compare favorably either with Herbert J. Browne or William Lawson.

STATE OF GEORGIA, Walton County:

In person appeared before me E. C. Arnold, who, after being duly sworn, deposes and says:

I am at present and have been for twelve years the sheriff of Walton County, residing in the city of Monroe. For several years prior to my election to the office of sheriff I was chief of police of Monroe. I have recently been elected ordinary of the county, and will begin the duties of that office to-morrow, January 1, 1909. I desire to say that I know very little about the statements made by William Lawson, the negro detective, in his affidavit published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 14 as to the conversations had with and confessions made to him by Boyd (Buddie) Conyers.

He is apparently known there as "Buddie"—

But I do know, in all reason, that that part of his statement about he and Conyers "stopping under a storehouse porch near Main street and taking a drink or two of liquor" is necessarily false. There is only one such place that he could have reference to, and that is right in the business heart of the city, in full view of the court-house, of the public square, the city hall, and other public buildings. In fact, it is one of the most public and conspicuous places in the city, and in my opinion it would have been impossible for them to have taken a drink at that place without being seen and cases made against them in the police court.

As to the report made by Herbert J. Browne and published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 14, I desire to say that on the morning of October 6 Hon. George M. Napier, who until recently was judge-advocate-general of the state troops (national guard), came into the court room, court then being in session, and requested me to come over to his law office, as he wanted to see me on some important business. In a little while I went to his office, where he introduced to me Mr. Herbert J. Browne as a special agent of the Government sent here to investigate the Brownsville raid. Captain Napier told me that Gov. Hoke Smith had called him up over the phone and had requested him to see me and ask me to assist Mr. Browne in every possible way in the matter. I talked over the matter fully with Mr. Browne during the day, arranging plans and details. Early after supper I had Boyd Conyers to meet us at my office. I fastened the doors, so no one could interrupt us, and then we put him through the most rigid examination I have ever seen any person subjected to in all of my long experience in dealing with criminals. I had always believed that some of the soldiers "shot up Brownsville," and for this reason I was glad of an opportunity to aid in getting at the bottom of it, finding out the guilty ones, so that they might be properly punished. I, therefore, went into the matter with Mr. Browne with my whole heart in the work. We kept Conyers under a most severe cross-examination until about 11 o'clock that night, but without getting any information, he positively denying all the time that he knew anything to tell, as he was asleep at the time of the shooting. We then adjourned for the night, but made an engagement with him to meet us the next morning. Conyers came promptly, but Mr. Browne, in the meantime, had changed his plans and decided to go back to Atlanta, so we had no conference with Conyers that morning. At noon of October 11 Mr. Browne returned to Monroe, and just after dinner I went for Conyers and had him come to my office. We again kept him under a most rigid examination until after dark. I was personally present all the time at both of these interviews, assisting Mr. Browne in every way possible, and heard everything that was said. On both of these occasions we used all the power, skill, and means at our command to get a confession out of Conyers or to get him to tell who did the shooting, but he continued to deny knowing anything about it. Mr. Browne had told me that Conyers had made a confession to William Lawson, the negro detective, but that he wanted to get a confirmation of it direct from Conyers. He said that he was direct from the President—

And he was; and he was acting under his immediate direction and upon his suggestion in this matter, infamous as it is—

and was prepared to offer Conyers absolute immunity from any punishment and a pardon from the President if he would only tell what he knew. Conyers had known me all of his life and had absolute confidence in my ability to carry out any promise I made him. I told him that if he would just tell the whole thing—just own up and tell it—no matter how guilty he might be, I had it in my power to see that he was pardoned and would not be punished, but if he did not tell it and it had to be proved on him, then he would be severely punished. We made all sorts of promises to him—

Remember the authorities that I have read. It seemed tedious when I was reading them, but I was reading them because they fit this case, and I want Senators to know how judges in administering our law comment on such performances as this.

We made all sorts of promises to him; then we told him what the consequences would be if he did not tell it, but he still denied knowing anything or who did the shooting. Mr. Browne then told him about his confession to Lawson. Conyers said Lawson had lied; that he had had no talk with Lawson about the matter. Then Mr. Browne told him that about twenty of the soldiers were talking already and telling it, and that the truth was coming out, and if he wanted to escape punishment he had better tell it. Conyers still denied knowing anything, or who did the shooting. I desire to state further that I have carefully read the several letters written by Boyd Conyers to Senator FORAKER in regard to what took place between him and Mr. Browne, published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 14, and the whole thing took place just as he has outlined it in these letters, only he omitted to state the part taken by me in the matter. The details as set out by him in these letters are stated with remarkable accuracy.

Mr. Browne told Conyers, in my presence, that Lawson had told him that Conyers made the confession to him on the excursion trip to Gainesville. Conyers told Mr. Browne that Lawson had lied, because he, Conyers, did not go to Gainesville on the excursion, and could prove it. I desire to state further that the report—

Now, I call careful attention to this:

I desire to state further that the report of Mr. Herbert J. Browne in this matter as published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 14, in so far as the same relates to these conversations with Boyd Conyers, is not true. To the contrary, and I say it under my solemn oath, it is the most absolutely false, the most willful misrepresentation of the truth, and the most shameful perversion of what really did take place between them that I have ever seen over the signature of any person.

Yet a President of the United States, acting through the Secretary of War, is continuing the employment of a man who is infamous scoundrel enough to thus undertake to impose upon the President and upon the Senate, and this is being continued after warning was given from here of the character of this man Browne.

If I speak plainly, Mr. President, it is because we have reached the point where only plain talk would seem to properly meet the requirements of the case.

Now, that is not all—

The most willful misrepresentation of the truth, and the most shameful perversion of what really did take place between them that I have ever seen over the signature of any person. Surely Mr. Browne must have thought that this report would never be seen or read by me, or he would not have made it. I was both shocked and horrified when I read it.

I wish somebody else, who prates about the dishonesty of other people, would be shocked and horrified by something.

When we had utterly failed to get a confession or any information out of Conyers as to who did the shooting, then Mr. Browne asked him to give the names of some of the baseball players and also the names of some of the most reckless and turbulent members of his company. This Conyers did, giving several names, and these same names, so given by Conyers in my presence, Mr. Browne, in his report, says were furnished him by Conyers as the ones participating in the shooting. I point this out as a fair example as to how Mr. Browne has perverted the truth and the real facts in the case in his report.

I will state further that Mr. W. G. Baldwin came here. He told me that the letter purporting to be written by James Powell, as published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 14, was a decoy letter written by him.

Senators will remember that one of the conspirators who, it was alleged, helped to plan and helped to execute the shooting up of Brownsville was this man James Powell, an ex-soldier of this battalion, as charged, and they introduced a letter written by James Powell to Boyd Conyers, his comrade and friend, at Monroe, Ga. When Conyers was asked about that letter he said: "I do not know that man Powell. I got such a letter, but I do not know him at all. I never saw him. I never heard of him. There is no reason why he should write to me." Now, it comes out that that was a decoy letter, and not written by James Powell, but written by W. G. Baldwin, this representative of the Government. And then, later, Mr. President, it turns out by his own confession, by his own statement, that James Powell never belonged to this battalion. He had been a soldier in some other regiment some years ago, but he had been living in Atlanta since long before the shooting affray occurred, in the service there of a Doctor Crenshaw. The Senators from Georgia may know him. Then he said he had no knowledge whatever of Brownsville, and had never been there.

Oh, such plotting, such planning, simply to save somebody's face—I need not say whose. That is the plain English of it. That is what the power of this Government and the Public Treasury of the United States are being subjected to in this matter.

He—

Mr. Baldwin—

also told me that he knew very little about William Lawson, the negro detective, as he had only been with him a few weeks (having been sent to him by his brother), and that he had already caught him in several crooked statements. He also said that he had sent George Gray—

From whom I read a letter a few minutes ago—a private in Company C, and who was in the army with Conyers, here to see Conyers after Lawson had left. That Gray came here and spent the day with Conyers, and on his return reported no information.

E. C. ARNOLD.

Signed and subscribed to before me December 31, 1908.

JNO. T. ROBERTSON,
Clerk Walton Superior Court.

Now I read the affidavit of W. J. Mayfield, also a witness:

STATE OF GEORGIA, Walton County:

In person appeared before me, W. J. Mayfield, who, on oath, after being duly sworn, deposes and says:

That in June, 1908, he was employed to superintend the work of grading and preparing the target range for Company H, Monroe National Guard, Second Georgia Regiment. I have read the statement of William Lawson in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in regard to a conversation he had with Boyd (Buddie) Conyers on the morning of June 8, near Main street, between 8 and 9 o'clock. I desire to say that statement is absolutely false, and could not possibly be true, for the reason that the target range is 3 miles from Monroe and Conyers was working for me on the target range that day. We began work about 6 o'clock, or sunup, in the morning, and worked until sundown in the afternoon, and it was impossible for Conyers to have had the conversation at the time and place mentioned by Lawson. In addition to my memory as to the above facts my time book kept by me bears me out as to the correctness of my memory. Lawson's statement as to that conversation is a fabrication and falsehood out of the whole cloth. Conyers was already at work on the range when I took charge of it, and continued to work there under me every day until it was completed.

W. J. MAYFIELD.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this December 30, 1908.

JNO. T. ROBERTSON,
Clerk Walton Superior Court.

Then, I have the testimony here of a man by the name of John Blassingame:

STATE OF GEORGIA, County of Walton:

In person appeared before me, John Blassingame, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says: I am at present and was on May 6, 1908, the proprietor of a pressing club in the city of Monroe, Ga.; that I was present when William Lawson, the colored detective, was introduced at my place to Boyd (Buddie) Conyers. It is not true, as stated by him as published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on page 191, that he was introduced to Conyers as an "old soldier." He was introduced or introduced himself to Conyers as traveling with and a helper to a hat drummer. I further swear that I was present on the occasion when Lawson says that he offered Conyers liquor in my place of business, and that his statement to that effect is not true. I further swear that I went on the negro excursion to Gainesville on the morning of June 15, and that Boyd Conyers did not go on that excursion. The excursion train left Monroe about 7 o'clock in the morning and did not return until about 9 o'clock that night, and that Conyers was not on the train either on its departure or return.

JOHN BLASSINGAME.

Sworn and subscribed to before me December 31, 1908.

J. O. LAWRENCE,
Notary Public ex officio Justice of the Peace,
Walton County, Ga.

So that that story is a lie.

Then, O. J. Adams, who is also a white man and clerk in the post-office, testifies:

STATE OF GEORGIA, County of Walton:

Personally appeared before me, O. J. Adams, who being duly sworn, deposes and says:

On the morning of June 15, 1908, I began my duties as clerk of the postmaster in the post-office at Monroe, Ga., which position I still fill at the present time. I know Boyd (Buddie) Conyers personally. I know of my own personal knowledge that he did not go on the negro excursion to Gainesville on the morning of that date, because he worked in the post-office until 11 or 12 o'clock that morning, giving the office a general cleaning up, washing the windows, etc. The excursion went up early in the morning and he was working in the office as above stated several hours after it had left here. I know that I can not possibly be mistaken as to what I have above stated for the reason that it was the day I began work as a clerk in the post-office.

O. J. ADAMS.

Sworn and subscribed to before me, an officer of said State, duly authorized by law to administer oaths. January 4, 1909.

J. O. LAWRENCE,
Notary Public, Ex Officio Justice of the Peace,
Walton County, Ga.

Now here, in order that Senators may know what kind of methods are resorted to to get testimony, let me read the following affidavit from Frederick D. McGarity. He is the assistant cashier of the leading bank in Monroe, a white man.

STATE OF GEORGIA, Walton County:

In person appeared before me Fred D. McGarity, white, who, after being duly sworn, deposed and said that on the night of November 28, 1908, and immediately after supper, a gentleman who registered at the hotel where I boarded introduced himself to me as A. H. Baldwin, having previously learned that I was a notary public, and requested me to go with him to the house of one Lewis Anderson, colored, for the purpose of attesting an affidavit. I went with him, as it was only a few hundred yards, not knowing the nature of the business. When we reached the place we found there Lewis Anderson and one William Lawson, a negro detective, who then requested Anderson to repeat what he had told him that Boyd (Buddie) Conyers had told him about the Brownsville raid. Anderson, who is an old man, vehemently denied having told Lawson anything about Conyers; said that Conyers's name had never been mentioned between them but one time, and that was on one occasion when Conyers passed by and Lawson asked him if that was Conyers, and he told him yes. Anderson further stated that he had had no talk with Conyers; that he had only spoken to him one time, and then only to say "howdy;" that he had nothing to do with "these young niggers." Lawson insisted on Anderson making an affidavit that Conyers had admitted to him that he knew a great deal more about the shooting at Brownsville than he had told. Lawson insisted that Anderson had told him these things while out fishing. Anderson strongly denied having told Lawson any such thing, and got his Bible and placed his hands on it and denied that he had ever made any such statements to Lawson, or that he had ever had any conversation with Conyers about the matter in any way, at the same time calling upon, or stating that God would strike him dead if he was telling a lie. Anderson denied making such statement to Lawson and refused to make the desired affidavit. Mr. Baldwin and I then went to the home of Boyd Conyers. Mr. Baldwin asked Conyers if he knew Lawson. Conyers stated that he knew him when he saw him. Baldwin asked him if he went on the excursion to Gainesville. Conyers answered that he did not. Baldwin told him that Lawson said he went and made a confession to him on the trip in the presence of Lonzo Hennon, and that he, Baldwin, had Hennon's affidavit in his pocket showing this to be true. Conyers replied that he could not help what he had; that it was not true; that he did not go on the Gainesville excursion and had made no confession to Lawson or to anyone else. Baldwin then asked Conyers how many men were arrested after the shooting. Conyers told him 13. Baldwin asked him to give him the names of those arrested, and Conyers did so. He asked Conyers if he was arrested, and Conyers said no. He asked Conyers who sent for him when he went to Washington. Conyers told him D. M. Ransdell, Sergeant-at-Arms United States Senate. He then asked him how much he got per day and how much expense money, etc. Conyers told him, but I do not remember the exact amount.

I was present during all of the conversation and heard it all. Conyers positively denied knowing anything about the shooting, stating that he was asleep at the time the shooting took place. Conyers said nothing that would tend in any way to show that he had anything to do with the shooting, or that he knew anything about who did it. I am assistant to the cashier in the Bank of Monroe.

FRED D. MCGARRITY.

Sworn and subscribed to before me January 4, 1908.

J. O. LAWRENCE,
Notary Public and ex officio Justice of the Peace,
Walton County, Ga.

Then, here is the affidavit signed and sworn to by G. W. Giles, who was one of the parties in charge of the excursion to Gainesville:

STATE OF GEORGIA, Walton County:

In person appeared before me G. Wes Giles, who being duly sworn, deposes and says: That on Monday morning, June 8, several of us left Monroe and went out to grade the target range, about 3 miles out from town. Boyd Conyers was one of the party. We were working under Mr. W. J. Mayfield, and we went out in the wagon with him. We left town about 6 o'clock or sunup that morning and did not return to town until dark that evening. I know of my own knowledge that

William Lawson did not have any conversation with Conyers between 8 and 9 o'clock that morning in Monroe, as stated by Lawson, for the reason that I was at work with Conyers, 3 miles from Monroe from sunup in the morning until after sundown in the evening, and Conyers did not go to town during the day.

I further swear that I was one of the parties in charge of the excursion to Gainesville on June 15. I was in charge of the refreshment car. I tried to get Conyers to go on the excursion, but he told me that he had a family to keep up and would have to work. I know of my own knowledge that Conyers did not go on that excursion. The excursion train left Monroe about 7 o'clock in the morning and returned about 9 o'clock that night.

G. W. GILES.

Georgia, Walton County, sworn and subscribed to before me January 4, 1909.

J. O. LAWRENCE,
Notary Public, ex officio Justice of the Peace,
Walton County, Ga.

Now, here follows a statement made by the captain of the national guard company, who is the cashier of the bank; not sworn to. It reads as follows:

MONROE, GA., December 24, 1908.

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that I have known Boyd Conyers for twelve to fifteen years, during the most of which time he has resided here. He has been in my employ a number of times, and during the past year he has been janitor for the Walton Guards, Company H, Second Infantry, National Guard of Georgia, of which I am captain. I secured him for this position on account of his experience in military service, which made him efficient in the matter of care of military property. I have always found "Buddie," as he is known in Monroe, to be honest, reliable, and trustworthy. I have talked with him a number of times about the Brownsville trouble, and he has always told me the same story, to wit, that he had no part in the shooting, and did not know anyone who did; that he was on guard duty; and that he was asleep at the time the difficulty occurred. From my knowledge of him, I do not think he would have taken part in such an affair, for he has always borne the reputation of being a quiet, peaceful, and law-abiding citizen. When the report became current in Monroe that he had confessed to a detective that he took part in the Brownsville shooting, he was very much exercised over it, and came to me and insisted that he had made no such confession, and I was impressed with his sincerity in the matter.

Respectfully, ALBERT B. MOBLEY.

Now, Mr. President, I hazard nothing in saying that this testimony will prove sufficient to firmly establish in the minds of all honest men—I have gotten so that I rather like to use that word myself—to firmly establish in the minds of all "honest" men, from one end of this land to the other, not only that the reports of these so-called "detectives," in so far as they attempt to show confessions and incriminating statements made by Conyers, are base fabrications, without any truth whatever on which to rest, but that the whole work in which they have been engaged is the result of a plot and a conspiracy blacker and more damnable than anything that has been charged against the soldiers themselves, even if the worst that has been said should prove to be the truth; for, atrocious and indefensible as is the crime of murder, more atrocious and more indefensible still is a cold, scheming, calculating plot and conspiracy to fasten the crime of murder upon an innocent man.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. FORAKER. If Senators could but see Boyd Conyers, as I recall him when he appeared upon the witness stand, a young man, a mere lad, who was serving his first enlistment, who had been a member of the battalion only one year, who is spoken of by Herbert J. Browne in his report as a recruit, and who was doubtless regarded by the older soldiers of the battalion as a mere recruit—for so would one appear to a soldier of twenty or twenty-five years' service who was serving in the first year of his first enlistment—if Senators could but see his frank, open, manly face and manner as he testified, manifestly anxious to tell the truth and the whole truth, and withholding nothing whatever, they would conclude with me that he was the last man to be thought of as capable of the plotting of a conspiracy in which he was to involve his older and more influential comrades—a conspiracy that involved the most serious violation of every duty as a soldier, not only for himself, but for everybody else connected with the plot—if Senators could only see what I see—as I now recall him, it would not require any word of argument or of testimony from anybody to show the utter wickedness of these charges against him.

According to the citizens of Monroe, Ga., who have known him all his life, he is a man with a blameless record, enjoying the confidence and respect of every white man, as well as every colored man in that community, and this, according to their testimony, was true of him not only before his enlistment, but is true of him since his return from the army. Is it possible that in one short year in the service under strict discipline he turned to be such a desperado as Mr. Browne and his fellow-conspirators would have us believe; and then instantly turned back again to his former self when he was turned out of the service? If he thus turned criminal, why did he do it?

There is not one word of testimony to show that either he or any member of Company B had the slightest trouble with any citizen of Brownsville. On the contrary, the testimony is uncontradicted and conclusive that no member of that battalion had any trouble with the citizens of Brownsville, except only three or four men of Company C; and it was on account of these troubles of men belonging to Company C, coupled with the fact that Company C had trouble about opening its gun racks, and on account of the delay so occasioned—they were violently broken open—that Major Blocksom intimates in his report that members of Company C probably planned the raid and executed it. That was the only company that had any provocation to do anything of the kind. But the testimony before the Senate committee showed that it was impossible for anybody connected with Company C to have participated in the raid, and all pretence of charging Company C with such responsibility has been long since abandoned.

I will not review the testimony here, but simply content myself with a reference to former speeches in the Senate in which I have called attention to the evidence on this point.

ELMER BROWN.

Now I come to another soldier, Elmer Brown.

Mr. Herbert J. Browne states in his report that Elmer Brown, of Company B, who slept in the corral, furnished him "a list of suspects"—eight names in all.

Elmer Brown unqualifiedly denies that he ever made any such statement to Mr. Browne or anybody else. He makes the following affidavit:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, City of Washington, ss:

AFFIDAVIT OF ELMER BROWN.

Elmer Brown, being first duly sworn, says that he was a member of Company B, Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry, and that he was discharged from that company without honor at El Reno in November, 1906; that he was in Brownsville at the time the shooting affray occurred, August 13–14, on account of which the soldiers were discharged; that he was at that time, and had been for two years prior thereto, on special detailed duty, taking care of the horses of Major Penrose, and acting as his mounted orderly on practice marches and on other occasions when the Major rode.

That on the night of the shooting he was sleeping in the private stable in which the horses of Major Penrose were kept, which stable was situated in what was known as the "corral," about six or seven hundred yards from the barracks in which the men were quartered.

Back in the rear part of the reservation.

Affiant further says that he was asleep when the firing occurred and did not know anything about it until he was awakened by Alfred Williams and told of it. Affiant further says that he has testified fully before the Senate committee and on other occasions that he has no knowledge whatever as to who did the shooting; neither does he know of any one belonging to either of the companies who has any knowledge or who has ever at any time withheld any knowledge with respect thereto; that his statements on these points as heretofore made are absolutely truthful.

Affiant further says since last August he has been employed as a laborer cleaning steam presses at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; that while he was so employed there, some time during the month of July last, a gentleman called upon him, who said he wanted to talk with him about the Brownsville matter. Affiant asked whether he was an officer of the army, and the man replied that he was not an officer, but that he was connected with the army. He said he had been sent to affiant by Judge-Advocate-General Davis. Later affiant called upon Judge-Advocate-General Davis and asked him whether he had sent such a man to him, and the Judge-Advocate-General told him yes, he had sent a Mr. Browne to him. In this way affiant learned the name of the party who thus called upon him.

This party told affiant that he was trying to get information that would enable the President to restore the men to the army, and that he wanted affiant to tell him who did the shooting, and all he knew about it. Affiant told him he had no knowledge on the subject, and that his testimony as theretofore given was full and complete and truthful. Mr. Browne thereupon told him that if he would tell who did the shooting and all about it, he would take affiant's name to the President, and the President would reinstate him in the army.

Affiant further states that Browne talked over the matter at great length, saying among other things that the shooting was done by men belonging to B Company. He said they had found that out, and that George Jackson and Sergeant Reid, who was sergeant of the guard that night, knew all about it.

Later, about the first week in August, as nearly as affiant can recall, Mr. Browne visited him at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing a second time. At this time he had with him a group photograph of the baseball club belonging to Company B. He asked affiant the names of all these men shown in the group, and put the names down, as affiant gave them, on a piece of paper. He had with him, also, the roll of the company, and called off each man's name in turn and asked affiant about it. Affiant answered his questions as well as he could, but affiant told him if he wanted the records of the men he should go to the War Department; that they could be furnished there better than affiant could give them.

At no time and in no way did affiant admit to Browne, or has he ever admitted to anybody else, that he or anybody connected with the battalion had done the shooting, and he insisted in all his answers to Mr. Browne, as he has to everybody else, that he does not know who did the shooting. He was not present in the barracks that night nor with his company until the shooting was all over, and affiant has no knowledge whatever except what he has heretofore testified about.

Affiant denies unqualifiedly that he gave Browne or that he has ever given to anybody else any list of suspects, as stated by Browne in his report shown in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 14, 1908. What affiant refers to as appearing in that report is the following:

"Elmer Brown, Company B, who slept in the corral, furnished the following list of suspects:

"James Bailey, Carolina de Saussure, C. E. Cooper, John Holloman, James (Rastus) Johnson, Henry Jimerson, William Lemons, and J. L. Wilson."

Affiant denies that he ever named any such list, or ever named anyone mentioned in the list as suspected by him of having anything to do with the shooting, or as having knowledge of the shooting. The statement, in other words, made by the Browne report in that respect is a falsehood, without any truth whatever on which to base it so far as anything is concerned that affiant may have said.

Affiant says that since December 14, 1908, as nearly as affiant can now recall—probably about the 21st day of December—this same man called upon him for the addresses of all the men living here in the city that affiant might be able to give him.

He thereupon asked affiant about various things that he claimed had happened in connection with Company B and different members thereof, running back for several years prior to the time of the shooting. As to a number of these matters, affiant had never heard anything about them. He answered as best he could, giving him such information as he could as to the matters about which he did have knowledge or about which he had heard anything.

He thereupon told affiant that they now had positive proof that Sergeant Reid, John Holloman, Carolina de Saussure, and Henry Jimerson and George Jackson were all guilty of participating in the shooting or of having been parties to it, and that they had them all located and could lay their hands on them any time they wanted to. He did not mention in this conversation, or ever at any time in any of his conversations with affiant, the name of Boyd Conyers.

He then stated that in about a month or six weeks the President would be able to put half to two-thirds of the men back in the army, and that if affiant wanted to get back in the army he must tell all he knew.

Thereupon affiant appealed to him to arrange it so he (affiant) could himself go and see the President and prove his innocence.

Does that sound like the talk of a guilty man? This poor soldier appealing to this man who thus goes to him as the President's representative, that he may be allowed to go in person directly to the President and state in his own way his case, not doubting he could prove to the satisfaction of the President that he was innocent, for he felt that if he could talk to the President he could satisfy him that he was not guilty either of participating in the shooting or of keeping any knowledge of it from anybody. But affiant was told by Browne that it would be impossible for him to see the President, for if the President should act on his case alone—if he should see affiant and let him go back in the army—he would have to see every other man and let him go back; that Browne would see the President for affiant, and that affiant would have to tell him about it.

The President could not be reached except through his representative.

Affiant replied that he had no knowledge whatever on the subject that he could give Browne. Affiant asked Browne whether he wanted him to commit perjury. Browne said no, he did not want him to commit perjury, but he wanted him to tell about it; and affiant then told him that he had told all he knew about it, which was nothing. Thereupon Browne left and affiant has not since seen him.

ELMER BROWN.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, City of Washington, ss:

Before me, Edgar L. Cornelius, a notary public in and for the city of Washington, District of Columbia, personally appeared the above-named affiant, Elmer Brown, and made oath to the statement contained in the foregoing affidavit.

[SEAL.] EDGAR L. CORNELIUS,
Notary Public.

JANUARY 7, 1909.

Elmer Brown also testified before the Senate committee. He was an older soldier. At the time of this affray he was serving his sixth enlistment. The official record of this soldier as furnished by the War Department is as follows:

Enlisted May 18, 1892; was honorably discharged as a private of Troop I, Tenth Cavalry, August 17, 1895, upon his own request, at the expiration of three years and three months' service, he having enlisted for five years; character excellent.

Reenlisted November 2, 1895; was discharged as a private of Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, November 1, 1898, on expiration of term of enlistment; character very good.

Reenlisted November 2, 1898; was discharged as a corporal of Company I, Twenty-fifth Infantry, November 1, 1901, on expiration of term of enlistment; character excellent.

Reenlisted November 7, 1901; was honorably discharged as a corporal of Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, November 26, 1902, in connection with the reduction of the army; character excellent.

Reenlisted February 25, 1903; was discharged as a private of Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, February 24, 1907, on expiration of term of enlistment; character excellent.

Reenlisted February 25, 1906; was discharged without honor as a private of Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, November 22, 1906.

It is impossible for him to reach the President, who ordered that disgrace to be put upon him, except only through this man Herbert J. Browne.

Upon this record alone every presumption is in favor of Elmer Brown as against Herbert J. Browne. But we are not without evidence as to who Elmer Brown was. The evidence shows that at the time of this shooting affray he was, and had been for two years, on detailed service, taking care of the horses of Major Penrose and acting as his orderly. Major Penrose testifies that he was a trusty, faithful man in whom he had entire confidence and upon whom he thoroughly relied. Not a breath of suspicion or charge has ever been made against him until now.

Every member of the Military Affairs Committee who can recall him as he appeared on the witness stand will know without citing his record and without any argument in his behalf that what Herbert J. Browne has said of him is an untruthful libel, without any excuse whatever. If the President would only grant the pathetic appeal of this veteran soldier of the Republic and give him a chance to be heard, he would be in better company and in better business than he is when listening to his scheming traducer, and if happily he should be moved to do him justice, the act would add honor to his distinguished career and gladden his heart for all time to come.

And so I might go on as to each and every other man who is attacked by Herbert J. Browne and his fellow-conspirators, with the same result as to each, but it is unnecessary.

Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus.

Especially should that maxim apply where it is shown that the great vital proposition upon which the whole report rests, that Boyd Conyers made a confession, is a lie out of whole cloth, without anything whatever in all the realm of truth on which to base it and without any explanation, except only that the men who were put at this iniquitous and unholy work were anxious to make a report that would secure their retention in the employment that had been given them. It was vital to the continuance of their relations to the Treasury that they should appear to be making progress.

It is impossible to find language with which to fittingly characterize such a procedure as this detective business has been from its incipiency down to the monstrous stages it has reached.

It is atrocious, revolting, shocking to every sense of fairness, justice, and even common decency; and yet, bad as it is, it is no worse than what usually occurs when hired detectives are employed to "work up cases." The reports are full of such comments as the following, viz:

A man who will deliberately ingratiate himself into the confidence of another, for the purpose of betraying that confidence, and while with words of friendship upon his lips he is seeking by every means in his power to obtain an admission which can be tortured into a confession of guilt which he may blazon to the world as a means to accomplish the downfall of one for whom he professes great friendship, can not be possessed of a very high sense of honor or of moral obligation. Hence the law looks with suspicion on the testimony of such witnesses, and the jury should be specially instructed that in weighing their testimony greater care is to be exercised than in the case of witnesses wholly disinterested. (30 Northwestern, 628.)

While there may be nothing in the conduct of a hired private detective to warrant superlative denunciation, his testimony should undoubtedly be scrutinized with caution, as that of a biased witness. The acts of a detective may be "so void of decency, so utterly repugnant to all notions of how an honorable man should conduct himself," that a court will disregard his testimony entirely. (74 Fed., 235; 187 N. Y., 160.)

I think that fits the case.

A super-serviceable detective is very apt to discover in his eagerness to illustrate his fidelity to a self-imposed master what he seeks. (92 Federal, 774.)

When a man sets up as a hired discoverer of supposed delinquencies, when the amount of his pay depends upon the extent of his employment and the extent of his employment depends upon the discoveries he is able to make, then that man becomes a most dangerous instrument. (Sopwith v. Sopwith, 4 S. W., Tr., p. 243, quoted in 70 Ill., 818.)

A person who would engage himself for hire to spy out affairs of that kind and make proof of them is entitled to no credit whatever. (16 Pac. Rep., 282.)

Detectives are employed to get evidence, and they always get it; many times, however, without any facts whatever to sustain it, which is the reason of the suspicion necessarily attaching to this class of testimony. (34 N. Y. App. Div., 460.)

A person employed for money to discover evidence to establish any fact is eager to attain his object, and whether such be the arrangement in fact or not he is very likely to believe, especially in a case like this, where his employer has the deepest interest in his success, that his reward will to a very large extent depend upon the success of his efforts. (39 N. J. Eq., 148.)

I might quote a hundred others just as pertinent, but time forbids it.

EMPLOYMENT OF DETECTIVES.

But there is another feature that needs attention. It appears from the answer of the Secretary of War that contracts were entered into between Herbert J. Browne and William G. Baldwin, on the one part, and the Secretary of War, on the other part, representing the United States, whereby Browne and Baldwin were engaged to employ detectives to secure from the men testimony that would lead to the identification of the participators in the shooting affray.

It appears from the "confidential" letter of Mr. Taft, then Secretary of War, to the President, dated April 16, 1908, that Mr. Browne was known to him as a "journalist of considerable experience," and that W. G. Baldwin "was the head of a large detective agency at Roanoke, Va., serving the three great railways that passed through that town."

He further says:

I have talked with Mr. Baldwin and with Mr. Browne, and they think that unless within thirty days the prospects of success are bright it would be useless to continue the investigation further. If, however, their clews are found as they expect to find them through the use of the large force of detectives in the employ of Mr. Baldwin, then thirty days further may be needed in order to render the proof satisfactory.

In other words, it clearly appears that it was known at the time when the contract of April 16, 1908, was entered into between Browne and Baldwin on the one hand and the Secretary of War on the other, that the Secretary of War, as the head of the War Department, acting on behalf of the Government, was employing a detective agency with the expectation that "a large force of detectives" in the employment of Mr. Baldwin, chief of the agency, would be put to work to pursue these men with a view to securing from them the much desired testimony.

We are further told in this report from the present Secretary of War that there were three of these contracts, each providing for an expenditure of $5,000, or an aggregate of $15,000, and that all the money so contracted to be paid has been paid in accordance with these contracts.

We are further informed that this money has been paid out of an appropriation of $3,000,000, made by the deficiency act of March 3, 1899, the language of which appropriation is as follows:

For emergency fund to meet unforeseen contingencies constantly arising, to be expended at the discretion of the President, $3,000,000.

This appropriation—Senators will kindly note with care—is found under the general subhead "War Department," and under the special subhead of "Military establishment—Contingencies of the army." It was for no other kind of contingencies but "contingencies of the army." I have looked it up, but I did not get it in time to embody it in this manuscript, and I found that the appropriation was made upon the request of the Secretary of War and for the use of the department. Therefore, having been so made, having been so put down in the statute under "War Department," "Military establishment—Contingencies of the army," it was clearly an appropriation made by Congress under its constitutional power to "support" the army, and not under or by virtue of any other power whatever.

It will probably be surprising information to the Appropriations Committee—and I call the attention of the honorable acting chairman of the committee [Mr. HALE] to that, as he sits near me—as it will be to most Senators, that this appropriation, made ten years ago at the close of the Spanish-American war, to enable the President to meet emergency army contingencies such as were then arising in connection with our military establishment, should have been construed to be a permanent appropriation, and that there is still a large unexpended balance out of which payments of the character now under consideration are being made.

Especially so, in view of the fact that the Constitution of the United States provides in the enumeration of the powers of Congress that it shall have power—

To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years.

That is what the Constitution says. It seems, however, that the Constitution suffered in this instance, as it has in a great many others during the last three or four years.

Under this provision of the Constitution, as well as under the general statutory provision on the subject, the appropriation lapsed at the end of the fiscal year of 1901, and no exception of the statute in favor of "permanent" or "specific" appropriations could keep it in force beyond that date. At that time it became the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to carry the unexpended balance to the general fund or apply to Congress for a reappropriation. It was doubtless in view of this fact that the War Department at that time estimated for the further appropriation of $1,000,000, as the report shows of the Secretary of War for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, which estimate was, however, disallowed.

Then what happened? It would be interesting to know—I mean it would be interesting to know how, why, and by whose authority the unexpended balance of this fund has been kept available, and for what variety of purposes and upon what kind of vouchers it has been illegally drawn upon during all these years. Were the men at the head of the War Department, was the President of the United States, were any of the officials charged with the disbursement of these funds ignorant of the constitutional provision I have read? Not one of them.

I thought I would get full detailed information with respect to this fund without resorting to a resolution, but failing in that, I this morning offered a resolution, which the Senate adopted, calling for a detailed itemized statement of all the appropriations made out of this fund. I have been told that during this year, without one whit more authority than there is for the payment of this $15,000, in the neighborhood of $70,000 have been paid out from this fund on "contingencies" of one kind and another.

I also call attention to the fact that it is provided by section 193 of the Revised Statutes, enacted first in 1842, and from that date until now in substantially its present form the law of the land:

SEC. 193. That the head of each department shall make an annual report to Congress, giving a detailed statement of the manner in which the contingent fund for his department, and the bureaus and offices thereunder, has been expended, giving the names of every person to whom any portion thereof has been paid; * * * and the amount of all former appropriations in each case on hand, either in the Treasury or in the hands of any disbursing officer or agent. And he shall require of the disbursing officers, acting under his direction and authority, the return of precise and analytical statements of receipts for all the moneys which may have been from time to time during the next preceding year expended by them, and shall communicate the results of such returns and the sums total, annually, to Congress.

Whether the $3,000,000 fund drawn upon in this case is under the control of the Chief Executive or the Secretary of War, it would seem to be the duty of somebody to make a report with respect to it such as that called for by this section; and this duty so to report is not relieved by section 3690 or any other statute which excepts from the operation of such statutes "appropriations known as permanent or indefinite appropriations." If I should be in error about this, I am rendering an important public service in calling attention to much-needed legislation, of which, I trust, the Committee on Appropriations will take notice.

This appropriation being for the War Department, the report should have been made by the Secretary of War, and he is not relieved of that duty by the fact that the money can be expended only with the approval of the President. The Secretary of War evidently has entertained this view, but so far as I can ascertain no detailed or itemized reports to Congress of expenditures from this fund have been made, but only general reports showing the aggregate sums expended for each year. There is nowhere any statement as to the status of the fund at the end of each year for which the report is made; no detailed statement of any kind.

These general reports or statements are found in the annual reports of the Secretary of War showing the expenditures of the War Department for each fiscal year from its "emergency fund," as, for instance, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, we find under the subhead "Military establishment:"

Emergency fund	$1,040,000.00
Emergency fund, 1901	360,583.00
Emergency fund, 1902	42,362.00
Emergency fund, 1903	76,187.43

Since 1903 a different form of statement has been used, on account of which I am unable to state definitely even aggregate amounts. If I were a member of the Committee on Appropriations I think I could get it; but in no instance is any such itemized statement given, so far as I can discover, as the statute requires.

It would be instructive and may be interesting to have such statements for each of the years, and that is why I offered the resolution which the Senate has adopted. But I pass that for the present because another very interesting question arises, passed upon by the Judge-Advocate-General, we are told, in favor of the availability of this money, as to whether or not, within the true construction of this appropriation of 1899, the securing of testimony by the methods resorted to was to meet an emergency contingency of the army such as the statute contemplated.

What is the ground upon which it is held to be such a contingency? The Secretary of War tells us that Mr. Taft told the President in his confidential letter of date April 16, 1908, that if the bill for the reenlistment of these soldiers which had been introduced by Mr. WARREN (WARNER?) passes—

It will throw upon you (the President) the duty of a further examination into the evidence to determine whether certain of those now discharged ought now to be restored on the ground that they were not parties to the shooting, did not know the persons who did it, and were unable to give any clues to the perpetrators. It becomes your duty, therefore, and that of the department, to make every effort possible to identify the men who did the shooting and to establish the innocence of as many as are innocent among those discharged.

In other words, the "contingency" was the exceedingly remote one that a pending bill, providing that men should be required to prove their innocence of a crime before a judge who had already pronounced them guilty, should be favorably acted upon by the Congress of the United States. And all this in the presence of the fact that there was the most bitter and determined opposition to the measure and that there was another measure pending which provided that all might be reenlisted who cared to reenlist, but that the right to further prosecute before civil or military tribunals should be reserved as to all against whom any evidence might be secured in any manner at any time after such enactment.

But waiving all technical or doubtful objections, and assuming for the sake of the argument that the constitutional provision quoted does not apply, and that the ruling of the Treasury Department that the appropriation is permanent is correct, and that it continues to stand, and will stand, as an available appropriation for such purposes as those for which it was intended until entirely exhausted, the question remains whether such payments as are now under consideration are legitimate and proper to be made from it. It would seem that, granting all I have indicated, they are yet, nevertheless, clearly illegal and in flat violation of the following statutory provisions found at page 368, volume 27, United States Statutes at Large, namely:

That no employee of the Pinkerton Detective Agency or similar agency shall be employed in any government service, or by any officer of the District of Columbia.

This provision was enacted in 1892 and has been in full force and effect ever since. But, inasmuch as it was found in an appropriation bill, it was thought proper in 1893 to reenact it, amended so as to employ the word "hereafter," to the end that there might be no question whatever about its being the continuing law of the land until repealed.

This reenactment was in 1893, and is found at page 591, 27 U. S. Statutes at Large. It reads as follows:

That hereafter no employee of the Pinkerton Detective Agency, or similar agency, shall be employed in any government service or by any officer of the District of Columbia.

This statute is still in force and effect, unrepealed and unqualified. It was in full force and effect at the time when these contracts with Browne and Baldwin were made by the Secretary of War.

In view of these statutes, all these payments are clearly illegal, not only without warrant or authority of law, but in plain violation thereof.

Summarizing: If the testimony taken by Browne and Baldwin and their detectives and submitted to the Senate by the President as exhibits of his message of December 14, 1908, were all truthful, it would be incompetent as proof of guilt, for the reason that upon the facts shown it was not free and voluntary.

2. The testimony I have submitted in answer to these statements shows that they are wholly false in every essential particular, being nothing more than malicious fabrications of the most villainous character.

3. These contracts of employment and all payments under them are utterly invalid.

4. In view of the fact that Browne and Baldwin have apparently induced the President to continue them in service and to pay them money out of the Public Treasury, upon the theory that they were rendering legitimate service when they were not, each and every such payment to them constitutes a clear case of obtaining money under false pretenses, and I call the attention of the law officers of the Government to the fact, as well as to the perjury that has been committed, in order that they may institute appropriate prosecutions.

Finally, in consideration of the general character of this whole miserable business, I feel more keenly than ever that it is the duty of the Congress to put an end, at once and for all time, to the possibility of continuing such outrageous and illegal proceedings by so amending my bill and then passing it as to provide a tribunal before which these men can appear and be heard in their own defense, if there be any person, anywhere, to prefer any charge against any one of them, and where they can be fairly judged by men old enough in service and in years and high enough in rank to be independent of every improper influence.

Before the debate is closed I shall try to find opportunity to show again, as I have heretofore shown, that this bill does not, as the Senator from Massachusetts has contended, infringe upon any right of the President as the Commander in Chief of the Army, and to either answer or obviate by amendment or modification any other objection that may be urged against it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not rise to review any phase of the Brownsville affair. I expressed my views some weeks ago, based exclusively upon the evidence presented in the court-martial and before the Committee on Military Affairs.

The Senators were kind enough to listen to me with great patience, and I have no intention of abusing their indulgence again. I have nothing to retract in the opinions I then expressed. Certainly at present I see no reason to add anything to what I then said.

There is, however, a single point to which I wish to address myself—one raised by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] at the close of the speech to which the Senate has been listening, and that is in regard to the legality of the employment of the two men, Browne and Baldwin, without any reference to the character of their methods or the merits of their work.

The Senator from Ohio read a letter from the Secretary of War written on April 16, 1908. I need not read it again, but I will ask that it be printed at this point in my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The letter referred to is as follows:

[Confidential.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 16, 1908.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The Brownsville investigation before the Senate, while it establishes beyond any reasonable doubt the correctness of the conclusion reached by you on the report of the inspectors and the other evidence, has done nothing to identify the particular members of the battalion who did the shooting or who were accessories before or after the fact. If the bill now pending, introduced by Mr. WARREN, passes, it will throw upon you the duty of a further examination into the evidence to determine whether certain of those now discharged ought not to be restored on the ground that they were not parties to the shooting, did not know the persons who did it, and were unable to give any clues to the perpetrators. It becomes your duty, therefore, and that of the department, to make every effort possible to identify the men who did the shooting and to establish the innocence of as many as are innocent among those discharged.

In pursuit of that purpose I have had a conference with Herbert J. Browne, who, under circumstances not necessary to repeat, made an investigation into the circumstances of the affray, and is a journalist of considerable experience; and with Mr. W. G. Baldwin, the head of a large detective agency at Roanoke, Va., serving the three great railways that pass through that town. I have written to the presidents of the three railways which Mr. Baldwin serves to know whether he is considered by them to be trustworthy, reliable, and skillful, and until I have an affirmative answer from them on this subject I shall not sign the contract. The contract has been prepared by the Judge-Advocate-General. I have talked with Mr. Baldwin and with Mr. Browne, and they think that unless within thirty days the prospects of success are bright, it would be useless to continue the investigation further. If, however, their clues are found, as they expect to find them, through the use of the large force of detectives in the employ of Mr. Baldwin, then thirty days further may be needed in order to render the proof satisfactory. There is, as you will see in the contract, the right to cancel the contract at the end of thirty days, and thus save half of the expense proposed should it turn out that the effort is wholly useless. You will find written upon the back of the contract a formal indorsement and authorization for you to sign in order that the money to satisfy the contract may be withdrawn and paid from the appropriation there mentioned.

Very sincerely, yours, WM. H. TAFT.

The PRESIDENT.

Mr. LODGE. The Secretary of War at that time who wrote that letter was, as is well known, Mr. Taft. The President, of course, is absolutely responsible for what is done by any of his Cabinet officers, but the action taken was advised by the Secretary of War. Mr. Taft is a lawyer eminent at the bar, and he has been a judge distinguished on the bench. I do not believe that he himself would violate or advise anyone else to violate the laws of the United States, and it occurred to me that there must be some reason for the advice which he then gave to the President.

No one has a higher respect than I have for the great lawyers of the Senate, but I hope that I shall not be thought disloyal to the body to which I have the honor to belong if I suggest that there are good lawyers outside of the Senate.

The clause in the appropriation bill under which these expenditures were made was passed in 1899. Therefore, expenditures have been made from it under President McKinley and under President Roosevelt, under Mr. Root as Secretary of War, under Mr. Taft as Secretary of War, and under General Wright as Secretary of War. I feel that I am speaking within bounds when I say that Mr. Root deserves to be considered a great lawyer, and I believe the Senate may possibly in the future have more immediate demonstration of that fact. Mr. Taft's standing at the bar and his reputation on the bench are well known, and General Wright, if I am not misinformed, is a lawyer of the highest standing in the State from which he comes.

Now, Mr. President, to suppose, without any investigation, that eminent public men of this character and standing in the legal profession, supported by the advice of the Judge-Advocate-General of the department, have been engaged for a series of years, since 1899, in fact, in illegally expending the money of the Government is a rather startling proposition. For myself,

I was somewhat surprised to see the suggestion advanced that there has been any illegality in drawing money from the fund.

I can not see what relation the appropriation has to the constitutional provision limiting the raising and supporting of armies to two years, which, as is well known, is based on the famous "mutiny act" of England. This was a fund set aside and given to the War Department to meet unforeseen contingencies. It was interpreted by the War Department as a continuing fund, so interpreted by all the Secretaries I have mentioned, and no voice has ever before been raised in protest against this construction of the statute. If it is illegal now to draw money from that fund, it was illegal in 1901 and has been illegal every year since. The clause which has already been read to the Senate is as follows:

For emergency fund to meet unforeseen contingencies, constantly arising—

Not annually arising, but constantly arising—to be expended at the discretion of the President, $3,000,000.

I do not think a plainer clause was ever put into an appropriation bill. I do not believe more absolute discretion was ever conferred upon the President in the expenditure of any fund. It leaves him the sole judge of the contingency.

Now, from that fund this money has been taken. I do not care to dwell further upon that point. My belief is that, whether the system of appropriating in that way is right or wrong, there is no question that that fund was put at the absolute disposition of the President and the War Department—not for this purpose or that, but for unforeseen contingencies constantly arising. This Brownsville affair was a contingency arising in connection with the discipline of the army. It related solely to soldiers, and nothing else.

I shall pass from that to the other point, about the employment of detectives.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CULBERSON. It is merely for a question.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. I wish to ask the Senator if there is anything in the opinion of the Judge-Advocate-General showing that his attention was especially called to this prohibitory statute alluded to by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LODGE. There is nothing in it, as quoted in the message. I have not his full opinion—that is, I have not seen his full opinion. I have seen only what is in the message, in which he seemed, as I gathered, to rest his advice solely on the ground that the employment of detectives was a contingency within the meaning of the statute.

Now, coming to the detectives employed, Browne's was clearly not an illegal employment, for he was not a detective by profession, and he belonged to no agency. The clause under which the objection to the employment is made is that—

No employee of the Pinkerton Detective Agency, or similar agency, shall be employed in any government service, or by any officer of the District of Columbia.

Therefore the question comes down to the employment of Baldwin. He is the head of a large detective agency. He apparently does the work of three railroads. Railroads are soulless corporations. They are not yet sufficiently advanced to understand that it is iniquitous to have a detective force to look up criminals. They are so hard and uncivilized that they employ detectives, although it may hurt the feelings of the people whom they suspect of crime. He is what I suppose is prettily called in the newspapers a "sleuth." "Sleuth" does not mean a detective, I will say in passing. It means a track or trail, and not the person who tracks or trails. I could not avoid that digression, because the use of the word "sleuth," which means a track or trail to indicate a man or an animal who tracks or trails, is an abuse of language. That is merely a personal confession, and I pass on.

He is a detective and the head of a body of detectives used by the railroads, and apparently he stands well with his employers.

Mr. President, it is with respect to the employment of Captain Baldwin, against which the clause cited by the Senator from Ohio, and which I have read, seems to militate, that I desire to say a few words. The statute is so simple in its language and yet so vague that I wanted, if I could, to discover the intention of Congress in passing it. I believe I am not mistaken in saying that courts often inquire into the intention of Congress when they are interpreting a statute, and it seems to me that it at least was worth looking into to see whether the Judge-Advocate-General of the Army and the Secretary of War had not some ground somewhere for advising action which, at the first glance, appears to be in violation of the statute.

In the first place, let me say that the employment of expert detective services in connection with the apprehension and detection of counterfeiting has been recognized by Congress for a number of years past, in a clause of appropriation, which is executed by the Secretary of the Treasury. It is sufficient to say as to this that the War Department—I have made inquiry on this point—has never, save in time of war, made any use of the force so authorized and maintained, nor has it at any time derived any benefit from the services of its personnel. Apart from the legislation respecting this Treasury secret-service force, the matter was first made the subject of statutory regulation or prohibition in the sundry civil act of 1892, which I will presently cite.

To obtain a correct idea of the scope and operation of the act of 1892, it is necessary to recall the circumstances and incidents which suggested its adoption by Congress. The Homestead strikes were in progress during the summer of that year. There were numerous disturbances and there was forcible opposition to the operation of the laws in Homestead and other places in the vicinity of Pittsburg. Certain employers of labor in Homestead and elsewhere entered into an undertaking with the Pinkerton Detective Agency for procuring the services of very considerable numbers of armed men, who were to be employed in the protection of their establishments from injury, and to secure an immunity from forcible molestation in behalf of their employees.

These Pinkerton forces were not to be used in the performance of detective work, but, as we all remember, as private armed forces, which were recruited and organized in another State and brought into the State of Pennsylvania, where they were armed and employed, not as a part of the sheriff's posse comitatus, or under the direction of the sheriff or other peace officer of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, but as a private armed force for the protection of private property which was alleged to be in danger of spoliation and destruction. This is indicated by the language used in the resolution of Representative Williams of Massachusetts, in a resolution introduced by him on July 6, 1892, as follows:

Whereas the Pinkerton detective or private police force to the number of several hundred is now engaged in an armed conflict at Homestead, Pa., with the late employees of the Carnegie Iron Works at said place, and great loss of human life and destruction of property are likely to result from the same; and

Whereas the Judiciary Committee has been directed by a resolution of the House to investigate the nature and character of the employment of Pinkerton detectives by corporations engaged in interstate commerce: Therefore be it

Resolved, That said committee shall investigate and report on the character of the employment of said forces in the present instance, and the causes and conditions of the sanguinary conflict now going on at Homestead, Pa. (H. Repts., 52d Cong., 2d sess., 1892–3, vol. 3, Rept. 2447.)

The Judiciary Committee of the House was charged with the investigation and rendered its report on February 7, 1893, the concluding words of the report being:

Your committee believe that the practice of employing Pinkerton watchmen or guards by corporations in case of strikes and labor troubles has grown very largely out of the sloth and dilatoriness of the civil authorities to render efficient and prompt protection to persons and property in such cases, but to allow, without the consent of the State and in the first instance, corporations to employ such agencies as the Pinkerton watchmen—in large numbers drawn from other States—is well calculated to produce irritation among the strikers, frequently resulting in hostile demonstrations and bloodshed. Such action upon the part of a corporation or association should never be allowed without the consent first obtained of the State in which the trouble occurs. A contrary course tends to bring the local civil authority into contempt, whereas its employment, its officers appreciating their duty, is the surest guaranty for the protection of life and property and the maintenance of the public peace. Exasperated strikers will not molest or resist the officers of the State when, under exactly similar circumstances, they will assault the watchmen or guards hired by the corporation.

* * * * * * *

Every State may make and enforce whatever police regulation it pleases pertaining to the health, morals, and happiness of its people not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States. No case of concurrent jurisdiction between Congress and the state legislatures is here presented, if indeed such a thing exists in any case.

Your committee, finding Congress without constitutional authority to legislate as hereinbefore set forth, respectfully suggest that it rests with the States to pass such laws as may be necessary to regulate or prohibit the employment of Pinkerton watchmen or guards within their respective jurisdictions. (Ibid., pp. 15, 16.)

Minority reports were submitted and appear as appendices to the general report of the committee.

A similar inquiry was ordered by the Senate, and a report was presented by Senator GALLINGER on February 10, 1893, in which the following was stated as the subject of its inquiry:

In the investigation your committee was confined to three inquiries, to wit: First, the reasons for the creation of organized bodies of armed men for private purposes, their character and uses; where, when, how, and by whom such men have been employed and paid for any services they may have rendered; and under what authority of law, if any, they have been so employed and paid. Second, to consider and report, by bill or otherwise, what legislation, if any, is necessary to prevent further unlawful use or employment of such armed bodies of men for private purposes. Third, to make report as to the more effective organization and employment of the posse comitatus in the District of Columbia and the Territories of the United States for the maintenance and execution of the laws. (S. Repts., 52d Cong., 2d sess., 1892–3, Vol. I, Rept. 1280.)

In concluding its report, the committee says:

Your committee is of opinion that the employment of the private armed guards at Homestead was unnecessary. There is no evidence to show that the slightest damage was done, or attempted to be done, to property on the part of the strikers. True, there was apparently an unlawful assemblage, which refused to obey the authority of a weak and irresolute sheriff and committed acts that can not be defended; but their submission to the governing authority of the State showed that the power resided in the State to execute the laws after the sheriff had failed to invoke the power of his authority, and that order would have been retored without the interference of armed men from another State, brought there clandestinely. Indeed, the bringing of those men greatly excited the populace, called to the scene thousands of men from other localities, and doubtless led to many of the excesses which followed. At the same time there seems to be no excuse for the scenes of disorder and terrorism for which the strikers were themselves responsible. Laboring men should everywhere learn the lesson that they can not better their condition by violating law or resisting lawful authority. They are strong so long as they have the active sympathy of the people on their side; they are weak when they commit acts which shock the sense of justice or violate the principles of right.

The testimony of Robert A. Pinkerton shows that the Carnegie Steel Works opened negotiations with his agency for armed men as early as June 15, or nineteen days before the strike actually occurred.

It is a significant fact that while Mr. Frick had arranged for a conference with the men on the 24th of June, he was at the same time in communication, by long-distance telephone from his office at Pittsburg to their office in New York, with the Pinkerton Detective Agency to supply him armed men, if needed. The query naturally arises, Would not the chances for an amicable adjustment of the differences between the Carnegie Steel Company and the workmen have been improved had the negotiations been freed from preparations to import armed men from Chicago and New York to accomplish the purposes of the great manufacturing concern represented by Mr. Frick? It so seems to your committee, who are further impressed with the belief that if the same effort and money had been expended to secure protection at the hands of the legitimate forces of the municipality, the county and the State, a more speedy adjustment would have been secured and the shedding of blood might have been averted.

* * * * * * *

Whether assumedly legal or not, the employment of armed bodies of men for private purposes, either by employers or employees, is to be deprecated and should not be resorted to. Such use of private armed men is an assumption of the state's authority by private citizens. If the State is incapable of protecting its citizens in their rights of person and property, then anarchy is the result, and the original law of force should neither be approved, encouraged, nor tolerated until all known legal processes have failed.

As to the matter of legislation. The States have undoubted authority to legislate against the employment of armed bodies of men for private purposes, as many of them are doing. As to the power of Congress to legislate, that is not so clear, though it would seem that Congress ought not to be powerless to prevent the movement of bodies of private citizens from one State to another State for the purpose of taking part, with arms in their hands, in the settlement of disputes between employers and their workmen. The probabilities are that all of the States will soon enact statutes on the subject, in which event action by Congress, even if constitutional, will be unnecessary. (Ibid, pp. 13–15.)

Now, Mr. President, I have read enough to show that there was nothing under consideration by Congress at that time except the employment of Pinkerton detectives as a private armed force and armed guard. There was no movement at that time in existence directed against the employment of detectives as a means of discovering crime and bringing criminals to punishment.

The clause of the appropriation bill of 1892 as first recommended for adoption appeared in the following form:

It shall not be lawful for any officer of the Government authorized to make contracts, nor for any officer in the District of Columbia, to contract with any person, firm, or corporation who employ Pinkerton detectives or any other association of men as armed guards—

That was the first form of the resolution.

This, I think, is important as showing further that it was the use of Pinkerton men as a private armed force, and not the legitimate employment of detectives, which was aimed at in the resolution. This is made clear by the remarks of Mr. O'Neill, whom many of us well remember as a Representative from Philadelphia for so many years. In presenting the report of the conference committee to the House of Representatives he said:

But does not the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman] well know that nobody objects to the legitimate use of a Pinkerton detective as such? (He was an old-fashioned man and thought the use of detectives in the discovery and punishment of crime "legitimate.") It is their use as armed guards that is objected to, and it is the sending of these armed guards from one State into another that is objected to; and it is the sending of these armed guards from one State into another that has brought up a protest from every section of this land, and has even resulted in the enactment of a law by the State from which the gentleman comes prohibiting that class of men from coming into that State. It is the armed-guard principle that we protest against. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 52d Cong., 1st sess., p. 7120.)

As the final result the first part of the original resolution was dropped, and with a view to prevent and prohibit the use of private armed forces by the several departments of the Government the following clause of legislation was inserted in the sundry civil bill of 1892:

That no employee of the Pinkerton Detective Agency, or similar agency, shall be employed in any government service or by any officer of the District of Columbia. (Act of August 5, 1892, 27 Stat. L., 368.)

Now, the object of that clause was simply to prevent the use of detective agencies for armed guards, to be transported as a private army from one State to another, and Mr. O'Neill's speech, which I have quoted, shows that that was the uniform opinion of Congress. He expressly disclaimed that it had any intent to interfere with the employment of men on what in those less well-informed days was called the "legitimate use of Pinkerton detectives."

A clause of legislation identical in terms with that above cited was inserted in the sundry civil act for the following year. (Act of March 3, 1893, 27 Stat. L., 591.)

If the enactment first cited be carefully read it will be seen that it does not expressly prohibit the use of detectives in government business where appropriations for such a purpose are available. Except where the word is used in connection with the title "Pinkerton Detective Agency," the term "detective" is not used in the statute, and there, of course, it is merely descriptive. It would seem clear from what has been said that it was the employment of private armed forces which was aimed at in the statute hereinbefore cited and not the use of expert investigators with a view to ascertain and verify questions of fact. This plain intention of Congress can not be disregarded, and it has not been shown by anyone that Captain Baldwin and his assistants come within the definition of the persons whose employment was forbidden by the statute of 1902 or were at all within the intention of Congress in its act of prohibition. In the employment of Messrs. Browne and Baldwin—and we may leave Browne out; there is no question that he is not within the statute—no "detective agency" similar to the Pinkerton Detective Agency was resorted to. An agreement was entered into with two persons, each acting in an individual capacity, the principal one a newspaper man of standing and reputation, as I have always understood. In the operation of this undertaking the personal services of Messrs. Browne and Baldwin were obtained for the conduct of a confidential investigation. The terms "detective" or "detective agency" are neither of them used in either of the contracts so entered into. The services secured were those of persons who were known to possess the requisite skill and experience to warrant the department in committing to their hands the conduct of the inquiry.

Of course it appears in Mr. Taft's letter that he knew Mr. Baldwin was the head of a great agency and that he would use men in his employment. There was no attempt to conceal that fact. The work does not appear in the contracts, but of course that does not affect the character of Mr. Baldwin or what his business was, and the legality of his employment rests on much broader and firmer grounds.

When the question was presented to the department the following conditions existed: As a result of the investigation which had been in progress in the Military Committee of the Senate, of which I have the honor to be a member, during a considerable part of the time which had intervened since the occurrences at Brownsville on August 13–14, 1906, two resolutions were introduced in the Senate. In each of these the President is charged with an important exercise of judgment and discretion. If either of those resolutions had passed, he would have been obliged to exercise his discretion, and it seemed not improbable at that time that one might pass, and he would then have been obliged to restore every man whom he believed innocent. He could not be absolutely satisfied of the innocence of any man unless he could show who the guilty were. The resolutions were introduced with a view to obtain the legislative action of Congress upon the subject to which they related, and a date in the following December was fixed for their consideration. To enable the President to give intelligent and satisfactory execution to either resolution, or to any resolution in pari materia that might be adopted by Congress, it would be necessary for him to obtain information in respect to the participation of the discharged enlisted men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry in the occurrences of August 13–14, 1906.

The ordinary executive instrumentalities, the ordinary military authorities, had not succeeded in identifying the men who, as they believed, had done the shooting. They had not pointed out the particular enlisted men who had taken part, as they believed and as I believe, in the several acts there committed. Considerable time would necessarily be consumed in any kind of investigation to which the President might resort with a view to obtain the information above described. These conditions of fact seemed to bring the case within the operation of the act of March 3, 1899, which provided:

For emergency fund to meet unforeseen contingencies constantly arising, to be expended at the discretion of the President, $3,000,000.

I have already discussed that paragraph which provides for the emergency fund and which the Judge-Advocate-General advised the Secretary of War was available for this particular business. Having determined that the emergency existed, the Secretary of War decided that it was proper to employ these persons as detectives, and so advised the President.

Something has been said, I think, about the clause of the appropriation act for the current year, which we passed last year, and to that I want to call attention briefly. It provides:

No part of any money appropriated by this act shall be used in payment of compensation or expenses of any person detailed or transferred from the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department or who may at any time during the fiscal year 1909 have been employed by or under said Secret Service Division. (Act of May 27, 1908, 35 Stat. L., 328.)

That legislation has no relation, of course, to the detectives employed by the War Department. It applies to the Secret Service, and those officers were not employed in this investigation at all.

Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate. The hour is late. I merely wished to reply to the assertion of the Senator from Ohio that the Secretary of War, and of course the President, who was responsible, had been guilty of illegal action—first, in taking the funds from the appropriation, which I venture to think can not be sustained; and, second, in the employment of Baldwin, in view of the clause contained in the act of 1892. That clause, as I have demonstrated, had no relation to the employment of detectives. It was intended solely to apply to armed guards. The idea of excluding detectives was expressly disclaimed by the gentleman in charge of the bill. The whole debate, every resolution, the report of our committee, the report of the committee of the House, all pointed to its being used in that particular way, for the exclusion of private armed guards, not to prevent inquiry by detectives.

Mr. President, it seems to me to be going pretty far to press the technicality of that statute because Mr. Baldwin happens to be the head of a detective agency and urge that he was excluded under the vague clause put into the appropriation bill of 1892, simply in order to strike at the employment of armed guards, and then to contend further that it should be twisted to mean that it was intended by that act to prevent the employment of any detectives by the Government, when it has never been shown that Baldwin was within the prohibited class. If that is a true interpretation and we proceed to cut off all the people who are called "sleuths," in order to excite odium, and all secret-service men, without any regard to what their duties really are, we shall soon find the Government unable to expose any crimes which the various departments are obliged to prosecute.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], for example, alluded to a decoy letter as if it were the last expression of human depravity. I am not concerned to defend detectives or their methods, either private detectives or public detectives. But it is a necessity of a detective force that they should use certain arts and certain deceptions if they would reach the crimes which they are created to suppress. There is not a week goes by hardly, certainly not a month, that there are not decoy letters sent out by post-office inspectors in order to catch men who are robbing the mails. It is the commonest thing in the world, and are we to be told that we must not protect the mails because the inspectors use decoy letters in their endeavor to catch criminals who are taking money from the mails?

Mr. President, the methods of detection of crime may be very unpleasant. They may be those which no man in his personal capacity would like to pursue and that no honorable man would pursue in the general conduct of business. But if the methods employed in the detection of crime are unpleasant, crime is a great deal more unpleasant than the methods used for its detection, and I for one, Mr. President, think we ought to pause before we assent to the proposition that the President, advised by as eminent a lawyer as was the Secretary of War in 1908 to take this action, was engaged in an illegal act. I can not pretend at this late hour and with no opportunity for anything like proper preparation to do more than to ask that the Senate will consider this question very carefully before it assents to the proposition that men such as I have mentioned—the series of Secretaries of War, the two Presidents—have been engaged in spending a fund in violation of the Constitution and the law, and that the predecessor of the present Secretary of War advised an illegal employment. I think there is sufficient in the history of the law under which it is hoped to maintain that proposition at least to give us pause and cause us to consider the case very carefully.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, it requires so little time to answer the Senator from Massachusetts that I prefer to answer him now. The complete answer is in the fact, known and appreciated by every Senator, that if the Congress of the United States had intended to prohibit the employment of only armed detectives the word "armed" would have been inserted in the statute. It was not so inserted, although in the debate, as the Senator has pointed out, it was discussed, and that point was considered.

Now, having answered the Senator sufficiently, as I think, I want to inquire whether any other Senator desires to speak on the bill, and if not——

Mr. LODGE. Before the Senator proceeds, I want to say that, although he has said he has answered me sufficiently, his answer seems to me to be as insufficient as it is brief.

Mr. FORAKER. I think not.

Mr. LODGE. We have all a right to our own opinion.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no doubt that the Senator has a right to his own opinion and that his opinion is exactly what he states. Mr. President, I am also entitled to my opinion, and I was but expressing my own opinion, and I adhere to it, notwithstanding what the Senator has said.

Now, if no other Senator wants to address the Senate on this measure—and that reminds me to inquire whether or not I asked that Senate bill 5729 should be laid before the Senate before I began to speak. If not, I wish to have that order made now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator did not make the request. Without objection, the bill will be regarded as having been laid before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Does that request displace the unfinished business?

Mr. FORAKER. It does not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It does not displace the unfinished business.

Mr. FORAKER. The unfinished business has been temporarily laid aside, and I am not interfering with it by proceeding to the further consideration of the bill at this time. Does any Senator want to speak on it? If not, I should like to ask Senators when we can take a vote on the bill and all amendments to it that have been proposed or may be offered.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am unable to answer as perhaps the Senator from Ohio would like to have me answer, as two of the members of the Committee on Military Affairs are absent on official duty as Visitors to West Point. I am unable to say when they will complete that duty or when they will be ready to deliver the speeches of which notice has been given of an intention to do.

Mr. FORAKER. To what Senators does the Senator allude?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Ohio, I think, perhaps, recalls them.

Mr. FORAKER. I recall the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRAZIER].

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRAZIER] stated that he was unable on the day he was addressed concerning it to make a speech, but he would make it at a later time.

Mr. FORAKER. Is there any other Senator who has given notice?

Mr. WARREN. I do not think that other Senators have given notice. I have understood that one or two others would desire to make some remarks. The intention was to give the Senator from Tennessee the floor whenever he should seek it, and when his address was made the others would determine whether they would continue the debate or not.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. McLAURIN. Lest I may be considered as being precluded by not saying anything at this time, I will say to the Senator from Ohio that, while I may not make a speech upon the bill, it was my intention to submit to the Senate some observations in respect to it before it was voted on. I do not know that I shall do so, but I do not want to be understood as having been cut off by my silence.

Mr. FORAKER. I know only the Senator from Mississippi, who has just now given notice that he may desire to speak, and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRAZIER], who is absent, who have expressed any desire to discuss these measures. I spoke to the Senator from Tennessee last week here one day before he left—I do not remember just when it was—and he thought he would be able to speak at almost any time after he returned.

Now, that being the case, I do not see why we may not fix a day when we can have a vote. If we could fix a day, then we could all conform to it. I do not want to have to stay here hour after hour, every minute of time.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it has been my intention to speak on this bill, but I am rather disinclined now to do so and rather of the opinion that I will not. There is one thing, however, I want at this time to say in regard to it.

The policy of the department in using this money has grown up, but whether it is technically within or technically without the law I do not deem it necessary to discuss at this time. It has certainly grown up and has been a custom. To my mind the proposition of sending this case to a tribunal, as proposed by the Senator from Ohio, has no direct connection with the question whether the appropriation has been improperly used or not.

I simply want to make this statement, disassociating the two, and expecting to vote for the measure that is the best and most practical method of disposing of the question; at least, so far as I am concerned, it is not to be considered in any manner as a support of what has been said upon the other proposition.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish to say, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota, that I have offered this proposed amendment only because I learned that this further investigation was being conducted, and I thought it was all right to have the matter probed further if anybody thought that there was any possibility of finding out who did do that shooting. But I thought if there was any further probing it ought to be done in a way that would allow these men to know what was being done, and give them an opportunity to appear somewhere to present their defense against these charges. It seems to me utterly infamous that men should be hounded as it seems these men are—poor, ignorant, helpless men—all kinds of stories being fabricated, and there ought to be a tribunal somewhere before which they may appear.

In the bill as I drew it I think there is a provision which is better than what I now propose, and I offered my amendment with great reluctance only to meet this new feature of the case. The provision in the bill as originally drafted was that if at any time after these men are reinstated anybody should be able to produce any testimony tending to implicate anybody, the right should be reserved to try them before a court-martial or before a civil tribunal, as the case might seem to require. These men would be under the eye of their officers and they could be ordered before a court-martial at any moment, or they could be turned over to the civil authorities at any moment, and the trial would be conducted fairly, according to the rules and regulations of the army, or according to the laws of the land, if civil. It seems to me that is a better way, and I would rather have the bill passed in that form. But I prepared the amendment simply out of consideration for a new situation that had not arisen when I drafted the bill.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I simply wish to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that if he does reach an agreement by which some time certain shall be fixed for voting on this measure it would be well to adopt a practice which, I think, has quite generally obtained here in the Senate of providing for a few minutes to any Member who may wish to explain his position. I do not intend or contemplate making a speech, but there are a few propositions on which I wish to place in the RECORD my view. I was a member of the committee during the time the testimony was being taken, and while I reached a conclusion quite satisfactory to my own mind that some of these men must have done the shooting, I reached also the conclusion that only a comparatively few of them were engaged in it or knew of it, and that the very great majority of them were entirely innocent of any participation in it or knowledge of it. Therefore I have felt all the time that the men who are innocent, or who I believe to be innocent, ought not to be subjected to punishment, and there ought to be some tribunal where there would be an opportunity to have the matter fully investigated.

I have not gone over the bill of the Senator from Ohio carefully, but it is a better plan, I understand, and more nearly conforms to my idea of what should be done than the provisions of the bill favored by a majority of the committee. On that point I wish to submit a few observations, and on the further proposition, as contended for by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] in his very able speech the other day, that it is incongruous to provide for the reenlistment of these men without infringing on the prerogative of the President. I can not consent to that proposition, and I wish at some time for a few minutes the indulgence of the Senate to give my views upon it.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I expect to undertake to make an answer to the Senator from Massachusetts on that proposition. I did not undertake to do so to-day, because the speech I did make occupied as much time as I thought I ought to take of the Senate in one day. But there is that proposition which I have heretofore discussed to my satisfaction and about which I have no question whatever in my mind, and there are a number of other propositons that I want to address the Senate on before the debate is concluded. I am waiting, however, until Senators are heard on the other side.

I suppose in the advocacy of my bill I would naturally be entitled to close the debate. At any rate, before we get through with the debate I want to point out upon authority why it is that, in my judgment, the President has not anything more to do with the enlistment of men than the Senator himself has—not as much, because the Senator is a member of Congress, and as such does have some say about who shall be enlisted. The President is Commander in Chief of the Army, and as such can send it here, there, yonder, and everywhere, as he may see fit, but he has no more right to say than the man in the moon how the army shall be raised, who shall be enlisted in the army, or how it shall be mustered out, except only as Congress provides. That I shall address myself to at the proper time.

But the session is rapidly drawing to a close; my voice will soon be heard in this Chamber no more forever in all probability, and I want to ask my brother Senators to let me have a vote on the bill. I shall go away happier if you do.

I think under all the circumstances, in view of the way the bill has heretofore been dealt with, and the agreement generally under which it went over until this session, Senators ought to agree with me upon some date. Put it at the end of next week, if you will. I appeal to the Senator from Wyoming, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. I have tried to accommodate everybody heretofore, and I want somebody to try to accommodate me now.

Mr. WARREN. I know the Senator from Ohio will admit that we have all undertaken to accommodate him also.

Mr. FORAKER. Well, I have not entered any complaint.

Mr. WARREN. I think I will be unable to-day to propose any time, because the Senator can see as well as I do that there is, as there should be, very wide interest in this subject. There are a good many Senators who want to be heard on it, and I think it would be wrong for me to agree to a date now in the absence of a part of the Committee on Military Affairs, who are performing a duty that it was irksome for them to undertake. We were able to get only a small number of the committee to go, because the Military Committee is a working body. In their absence, and without knowing how long they will be engaged, I shall not feel willing to consent to a date at this time.

Mr. FORAKER. I will speak for the Senator from Tennessee. I had a conversation with him about it. He said he could speak at almost any time after he got back. That is what I understood him to say. I do not suppose he will be absent longer than this week. He is simply a visitor at West Point, and I understand that heretofore they have not taken longer than a week.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator on that point that we have entered upon a new régime concerning the visit to West Point. The House sent us a bill which we finally agreed upon that has changed the mode and manner of it. The examinations previously were held at the close of the year, when all the arrangements were made. I am unable to say, because I have not been informed since the arrival of the members there, how much work they will have to do or how long it will take. I think if the Senator will permit the matter to go over, when they get back we will be able to arrive at some conclusion, but I do not feel willing to-day to agree upon a date.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to have an agreement for an early date when we can take a vote. I do not want to have it so early but that everybody can be heard who desires to be heard. I think the Senator from Oregon made a good suggestion, that the last day be devoted to speeches of half an hour, or whatever time may be agreed upon.

Mr. FULTON. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. FORAKER. Fifteen minutes he now suggests. I will let it go over, then, for the day.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. M. C. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On January 11:

S. 1729. An act for the relief of Alice M. Stafford, administratrix of the estate of Capt. Stephen R. Stafford.

On January 12:

S. 1559. An act for the relief of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana.

RELIEF OF EARTHQUAKE SUFFERERS IN ITALY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No.

649), which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit a report of the Secretary of State, submitting a translation of a note from the ambassador of Italy at this capital, in which, under instruction of his Government, he expresses his desire to convey to the Congress of the United States the lively sentiments of the gratitude of the Italian Government for the sympathy shown by that body in view of the disasters that have devastated Sicily and Calabria, and for the generous appropriation made for the relief of the sufferers.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 12, 1909.

THIRTEENTH AND SUBSEQUENT CENSUSES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16954) to provide for the Thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. LONG. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. LONG, Mr. HALE, and Mr. MCENERY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas desire to have a reprint of the bill?

Mr. LONG. I desire to have a reprint of the bill, with the Senate amendments numbered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMISSIONS TO RETIRED OFFICERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 653) to authorize commissions to issue in the cases of officers of the army retired with increased rank and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motoin was agreed to, and the Vice-President appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 13, 1909, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 12, 1909.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

George F. White, of Georgia, to be United States marshal for the southern district of Georgia. A reappointment, his term having expired on December 12, 1908.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Lon E. Foote, of Colorado, whose term will expire January 17, 1909, to be register of the land office at Hugo, Colo. (Reappointment.)

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Commander Washington I. Chambers to be a captain in the navy from the 23d day of December, 1908, vice Engineer in Chief John K. Barton, retired.

Lieut. Thomas A. Kearney to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 17th day of December, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander Charles M. McCormick, promoted.

William P. Sedgwick, a citizen of New York, and late a midshipman in the navy, to be an ensign in the navy from the 5th day of January, 1909, in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress approved on that date.

POSTMASTERS.

COLORADO.

Austin M. Reed to be postmaster at Silverton, Colo., in place of Austin M. Reed. Incumbent's commission expired April 12, 1908.

CONNECTICUT.

William E. Gates to be postmaster at Glastonbury, Conn., in place of William E. Gates. Incumbent's commission expired January 9, 1909.

Tudor Gowdy to be postmaster at Thompsonville, Conn., in place of Tudor Gowdy. Incumbent's commission expired January 9, 1909.

DELAWARE.

Irwin M. Chipman to be postmaster at Seaford, Del., in place of Edward F. Prettyman. Incumbent's commission expires January 14, 1909.

INDIANA.

Hattie Yarger to be postmaster at Wanatah, Ind. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

Shad Young to be postmaster at Cicero, Ind., in place of John A. Hall, resigned.

IOWA.

Hays H. McElroy to be postmaster at Vinton, Iowa, in place of George K. Covert. Incumbent's commission expired December 12, 1908.

Edgar O. Winter to be postmaster at Redfield, Iowa, in place of Edgar O. Winter. Incumbent's commission expired January 9, 1909.

KANSAS.

Eva M. Baird to be postmaster at Spearville, Kans. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

Clarence P. Dutton to be postmaster at McCracken, Kans. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

Guy A. Swallow to be postmaster at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., in place of Laura Goodfellow, removed.

KENTUCKY.

W. S. Griffith to be postmaster at Benton, Ky., in place of James H. Ford, deceased.

William J. Wade to be postmaster at Smiths Grove, Ky. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

LOUISIANA.

John Dominique to be postmaster at Bastrop, La., in place of John Dominique. Incumbent's commission expires January 31, 1909.

Francis S. Norfleet to be postmaster at Lecompte, La. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

MAINE.

Jacob F. Hersey to be postmaster at Patten, Me., in place of Jacob F. Hersey. Incumbent's commission expires January 23, 1909.

MICHIGAN.

Ben F. McMillen to be postmaster at Tekonsha, Mich., in place of Justin A. Harsh. Incumbent's commission expires January 27, 1909.

MINNESOTA.

Frank E. Bardwell to be postmaster at Excelsior, Minn., in place of Frank E. Bardwell. Incumbent's commission expired January 9, 1909.

Elias Steenerson to be postmaster at Crookston, Minn., in place of Elias Steenerson. Incumbent's commission expired December 12, 1908.

MISSISSIPPI.

David A. Adams to be postmaster at Iuka, Miss., in place of Mary G. Stone. Incumbent's commission expires January 31, 1909.

MISSOURI.

J. E. Duncan to be postmaster at Carothersville, Mo., in place of Charles A. Crow, resigned.

Warren T. Myers to be postmaster at Warsaw, Mo., in place of Warren T. Myers. Incumbent's commission expires February 9, 1909.

MONTANA.

C. L. Gayle to be postmaster at Manhattan, Mont. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

NEBRASKA.

James W. Fairfield to be postmaster at Mason City, Nebr. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

William A. Grant to be postmaster at Coleridge, Nebr. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

Lucy K. Partridge to be postmaster at Kenesaw, Nebr. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

NEW YORK.

Isaac Decker to be postmaster at Williamson, N. Y., in place of Isaac Decker. Incumbent's commission expired January 9, 1909.

Fred A. Green to be postmaster at Copenhagen, N. Y., in place of Fred A. Green. Incumbent's commission expired January 9, 1909.

John W. Hedges to be postmaster at Pine Plains, N. Y., in place of Jay Jackson. Incumbent's commission expired December 14, 1908.

George A. McKinnon to be postmaster at Sidney, N. Y., in place of George A. McKinnon. Incumbent's commission expired December 14, 1908.

William A. Serven to be postmaster at Pearl River, N. Y., in place of William A. Serven. Incumbent's commission expired December 13, 1908.

OHIO.

William W. Reed to be postmaster at Kent, Ohio, in place of William W. Reed. Incumbent's commission expires January 20, 1909.

OKLAHOMA.

James M. Lusk to be postmaster at Dewey, Okla. Office became presidential January 1, 1908.

Mary H. McBrian to be postmaster at Ryan, Okla. Office became presidential January 1, 1908.

Philo R. Smith to be postmaster at Wakita, Okla. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

OREGON.

Wilbur W. McEldowney to be postmaster at Forest Grove, Oreg., in place of Homer C. Atwell. Incumbent's commission expires January 31, 1909.

Charles W. Parks to be postmaster at Roseburg, Oreg., in place of Charles W. Parks. Incumbent's commission expired December 8, 1908.

PENNSYLVANIA.

David L. Barton to be postmaster at Mercer, Pa., in place of Charles Clawson. Incumbent's commission expired December 15, 1908.

Alexander H. Ingram to be postmaster at Oxford, Pa., in place of Thomas D. Alexander. Incumbent's commission expired December 15, 1908.

Henry G. Moyer to be postmaster at Perkasie, Pa., in place of Henry G. Moyer. Incumbent's commission expires January 31, 1909.

PORTO RICO.

Jose Carrera to be postmaster at Humacao, P. R., in place of Jose Carrera. Incumbent's commission expired December 14, 1908.

TEXAS.

E. P. Butler to be postmaster at Cuero, Tex., in place of William Drawe. Incumbent's commission expired January 20, 1907.

Charles F. Darnall to be postmaster at Llano, Tex., in place of Charles F. Darnall. Incumbent's commission expired December 12, 1908.

Newton H. Eades to be postmaster at Blossom, Tex. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

Hugh E. Exum to be postmaster at Shamrock, Tex. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

Frederick Loudon to be postmaster at Fredericksburg, Tex., in place of James Larson, resigned.

Ben Lowenstein to be postmaster at Rockdale, Tex., in place of E. J. M. Hopkins. Incumbent's commission expired December 7, 1907.

John S. McEldowney to be postmaster at Midlothian, Tex., in place of John S. McEldowney. Incumbent's commission expired December 12, 1908.

U. S. Weddington to be postmaster at Childress, Tex., in place of Frankie Houssels. Incumbent's commission expired April 21, 1908.

VIRGINIA.

Howard P. Dodge to be postmaster at Manassas, Va., in place of Howard P. Dodge. Incumbent's commission expires February 27, 1909.

John W. Gregg to be postmaster at Purcellville, Va. Office became presidential October 1, 1908.

WASHINGTON.

F. W. Martin to be postmaster at Cle Elum, Wash., in place of Harry C. Bilger. Incumbent's commission expired December 14, 1908.

William L. Shearer to be postmaster at Toppenish, Wash., in place of William L. Shearer. Incumbent's commission expired December 14, 1908.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Harry W. Smith to be postmaster at Middlebourne, W. Va. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 12, 1909.

SUPERVISING INSPECTOR OF STEAM VESSELS.

Daniel J. Dougherty, of Pennsylvania, to be supervising inspector of steam vessels for the seventh district, in the Steamboat-Inspection Service.

CONSUL.

James W. Johnson, of New York, to be consul of the United States of class 7 at Corinto, Nicaragua.

ASSISTANT ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

James A. Fowler, of Tennessee, to be Assistant Attorney-General.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Fred C. Cubberly, of Florida, to be United States attorney for the northern district of Florida.

SUPREME COURT OF PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Sherman Moreland, of New York, to be associate justice of the supreme court of the Philippine Islands.

APPOINTMENT IN THE ARMY.

MEDICAL CORPS.

Col. George H. Torney, Medical Corps, to be surgeon-general, with the rank of brigadier-general, for a period of four years from January 14, 1909.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Commander James C. Gillmore to be a captain in the navy.

The following-named citizens to be second lieutenants in the United States Marine Corps:

Wilbur Thing, a citizen of Maine;
Edwin H. Brainard, a citizen of Connecticut;
Alfred A. Cunningham, a citizen of Georgia;
Alley D. Rorex, a citizen of Alabama;
Samuel M. Harrington, a citizen of the District of Columbia;
Harold L. Parsons, a citizen of New York;
Chester L. Gawne, a citizen of New York;
Dwight F. Smith, a citizen of Vermont;
Thomas E. Thrasher, jr., a citizen of Texas;
Ernest A. Perkins, a citizen of Michigan;
Randolph T. Zane, a citizen of Pennsylvania;
Clarence C. Riner, a citizen of Wyoming;
Leon W. Hoyt, a citizen of Ohio;
David S. Combes, a citizen of the District of Columbia;
Julian C. Smith, a citizen of Maryland;
Alfred McC. Robbins, a citizen of the District of Columbia;
Charles J. Miller, a citizen of Wisconsin;
Otto Becker, jr., a citizen of Missouri;
Leander A. Clapp, a citizen of Massachusetts;
William S. Harrison, United States Marine Corps;
Robert W. Voeth, a citizen of Kansas;
Thomas S. Clark, a citizen of New York;
Clarence E. Nutting, a citizen of Massachusetts;
Bernard L. Smith, a citizen of Virginia;
Edward A. Blair, a citizen of Maryland;
Edward M. Reno, a citizen of Pennsylvania;
Joseph C. Fegan, a citizen of Texas;
Adolph B. Miller, a citizen of the District of Columbia;
Armor S. Heffley, a citizen of Indiana;
Joseph D. Murray, United States Marine Corps;
Woolman G. Emory, a citizen of Maryland;
George H. Osterhout, jr., a citizen of Maine;
William J. Platten, a citizen of Wisconsin;
John Q. Adams, a citizen of Maryland;
Francis T. Evans, a citizen of Ohio;
Charles G. Sinclair, a citizen of Virginia;
Allen E. Simon, a citizen of Pennsylvania;
Samuel P. Budd, a citizen of Pennsylvania;
Donald F. Duncan, a citizen of Missouri;
Alexander A. Vandegrift, a citizen of Virginia;
Ralph E. Davis, a citizen of Illinois;
Harry W. Weitzel, a citizen of Kentucky;
Clarence W. Alger, a citizen of South Dakota;
Sidney N. Raynor, a citizen of New York;
Frederick R. Hoyt, a citizen of New Hampshire;
James T. Reid, a citizen of South Carolina; and
Fred S. N. Erskine, a citizen of Massachusetts.

POSTMASTERS.

GEORGIA.

William R. Watson to be postmaster at Lithonia, Ga.

INDIANA.

Charles A. Frazee to be postmaster at Rushville, Ind.

KANSAS.

James W. Crawford to be postmaster at Little River, Kans.
Ulysses S. Davis to be postmaster at Morrill, Kans.
Bert Fancher to be postmaster at Claflin, Kans.
James Hall, jr., to be postmaster at Miltonvale, Kans.

KENTUCKY.

James M. Wilson to be postmaster at Falmouth, Ky.

MAINE.

Roy M. Hescock to be postmaster at Monson, Me.
John C. Nichols to be postmaster at South Windham, Me.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Charles M. Hoyt to be postmaster at Haverhill, Mass.
Frederic Robbins to be postmaster at Watertown, Mass.

MICHIGAN.

Oliver D. Carson to be postmaster at Galesburg, Mich.
Frank A. Kenyon to be postmaster at East Jordan, Mich.
Newton E. Miller to be postmaster at Athens, Mich.
Maynard Palmer to be postmaster at River Rouge, Mich.

MINNESOTA.

Charles H. Hamilton to be postmaster at St. Louis Park, Minn.
Charles A. Lee to be postmaster at Morris, Minn.
John P. Lundin to be postmaster at Stephen, Minn.
William H. Smith to be postmaster at Cambridge, Minn.

MISSOURI.

Edwin S. Brown to be postmaster at Edina, Mo.
Otis M. Gary to be postmaster at Doniphan, Mo.
Bayless L. Guffy to be postmaster at Hayti, Mo.

NEBRASKA.

Charles W. Gibson to be postmaster at Litchfield, Nebr.

NEW YORK.

Henry W. Bischoff to be postmaster at Chappaqua, N. Y.
Robert N. Hunter to be postmaster at Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
William Hutton, jr., to be postmaster at Nanuet, N. Y.
Harry R. Porter to be postmaster at Sonyea, N. Y.

OHIO.

James R. Hicks to be postmaster at Amelia, Ohio.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Marcellus J. B. Brooks to be postmaster at Driftwood, Pa.
Margaret W. Buchanan to be postmaster at Scalp Level, Pa.
Henry Feindt to be postmaster at Lykens, Pa.
Matthew P. Frederick to be postmaster at Gallitzin, Pa.
Christian E. Geyer to be postmaster at Catawissa, Pa.
William S. Gleason to be postmaster at Johnsonburg, Pa.
John Gowland to be postmaster at Philipsburg, Pa.
William Krause to be postmaster at Richland Center, Pa.
William M. Toy to be postmaster at Austin, Pa.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Ida A. Calhoun to be postmaster at Clemson College, S. C.
James A. Cannon to be postmaster at Fountain Inn, S. C.
James G. Harper to be postmaster at Seneca, S. C.
Arthur L. King to be postmaster at Georgetown, S. C.
Julia E. De Loach to be postmaster at Ninety Six, S. C.
Roberta McAulay to be postmaster at Woodruff, S. C.

TEXAS.

Lyman E. Robbins to be postmaster at Quanah, Tex.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Lynn Kirtland to be postmaster at Sistersville, W. Va.

WISCONSIN.

Charles E. Bartlett to be postmaster at Cameron, Wis.
George M. Carnachan to be postmaster at Bruce, Wis.
James Carr to be postmaster at Bangor, Wis.
Myron W. De Lap to be postmaster at Abbottsford, Wis.
Frank K. Havens to be postmaster at Prescott, Wis.
Elizabeth K. Nevins to be postmaster at Bloomington, Wis.
Irwin R. Nye to be postmaster at Wittenberg, Wis.
Alfred S. Otis to be postmaster at Maiden Rock, Wis.
Matthew O'Regan to be postmaster at National Home, Wis.
James W. Simmons to be postmaster at Corliss, Wis.
John C. Southworth to be postmaster at Whitehall, Wis.

WITHDRAWALS.

Executive nominations withdrawn from the Senate January 12, 1909.

POSTMASTERS.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

J. R. Calder to be postmaster at Edgemont, in the State of South Dakota.

John D. Cotton to be postmaster at Parker, in the State of South Dakota.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 12, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CHALMETTE NATIONAL CEMETERY.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House documents 1179 and 226, on a new roadway to Chalmette (La.) National Cemetery, be reported back from the Committee on Military Affairs, and reference of the same changed from that committee to the Committee on Appropriations, which committee has jurisdiction over appropriations for national cemeteries. This refers to a change in the boundaries.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, do I understand this is merely a change of reference that is asked for?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is all.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the change of reference will be made to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection.

BANKRUPTCY ACT.

Mr. TIRRELL, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, reported the bill (H. R. 21929) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, as amended by act approved February 5, 1903.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent in this connection that the minority of the committee may have one week within which to file their views.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 25392—the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, by action of the House on Saturday last, debate on this bill is limited to two hours, one half to be controlled by the majority and the other half by the minority. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there has been considerable discussion in the House and throughout the country in reference to a change of the existing rules of the House. It is not my purpose to discuss, in the fifteen minutes allotted to me, the existing rules at all, but the other day we heard two very distinguished Members of considerable length of service in the House, each of whom suggested a change of rules which in each case seemed to the Member to be the desirable change of rules necessary. The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] made the suggestion that the method of changing the rules should be by permitting one-fifth of the membership of the House, or possibly of those present, to demand that any bill in the House should be instantly placed on its passage on a roll call, adding that the same privilege should be extended to the leader of the minority; and this, Mr. Chairman, to be done for the purpose of permitting the expedition of business in the House. There is, in my opinion, no proposition ever submitted to the House in reference to a change of rules which has proved so obstructive to legislation as the suggestion offered.

Imagine the situation during the last session of Congress if the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], the then leader of the minority, had the right on demand to commence with bill No. 1 of the House, going down as far as he could get toward bill No. 25000, demanding a roll call on each bill as a privileged matter! Yet that was the suggestion seriously made to the House by a Member of long standing in the House, who properly prided himself on the fact that he came here many years ago. Nor would such a rule if in force be to the interest of the minority so far as actual legislation is concerned. It is to be noted, Mr. Chairman, that the suggestion of the gentleman from New York is toward eliminating debate in the House. He had reference in his mind to a minority putting the majority in a hole in the House. But supposing the rule should be in force, and at the next session of the House, when we have before us a tariff bill, one-fifth or 20 per cent of the Republican Members of the House should demand a roll call on the tariff bill without consideration, without debate, without amendment. It might be a desirable thing from the point of view of some Members of the House, but would any gentleman here seriously favor that that should be done, as suggested by the gentleman from New York, at the request of one-fifth of the membership of the House, to vote upon the passage of a great tariff bill without debate, without amendment, without opportunity for consideration? The mere suggestion seems to me to be sufficient to eliminate the proposed amendments of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, is not it practically true that, on the suggestion of the majority, the currency bill as finally passed was adopted practically without amendment or opportunity of amendment?

Mr. MANN. Well, does the gentleman approve of it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. MANN. Then, if the gentleman does not approve of it, why does he call it to my attention for the purpose of proving the desirability of a rule permitting any bills to be passed that way?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has been criticising a suggestion of what might be done at the instance of the minority leader, and yet he supported a rule that made it possible to do it at the suggestion of the majority. What is the difference?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Was it not a rule of the minority leader?

Mr. MANN. No; the gentleman may give an instance, but when asked if he approves of it he says he does not, and yet does he approve of the suggestion of his colleague that any bill may be presented for passage at the request, not of the majority of the House, but at the request of one-fifth of the membership of the House, or at the request of one Member of the House, the leader of the minority? Now, Mr. Chairman, having called attention to the suggestion——

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I only have fifteen minutes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Very well; I only thought the gentleman did not state the proposition correctly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says I did not state the proposition correctly. Very likely not. I stated it to the best of my ability. Now, I wish to call attention to another amendment, worked out in careful detail by one of the Members of this House, who, in my opinion, is as well posted on the rules of the House as any Member in it, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]. I regret that in his discussion of the rules of the House the other day he did not discuss his own rule. I did not have the honor to hear all of his speech then, but this morning I read it in the RECORD, and I supposed there would be an explanation of the rule. I wish to call attention, in the few moments which I now have, to what the effect would be, or might be, by the adoption of this rule so carefully worked out by this distinguished parliamentarian, who knows the rules as well as anyone in the House does, in my opinion. His rule proposes that there shall be set apart one day in each week during the session of Congress for the consideration of certain bills on the House and Union Calendars and not otherwise privileged; that on those days one day in the month is to be set aside for the consideration of bills on the House Calendar or bills on the House Calendar having preference. The other Tuesdays are to be for bills on the Union Calendar. Under the proposed amendment the House must commence the consideration of these bills immediately after the reading of the Journal, without any other business.

The rule provides on calendar Tuesday, except as provided in clauses 8 and 9 in that rule, no business shall be in order except prayer by the Chaplain, reading and approval of the Journal, business on the calendar of the Committee of the Whole, and business on the House Calendar, provided that business under clause 61 of Rule XI, or under clause 9 of Rule XIV, shall not be in order. Under this proposed rule it would not be possible for the House on these days to transact any business except the business suggested until the time of adjournment came or after the hour of 4.45. The House could not receive a conference report; it could not act upon a conference report; it could not in any way dispose of a conference report; it could not adjourn even if a Member of the House should die on the floor of the House; it could not take a recess if the Capitol should be on fire——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois that I provided for just such contingencies on motion of a two-thirds vote and also for reverting to the regular order of business in case those calendars are exhausted.

Mr. MANN. I will endeavor to explain to the satisfaction of the gentleman that he has provided no such rule.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman yield to me? I have just come in. I understood the gentleman to state I proposed that the same number required to order the yeas and nays—that is, one-fifth of those present—should have the right to move the consideration of any measure, and that a vote should be taken on the motion without debate. I did not make it an absolute condition that the vote should be taken without debate. Whether debate should be allowed and the extent of it would always be under the control of the House.

Mr. MANN. How would they get a vote if the majority had unlimited debate?

Mr. COCKRAN. Nobody contends for a moment, Mr. Chairman, that these other rules, cutting short debate, should be removed from the control of the majority.

Mr. MANN. Unless the gentleman's proposed rule would force a measure to debate, it amounts to nothing, and if it does it permits the cutting off of debate absolutely.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I must ask the gentleman to excuse me, as I was not present when he made his statement. I supposes he does not want to criticise anything that was not actually said. All that I contend for is that the majority in control of the House should always be held to show that it is a majority, and that some appreciable proportion of the membership of the House, not necessarily one-fifth—a majority, if you choose—in some way or other ought to be given power to move consideration of a measure and to get a vote on that proposal, the extent of debate, if any, always being in control of the majority present. That was my contention.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will properly revise his remarks when they appear in the RECORD.

Mr. COCKRAN. They will be in the RECORD to-morrow. I have been away.

Mr. MANN. Referring to what the gentleman said on the floor of the House——

Mr. COCKRAN. It is entirely my fault that the remarks are not in the RECORD now. They will be in the RECORD to-morrow morning.

Mr. MANN. I am not criticising the gentleman in that respect.

Here would be the first situation that would arise under the proposed rule of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]: This morning there is not a quorum in the House. Under the rule proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, if we should choose now to make a point of no quorum in the House, you could not even have a call of the House.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Why not?

Mr. MANN. Because the call of the House is business of the House.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. That is a motion which is permitted under the general rules. None of the general rules are suspended.

Mr. MANN. Oh, here is the proposed rule of the gentleman, providing, in clauses 8 and 9 of the rule, that no business shall be in order except prayer by the Chaplain, reading and approving of the Journal, and business on the House and Union Calendars, which may be considered under the rule, and if there is no quorum in the House, the House can not proceed to a call of the House, because that is business.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman may be correct. It was my object in introducing this rule that small points like that should be pointed out.

Mr. MANN. That is the reason I am endeavoring to help the gentleman by calling attention to this matter, so that he may add a lot more sections to his rule to cover these possibilities.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] approves the general purpose of the rule?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has a very vivid imagination.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has expired.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I would like to ask how much more time the gentleman from Illinois desires to consume?

Mr. BURLESON. I will yield the gentleman from Illinois fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for fifteen minutes more.

Mr. MANN. Now, the gentleman suggests that under his rule you could have a call of the House. The Constitution provides that less than a quorum may adjourn. It provides that the House may by its rules authorize a smaller number than a quorum to compel the attendance of absent Members, but that is business. The gentleman's amendment would not permit the House to transact any business at all on any Tuesday of the session unless, after the reading of the Journal, there was a quorum in the House and any Member chose to make the objection. That is not all. The Committee on Enrolled Bills of the House has the privilege of reporting bills constantly now, and in the last days of the session it is very important that that committee should be permitted to report to the House at any time. But the gentleman's amendment forbids the Committee on Enrolled Bills reporting a privileged measure to the House.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois to read the very first line of the very first section of the rule for calendar Tuesday.

Mr. MANN (reading)—

Except during the last six days of a session.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. That answers the gentleman's contention.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it essential that during the last six days of a session the rule should not be in force?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Inasmuch as it is in the very first line, it is a fair assumption that I do not think it should be in force.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question? Does the gentleman think it essential that the rule should not be in force?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I am not prepared to say, but my rule suggests that it shall not be in force, which is in the rule.

Mr. MANN. Quite the contrary. The rule suggests nothing of the sort. During the last six days of the short session the rule would not be in force, but during the last six days of the first session the rule would be in force.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will content himself, his rule will be in force except "during the last six days of the session or after the adoption by both Houses of Congress of a concurrent resolution of adjournment sine die."

Now, we all know that it is impossible to adopt a rule for final adjournment by both Houses at the long session of Congress until we come up to the last day of the session. Whenever this House has been first prevailed upon to send over a resolution to the Senate earlier in the session adopting a final day for adjournment, we have found that the House invariably has been held up by the Senate in conference, until the practice has come to be for the House, in defense of its having the custom of originating the resolution for final adjournment, not to provide for final adjournment until the business of the session is practically disposed of. By the gentleman's amendment, if the House were in session on Monday or Tuesday and wanted to adjourn on Wednesday, it could not receive any of the business practically belonging to the session, because engaged, perhaps, in discussing the final passage of a bill that could not possibly become law.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask permission of the gentleman from Illinois to offer in his time, if it be permissible in Committee of the Whole, as an answer to his question, a number of precedents to the contrary.

Mr. MANN. Very likely the precedents are different. Usually, when I first came here, the resolution would be presented and sent to the Senate, fixing the date for adjournment. It was never finally passed by the House unless we yielded to the Senate conferees or the legislation would be lost.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the rule further provides with reference to the Union Calendar, the Speaker, without having a motion made, without putting a motion—shall immediately leave the chair after the reading of the Journal, resolve the House into Committee of the Whole House, and call a chairman to the chair.

The House puts itself into Committee of the Whole. Of course the purpose is to have the House then proceed with business on the Union Calendar. Suppose this rule had been in force during this Congress; let us see what the practical effect would have been. We have for some time been considering the penal code. The penal code was the second public bill reported to the House at the last session of Congress. It was the only bill that belonged on the Union Calendar on the first calendar Tuesday in January, there having been no bills on the calendar in December; and under this rule the penal code would have come up for consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the first calendar Tuesday in January, and we would still be considering the penal code on this calendar Tuesday up to this time.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman entirely forgets that the question of consideration can be raised in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. I will call attention to the fact that that question can not be raised at all in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Oh, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's rule provides that—

In Committee of the Whole the chairman of the committee shall call each standing committee in regular order, and the committee when named may call up for consideration any bill reported by it on a previous day.

The committee has the right under the proposed rule, when it is named, to call up any bill on that calendar. But that is not all. Under another provision of the rule it provides—

That if when the committee rise that bill is not disposed of, and this committee goes into session again on the next calendar Tuesday, preference shall be given to the last measure under consideration.

There is no escape. It does not leave it to the committee to decide, but the House, by its rule, decides that the bill, having been under consideration in one session, the House shall continue to consider it until it is disposed of. Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. In the first place, that provision in the rule is copied verbatim from the present rule for call of the calendar, and I doubt if the construction has ever been put upon it that the question of consideration can not be raised.

Mr. MANN. Ah, but the gentleman——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. One minute. Please let me finish. The other day in debate the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] made that statement, that the question of consideration could not be raised in the Committee of the Whole. I asked the parliamentarian of the House, and he rendered a different opinion.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the parliamentarian of the House may have said about it. One thing is quite certain: The parliamentarian of the House can not openly override the express language of the House rule.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. By no means.

Mr. MANN. Here is the express language of the House:

This bill shall be considered in preference to all other bills.

Now, what happens further? Under the rule proposed, no motion to adjourn, or to take a recess, or that the Committee of the Whole rise shall be in order before 4 o'clock and 45 minutes, unless the business in order under clause 4 of this rule has been disposed of. Every bill on the Union Calendar except privileged bills, every bill on the House Calendar, is in order under the rule on these days; so that until all the business on the calendar is disposed of and the calendar is cleared it is not in order, under this proposed rule, to rise or to adjourn or to take a recess.

Then comes the next rule. And it is peculiar, to my mind, that the gentlemen who most criticise the rules of the House because they permit legislation without debate invariably propose that their bills shall be passed without consideration.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. If the House by a majority vote says so.

Mr. MANN. That is the case now. The gentleman's rule proposes to limit debate. He proposes that at any time after the expiration of forty minutes devoted to the consideration of a measure in Committee of the Whole it shall be in order to move to close general debate, and this motion shall be decided without debate.

Let us understand how this rule might work. The gentleman has charge of a bill on the floor of the House. He occupies an hour's time under the rules, unless he is cut off. He speaks for forty minutes in favor of the bill. The majority do not wish the minority to discuss the bill in general debate, and after the gentleman has occupied forty minutes, by a preconceived plan, I arise and ask the attention of the Chair and move to close general debate. I can take the gentleman off his feet to make that motion. The gentleman has expended forty minutes' time speaking for the majority in favor of the bill. The majority votes in favor of the motion to close debate. The minority is left without a chance to discuss the bill at all. And yet the gentleman's measure comes in as a proposition to permit the consideration of bills.

I have not wondered sometimes that some of the gentlemen who were criticising the rules because certain measures had not been disposed of in the House wished to stop debate. Many of those measures will not bear the light of day in debate, and I do not wonder that often, having bills of that sort, they wish to bring them before the House as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] does, and as I have understood—though I do not now understand it that way—the gentleman from New York desired—to force a vote without debate and without consideration.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts rose.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman has not contended that the objection to stopping debate was because it stopped discussion but because it stopped amendments, and that provision included in my rule does not stop amendments. As it is at present, you can stop debate after one minute's discussion.

Mr. MANN. Oh, you can do that under your rule. Your rule does not change it as to the House. Your rule only limits debate in Committee of the Whole, but does not change it in the House.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. But it does not prevent amendment.

Mr. MANN. You extend to the Committee of the Whole less time for debate than is now given by the rules of the House. You propose to take away the privilege that the Committee of the Whole has always exercised. The purpose for which the Committee of the Whole is created is to permit more debate than can well be permitted in the House. Now, I wish to proceed. I have not much time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BURLESON. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, having provided in his amendment that the House should not adjourn or the committee rise until 4.45 o'clock, he then brings in an exception, which he called attention to a while ago, and which I wish very briefly to discuss. I am sorry I have not time to discuss all the other provisions of the resolution.

Clause 8. On calendar Tuesday, either in the House or in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, at any time when no measure is under consideration, shall be in order to move that further proceedings under this rule be suspended for the day.

The motion could not be made when any measure is under consideration. I call the attention of the House or the committee to the proposition that if this rule had been in force at the last session of Congress we would probably have been engaged, if anybody desired it, every calendar Tuesday in Committee of the Whole in consideration of the penal code; and while the measure was under consideration no motion to rise could be made, no matter if nine-tenths of the committee wished to rise.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. That is a good criticism.

Mr. MANN. For instance, we have the penal code yet before us. There is no chance for the House bill penal code to become a law; there may be a chance for the penal code to become a law in the end by conference on the Senate bill; and yet under the gentleman's proposed rule we could be kept here every Tuesday on the penal code, or, if the code was out of the way, on the next long bill on the calendar, discussing every Tuesday a bill without a chance to conclude it, without a chance to rise, without a chance to do any other business, or without a chance to enact it into law.

That would be coming to a pretty pass, with one day of the week absolutely wiped off the calendar so far as the transaction of business is concerned under the gentleman's rule. Of course the gentleman assumes that the House and committee might not do all of these things or, perhaps, that such a bill would not be presented; but the object of the gentleman is to force the House, or the minority of the House, or, perhaps, the majority of the House, into the consideration of something it does not wish to consider, and the gentleman must remember that no matter what rules may be enacted, when people wish to obstruct legislation they use the power that is in the rules, and if the gentleman's rule permits it, then he fails to accomplish the purpose he seeks.

That would not be all. We might under the gentleman's rule be kept sitting here from 12 o'clock to 4.45 o'clock, calling the committees one after the other, time and again, without a chance to rise or adjourn. They could commence with the first committee and call down to the end, and then commence again with the first committee and call to the end, and then go to the head of the first committee and call through them all again; and if no committee called up a bill, it would still be without the power of the Chair to entertain a motion to rise, because until every bill on the calendar is disposed of that bill is in order whether called up or not, and the House could not adjourn so long as a bill remained on the calendar which could be called up.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman remember the first time that the call of committees took place this session?

Mr. MANN. I do.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Less than an hour was occupied therein. Was the call repeated?

Mr. MANN. The next day, I believe.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. But not during that same hour?

Mr. MANN. No; but we were not operating under the gentleman's rule. We adjourned when we finished the call of the calendar that day, but the gentleman does not permit an adjournment so long as there is any business on the calendar that is in order under the rule, and any bill on the calendar except privileged bills is in order under the rule, whether called up or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I yield sufficient time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] to ask a question.

Mr. COCKRAN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he would object, or can suggest any grounds of objection, to the appointment of a committee representing both sides of the Chamber to consider whether the rules are capable of amendment, and to make its recommendations before the end of this session? That is the only proposal I made to the committee.

Mr. MANN. I did not so understand the gentleman. What I would suggest is, the gentleman from New York having had a very long experience in the House and being one of its shining lights, that he prepare the amendments that he thinks should be made to the rules and introduce them as amendments to the rules so that we may consider them. There are many things which the House might do. They might appoint a committee on every conceivable purpose in the world, but let us have suggestions made for the amendment of the rules. I do not regard the rules like the laws of the Medes and Persians. I regard the rules as capable of amendment, and I would like to consider the amendment which is proposed.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman allow me? The gentleman will bear me witness, I think, that in the discussion which occurred the other day my proposal simply was that some means should be devised by which the existence of a majority could be challenged on the one side and established on the other on a motion for consideration of any specific proposal. I did not suggest a way by which that could be done, because I do not profess to know a way, but I do suggest that able parliamentarians like the gentleman from Illinois, in the interest of the credit to which this House is entitled, but which I do not think it enjoys in the full degree of its merits, should devise a method by which that very desirable result might be accomplished. That is the whole of my proposal. Does the gentleman think that it is other than valuable?

Mr. MANN. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I think that anything that emanates from the gentleman is of value to the House; any contribution he makes either in regard to the rules or any other subject before the House is a valuable contribution to the House and to the country. Now, the gentleman and I would agree upon this——

Mr. COCKRAN. That is all I want to get at—a point of agreement.

Mr. MANN. That the prime purpose of a rule is to permit the enactment of business and at the same time secure the rights of the individual Member and in party government the rights of the minority.

Mr. COCKRAN. Well, the gentleman, I think, misapprehends what I said in regard to that. I stated that the only right of the minority is to be sure that it is a minority, and the only way you can establish that is by counting it.

Mr. MANN. I am talking about a partisan majority.

Mr. COCKRAN. A gentleman here suggests to me now that the majority was established at the election. My conception of the constitution and government of this House is that the existence of a majority should be established on each specific proposal.

Mr. MANN. I fully agree with the gentleman on that proposition.

Mr. COCKRAN. And therefore I think the gentleman is at one with me—that it would be advisable to see if we could establish some method by which the existence of a majority could be established whenever challenged from a responsible source.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that under the rules as now in force if I had charge of a bill which I wished to force to a vote, with a majority behind me, I would not care what the bill was under the rules as they now exist. I have that power directly, and not indirectly as has been suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. PAYNE. And without regard to the attitude of the Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Without regard to the attitude of the Speaker.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], or so much thereof as he desires to consume.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of this question of rules I take it that it depends very largely on the size of the body that is to be governed by the rules as to what kind of rules we need for the government. The rules that we now have in this House have come down to us with some amendments, not many, from the original Congress. They have been changed from time to time to meet the emergencies and conditions of the business of this House as it develops. I believe that when the original Congress assembled there were 65 men then Members of this body. To-day we have 391. It is apparent that a very different set of rules would be suitable to the government of 65 men from the rules that would be needed to properly govern a body consisting of 391 men. I take it that the primary object of a set of rules is to do business. That is the first proposition, and the next proposition is to do business by the will of the majority of the legislative body that has adopted the rules.

Now, in the early history of this country we had reasonably lax rules for the government of the House of Representatives. It is apparent that a board of directors consisting of twelve or fifteen men practically need no set of rules to run their business. That a Congress consisting of 65 men needed very little in the way of rules to transact business is quite apparent. It is shown in the United States Senate to-day, where they have less than 100 members, and it is not necessary for them to adopt a cloture rule at all to do business; but I do not suppose there is a man in this House who will not readily agree that it would be impossible for the House of Representatives to do business at all without a cloture rule. We would simply be a mob of 400 men if we did not have rules under which we could transact the business of this House. With the large number of bills that are introduced here, the thousands of bills that are put on the calendar and the Members desire considered, it is absolutely necessary that we shall have some governing body to direct our movements toward the passage of bills. It is the same as if you had a tank at which 100 horses could get water and you brought a thousand horses there to water. Somebody would have to select the 100 horses that were going to receive the water. It is the same way with the government of this House. Somebody must determine what bills are going to be considered and at what time.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Now, if you take time enough, by watering 100 horses at a time you could water the 1,000.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, I assumed that there was water enough in the tank only for 100 horses.

Mr. GILLESPIE. The same rules that will govern a body of 65 men may govern a body of 400, if the 400 would take more time and devote more time to the business of the Government. Now, do we want to frame a set of rules that will enable 400 men, under the control of probably 20 of them, to come here and in from thirty to ninety days rush through such of the business of the country as these few men may think proper, or should we have more liberal interpretation of the rules securing larger debate and freer use of the right of amendment? It appears to me the latter is what we need; and then remain in session longer and devote more time than we do to the consideration of measures of general public interest.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the gentleman in part, but not in all. I do not think we want any rule, I do not think we want any management, of this House that will rush the business of this Congress through in ninety days; neither do we want a rule of this House which will enable any party by a filibuster to take three hundred and sixty-five days to do its work and then not finish its work. Now, under the old system of rules we originally had in this House it was possible for a small minority to prevent business in any way and at any time, and I say that these rules should have been abandoned at the time they were abandoned. They were good enough for a small body of men, but when the number of men in this House increased to the size where these rules could not prevent a filibuster and could not prevent the passage of legislation by a small minority of men, but prevent a real majority from doing business, then they should have been abolished when they were abolished by this House, and the country approved of it, and we approve of it to-day. Now, I say, when we come from that point, a point where it was necessary for us to adopt rules under which this House could do business and do business by the will of the majority, the pendulum swung to the extreme end of the other side.

Instead of adopting a rule by which this House could do business by the will of the majority, we adopted a rule by which we could do business by the will of one man. That is my objection to these rules, and not that the House should not do business and not that the majority should not do business in the way that the majority elects to transact business.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I do object to a set of rules that enables one man to absolutely hold the veto of the legislation of this country.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not true that the curtailment of debate and the shutting off of all amendment to all important bills which we have had for the last two Congresses has been caused by special rules which were adopted by a majority of the House and against the protest of the minority always?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, undoubtedly.

Mr. MANN. The railroad rate legislation was as important as any brought before the Congress.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, we have had many important bills considered in this House by unanimous consent. There are times in this House when we can consider the most important legislation without any rule at all; but I say that these rules now are written so that if the Speaker does not desire the consideration of any question to come before this House that a majority wish, he can prevent it. I am not talking about political parties—not the Republican side of the House nor the Democratic side of the House—but I am talking about a majority that consists of more than half of the Members on the floor voting on the subject; that is what I mean by a majority. Now, I am not criticising the present Speaker. I have served on the Committee on Rules under one of his predecessors, a gentleman whom I respected and loved very much in his personal character, but I know this, as a member of that Rules Committee, that when an important question came up and a meeting of the Committee on Rules was called and the minority members came into the committee, with a smile the Speaker informed us that he had summoned us there to tell us what he is going to do. That is what we were sent for, to receive information of what was going to be done.

Now, I say that kind of procedure may be responsive to the wishes of a political party; it may be responsive to the wishes of a majority of a political party in power in this House, but it is not responsive to the wishes of a majority of the people of this House, and it is not always responsive to the wishes of a majority of the people of the country. Having met that condition and reached that position, I say that the time has come when we need another amendment to these rules. As I stated before, we amended the rules of the House some years back so that a majority could do business, or so the House could do business, and I say the time now has come when we should again amend these rules so that a majority of this House shall say what business shall be done. There is no Member of this House who is not on the Rules Committee, or there is no Member of this House, except the Speaker of the House—and, mark you, I am not criticising the present Speaker, who is working under the rules that we put in his hands; we have given him the power and he is carrying out the powers that we have given him—who can say what business we will transact to-morrow morning.

It is absolutely in his power. If two-thirds of the membership on the floor of this House desired some particular bill to come up first to-morrow morning for consideration, and it did not meet with the approval of the Speaker, you could not take it up, and you know it. Although the Rules Committee could bring in a rule, and there are two other gentlemen on the Rules Committee besides the Speaker, you know and I know that they will not report a bill to this House that does not meet with the approval of the Speaker.

Now, I do not agree with the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] who wants to fix a calendar by which we shall do business, a machine where you can put a nickel in the slot and grind out legislation. This House should be governed by intelligence, not by machinery. The House should take up intelligently the bills it wants to consider and enact them into law. There are many bills on the calendar of greater or less importance, and we would displace the consideration of an important bill by adopting a machine rule that requires us first to consider unimportant legislation.

But I do say there is one way in which this matter can be remedied, and only one. Make the Committee on Rules responsive to the will of the majority of the Members of this House. When you have done that you will have under the rules the power to do business, and you will have under the rules the power to do the business that the majority of this House wants done. It will only take a few lines written in the present rules, simply saying that this House shall elect a Committee on Rules at the beginning of each session of Congress, who shall have the same powers that are invested in the present Committee on Rules, and that that Committee on Rules, elected by this House, shall be subject to removal by a majority of the Members of this House at any time by resolution offered. You would then have a committee before which you could appear, present your bills, argue your case and ask for consideration. You would have a committee that, scattered through the membership of this House, would come in daily contact with that membership. You would have a committee that reflected the real sentiment of the membership of this House and the real sentiment of the country.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How large would you make that committee?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would make it large enough to reflect the sentiment of this House. I would put 15 men on the committee. What we want to do is to transact the business that the majority of this House wants and the country wants, and not have one man determine what business we ought to legislate about.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How would you divide that committee in the House as between the parties?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would give liberally to the majority party in the House. The majority party in this House is responsible for its legislation. It is responsible for its government, and I would give a liberal majority of the Committee on Rules to the majority party of the House. But there might be times when the majority party was not responsive to the will of the country, and that then some of its Members going to the minority party would bring legislation before the House that the country demanded and wanted, and rightly bring it before the House. But if you had a committee of 15 men, I would not resist a proposition to give the majority 10 of them and the minority 5. I would have no desire in the world to break down the power of the majority party in this House to do business, but I have a great desire to institute a rule in this House by which a majority of the Members of the House may say what business shall be transacted. [Applause.]

I yield back the balance of my time.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BOUTELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

On January 6, 1909:

H. J. Res. 208. Joint resolution providing for expenses of the House Office Building.

On January 9, 1909:

H. R. 22879. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the city of St. Louis, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River," approved January 23, 1908.

On January 11, 1909:

H. R. 13649. An act providing for the hearing of cases upon appeal from the district court for the district of Alaska in the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DOUGLAS] three minutes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say that in the short time that I have been a Member here I have listened carefully to the criticisms that have been made from time to time of the rules of the House. I insist that there is too much of dealing in general criticism, without anything specific. I hoped the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] would say what rule or rules of the House give to the Speaker of the House the inordinate powers which he claims he exercises. I confess I do not find it.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I beg pardon, but I have only three minutes, and I want to speak of another matter.

It seems to me this, that the mistake of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] consists in the assertion that this House should be and is at all times to be governed by the majority present. I do not believe that is the theory of our Government. It is, as I said to him here in our seats just now, the permanent majority of this House that is responsible to the country for the Government and the laws—the majority elected by the people.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio where he finds in the Constitution of the United States any theory by which a political party shall govern this country, and not a majority of its representatives?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not find it written in the laws, but neither do I find anything in the laws of England providing that England shall be governed by a cabinet. The cabinet is not recognized by the laws of England anywhere, and yet England is governed substantially by this cabinet.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just let me say this: The gentleman will find in the Constitution of the United States a very distinct provision that the laws of this country shall be enacted by the majority of the membership of this House.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is true. But the majority of this House which is responsible for the laws is the permanent political majority which exists in the House, and not the temporary majority which may be here from day to day. That, I think, is the inherent trouble with the argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN], who urges that the majority at any time present in the House should have the right to insist on the consideration of this or that bill. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, the majority in this House is a political majority. It is here in the contemplation of the people and of the House all the time, and it, and not the majority which may be present to-day or to-morrow, is responsible for the laws passed and for the business of the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FOSTER of Vermont, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the Senate of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7925. An act to create an additional land district in the State of Montana, to be known as the "Harlowton land district;"

S. 7992. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for participation by the United States in an international exposition to be held at Tokyo, Japan, in 1912," approved May 22, 1908;

S. 7918. An act for the relief of Bernard W. Murray;

S. 7785. An act relative to outward alien manifests on certain vessels;

S. 7640. An act to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Missouri River at Yankton, S. Dak., by the Yankton, Norfolk and Southern Railway Company;

S. 7378. An act to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Yankton, S. Dak., by the Winnipeg, Yankton and Gulf Railroad Company.

S. 7257. An act providing a means for acquiring title to private holdings in the Sequoia and General Grant national parks in the State of California, in which are big trees and other natural curiosities and wonders.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill of the following title:

S. 4856. An act authorizing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to lease San Clemente Island, California, and for other purposes.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BURLESON. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska one minute.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I have but one minute, but in that time I want to answer the question of the gentleman from Ohio. He says he wants somebody to point out to him the rule that gives to the Speaker this great power that is complained of so much. My answer to the gentleman is that the rule that gives the Speaker power to appoint all the standing committees of the House, which practically control all of the legislation of the House, is, in my judgment, the rule that is obnoxious to those who think that the Speaker has too much power. [Applause.] At a future time, when I can get sufficient time, I want to go further into the proposition upon which the gentleman has invited discussion, and to point out wherein the rules are objectionable, and wherein, in the minds, at least, of some of us, they can be improved.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Does the gentleman from Texas wish to occupy any more time now?

Mr. BURLESON. No.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, in the five legislative days that have intervened since this bill was reported to the House for its consideration much of interest has occurred, some of it historic and much otherwise. Nothing in all of the debates on the various themes has touched the bill under consideration, a bill which more deeply concerns the Capital City of the Nation and the residents therein for the ensuing fiscal year than any other measure before the House or that is likely to come before it.

The Committee on Appropriations, in framing the District of Columbia appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, were confronted by a financial consideration, present and prospective, that they felt ought to be laid before the House.

The Commissioners of the District estimate the needs for the ensuing fiscal year at $16,000,000, in round numbers. The revenues of the District were estimated at a little over $6,000,000. This sum, supplemented by the contribution of the General Government, provides $12,000,000 for the revenues and for the expenditures of the District for the next fiscal year, if it shall live within its income. The estimates are therefore nearly $4,000,000 more than the revenues.

The unfunded debt of the District on the 1st day of July next, it is estimated, will be $4,184,000. This debt arises from the advances that have been made from time to time during the last eight years out of the Treasury of the General Government to enable the District to carry on certain important and, in the main, necessary enterprises of a permanent nature, now largely completed. Some of these enterprises are the sewage-disposal plant, costing over $5,000,000; the filtration plant, about three and a half million dollars; the District municipal building, two and a half millions; elimination of grade and grade crossings, considerably over a million dollars; the new Union Station, a million and a half dollars; Highway Bridge and the approaches thereto, about $1,200,000; the Connecticut Avenue Bridge, about $865,000; the Anacostia River bridge, $469,000; the Massachusetts Avenue Bridge, $250,000 in round numbers; the Piney Branch bridge, $50,000; and for tuberculosis hospital, $205,000. These aggregate, in round numbers, seventeen and a quarter millions of dollars.

In addition to this unfunded debt there is a funded debt, authorized in 1874, to run, by the issue of bonds, fifty years. On the 1st of July, 1878, that debt was $22,106,000. Last year on the 1st of July the unfunded debt was $10,117,000. So that there remains to be paid in the next fifteen years as much of the funded debt, less $2,000,000, as has been paid in the last thirty years. This funded debt carries a rate of interest of 3.65 per cent, the unfunded debt a rate of 2 per cent. The law requires that, beginning with July 1 next, the unfunded debt shall be paid, the whole of it, in the ensuing five years. Now, there are three methods, possibly four, by which the present financial condition in which the District finds itself may be provided for. One is to issue another series of long-time bonds or to continue indefinitely to receive advances from the National Treasury equal to the amount expended over the current revenues. This, in the main, is the proposition of the District Commissioners, supported to a considerable extent by the business men of the city and several civic associations in different parts of the District.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Which proposition is supported by the District Commissioners and others? Where they rely upon the General Government?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. One is the alternative of two others. To create a new bonded debt, or to continue as now to have advances made out of the National Treasury to make up any deficit in the revenues provided. Another method of meeting the situation is to raise the rate of taxation or the rate of valuation on real property, on which the rate of taxation is 1½ per cent on all real and personal property in the District of Columbia, and that at two-thirds of its true value.

I think it may be stated, on the authority of a statistician who knows local conditions, that the real assessed valuation today does not exceed on an average 45 per cent on the real estate, judging from the assessed valuations and what the property sold for where sales take place.

Now, as a matter of fact, the rate of taxation is less in the city of Washington than in any other city of like size and like privileges in the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit me right there? Is that one of the reasons why so many wealthy people are taking up their domiciles here, in order to escape the taxation that they would have to pay at their real residences in their States?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I will come to that in a moment. I know it is not safe as a basis of comparison to take either the rate of taxation or the assessed valuation to determine the relative rate of taxation between different municipalities, but there is a way that is fairly accurate and just, and that is to determine by the per capita tax raised in the several cities for municipal expenses. It should be borne in mind that the District of Columbia is not only a municipality, but in a sense it is a state government, in another sense a county government, and in another sense a municipal government, all three in one. Now, in nine cities that may be classed with this capital city, all but two cost more per capita for the conduct of the municipal business alone than does the city of Washington for all three of these combined. So well is this understood that certain persons living in the city of Washington have for obvious reasons advertised and sent broadcast over the United States circulars inviting citizens of other States to come here and live, not only on account of the desirability of living in the capital, but because of the low taxation.

Mr. GOULDEN. What is the assessed valuation of the city of Washington?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I have not the figures in mind. I will ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] to answer that later.

Mr. GOULDEN. I know it is very low indeed, but I wanted to know just what it was.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The assessed valuation is two-thirds of the true value. Does the gentleman mean the aggregate?

Mr. GOULDEN. I do mean the aggregate.

Mr. MANN. That is what the law says.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The law says not less than two-thirds of the true value.

Mr. GOULDEN. And yet, in your judgment, it is only about 45 per cent?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Not in my judgment, but upon the authority of one on whose judgment I rely.

Mr. GOULDEN. On information that you received?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that these gentlemen who send out these circulars advising of the advantageous conditions that present themselves here to the wealthy classes for residential purposes, so as to escape a higher rate of taxation in their homes, are interested in the stimulation of real-estate values.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Naturally.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman be courteous enough to yield to all of us for information on this interesting subject?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGLAS. What effort is made in the city of Washington to secure returns of the personal property which you say is taxed at a certain rate here? Is it not true that a very large part of the personal property owned by the citizens entirely escapes taxation, and is not that advertised, and is not that one of the reasons why so many men of large means come here to live, to escape taxation entirely on their personal property?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman, in the first place, that household goods to the value of $1,000 are entirely exempt from taxation. In relation to the other I would not want to state on my own authority definitely. Every man can make his own inquiry. I presume every one of us knows men who have come here to this city who have given up their residence in their home States, as is believed in those States, for the purpose of avoiding taxation. I do not say it is so, but it is common rumor in our respective localities or districts.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to come back, it will be easy, therefore, if you lift the valuation on the one hand, so that, as in New York and Boston, the rate is fixed at 100 per cent of the true value of the real estate, to increase the revenues.

I think I may say in behalf of the committee and Congress that if the District of Columbia will increase its revenues by an addition to the existing two-thirds, Congress will meet the result, dollar for dollar, and so take care not only of the current expenses, but within reasonable limits the projects of a permanent nature that may be undertaken and carried on.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. Is that species of personal property known as "money, bonds, mortgages, and other securities" taxed at all in the District of Columbia?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes; supposed to be where it can be gotten at.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman from Michigan is mistaken. Money, notes, mortgages, stocks, bonds, and household effects under $1,000 are not taxable at all.

Mr. DAVIS. That was my understanding, and that was the reason that has been given to me heretofore why many wealthy men come here for the purpose of escaping personal-property taxation. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield for a further question?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Surely.

Mr. DAVIS. How long has it been since articles known as "heirlooms," diamonds, and so forth, have been taxed at all? Is it not a fact that it is only within the last two or three years that articles known as diamonds and expensive bric-a-brac, paintings, and costly furnishings have been taxed at all, but were exempt under the title of "heirlooms?"

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I think that is true. I may say that there has been, as I have been led to believe, an insistent and persistent effort to increase the amount of taxes to be raised upon personal property.

Mr. DAVIS. Is it not a fact that under the present system of taxation within the District property of that kind is more exempt from taxation than in any other city of its size in the United States?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It may be so. Allow me to say that I have the figures as submitted by the auditor and assessor and collector of taxes. The realty current taxes are $4,300,000. The personal current taxes are $900,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. In view of the persistent effort which the gentleman speaks of, has there been any effort by the committee to include bonds and other like securities on the personal-property tax roll?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. No, sir; I think that would not come within the province of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. STAFFORD. You propose to increase the taxable limit of real estate, but do not suggest anything about bringing in the bonds and stocks, mortgages, and so forth.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The law provides that the taxes shall not be less than two-thirds. There is no change in that law.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a third way out of this difficulty is to follow the law, pure and simple. The law says that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall transmit estimates to the Congress, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and I may say in passing that since I have been a member of this committee the Secretary of the Treasury prior to the present one has uniformly reduced the estimates of the commissioners. The present Secretary, at the request of the commissioners, submitted the estimates as they were presented to him. Now, what is the law? In the organic act it says:

> That to the extent to which Congress shall approve said estimates the Congress shall appropriate the amount at 50 per centum thereof, and the remaining 50 per centum of such approved estimates shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property and privileges in said District other than the property of the United States and the District of Columbia.

That seems to me to be clear in this, that Congress intended under that provision that no unfunded debt should be created, by these words, "the remaining 50 per centum of such approved estimates."

Now, the commissioners estimate this year for $16,000,000, in round numbers. If Congress shall approve these estimates to the extent of $16,000,000, the law requires that there shall be levied upon the real and personal property of the District an amount to cover the $8,000,000 for its share, less that which is derived from special privileges; so that it is up to the commissioners. They make the estimates, and, as the Congress shall approve, the law requires that the District shall pay 50 per cent of the amount approved and the United States the remainder. If that were done, and, I may say, if the commissioners were fairly conservative, we would have plenty of money to meet the current needs of the District and provide within reasonable limits for improvements of a permanent nature.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I judge from the statement of the gentleman from Michigan that the financial condition of the District of Columbia is now and for some years has been somewhat embarrassed, owing to the fact that the revenues have not been equal to the expenditures.

I would like to suggest, not only to the gentleman, but to certain members of the District Committee present, who are the real legislative body, Would it not be wise or would it not be proper that the real estate of the city be taxed to at least a moderate extent for the improvement of streets and sidewalks along the adjoining private property? And I would like to ask the gentleman, If at the present time private property is not virtually exempt from expense for any improvements thereto by way of construction of streets, alleys, or sidewalks in front of and adjoining the property?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. To a large extent that is true.

Mr. DAVIS. Is it not true that a real estate owner where a street is located and to be established under an act reported by the District Committee—that the expenses dependent upon the original location and condemnation of the property is so distributed that the property bears a certain proportion of that expense, but when it comes to improving the street otherwise, asphalting it, putting down sidewalks, planting trees, or possibly sewerage, the individual pays no expense whatever, but it is paid out of the joint revenue as comprised in the amount received from the Federal Treasury and the taxation of District property?

Does not the gentleman think that that is a bad system, and does he not know that there is not any other city in the United States where private property is thus improved and enhanced in value without one dollar of expense to the property? And, I will continue and the gentleman may answer all the questions together: Is it not another reason why wealthy men come here and invest in real estate and obtain opening of streets through and adjoining their property, in order that the Government and the District of Columbia, out of the joint revenues, may improve the property and thus increase the value to the owners?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, answering the question of fact, I would state that, as I understand it, the gentleman is correct; but we have had some discussion here lately as to challenging the motives of men——

Mr. DAVIS. Excuse me, but I do not wish to challenge the motive of anyone. But does not the gentleman think that if that matter was legislated upon, and put in what I know the gentleman would consider a proper condition, it would do away with this discrepancy, as it were, between the revenues of the District and the expense? In other words, that the burden would be lightened upon the taxpayer and upon the Federal Treasury, and the real beneficiary would be called upon to respond, thus equalizing the revenues with the expenditures?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I know of no reason why the gentleman living in his town, or I living in mine, or any other gentleman living in his, should be compelled either to pay for the benefits to abutting property, along the line of his suggestions, and then by removing to Washington escape all those and have the half of such improvements paid out of the General Government, of which every taxpayer in the country has to meet his proportionate share. If the gentleman's idea was adopted and put in operation, it would largely reduce the annual budget.

Mr. COLE. How is railroad property in the District of Columbia rated for taxation?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The street railway, I think, pays 4 per cent on the gross receipts.

Mr. BURLESON. There is 4 per cent on the gross receipts of the street railway.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. As to steam railways, I can not tell.

Mr. COLE. Is there any excise tax on the steam railways?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I think not.

Mr. GOULDEN. Who is responsible for this state of affairs spoken of by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The Congress of the United States.

Mr. GOULDEN. What particular committee of the Congress?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Certainly not the Committee on Appropriations, because we do not make the law. I am simply calling attention to these things this morning because as a committee we are compelled to confront the conditions in which we find ourselves and to act accordingly in making the appropriations.

Mr. GOULDEN. It is a most astonishing condition. I have never heard of it in any other city, that the abutting property paid nothing for the improvement—cutting through, grading, and macadamizing, and so forth.

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, that is not quite true.

Mr. GOULDEN. Did I not understand the gentleman from Minnesota correctly?

Mr. DAVIS. That is correct, except in this: That when the street is originally located under the bill emanating from the District Committee, the property then pays a proportionate share for the taking of the property and in the condemnation proceedings.

Mr. MANN. Pays all of it.

Mr. GOULDEN. But not for grading and paving and improving, and so forth?

Mr. DAVIS. None whatever.

Mr. MANN. In the gentleman's own city it is only paid the first time, while in my city we pay for it each time it is improved.

Mr. GOULDEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. We pay for it every time.

Mr. GOULDEN. If the streets are dug up after permanent improvement by the city, who then pays for that being dug up, in order that gas or water pipes, we will say, may be put in?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The corporation in charge, and here is a specific illustration: Between the Capitol and the Library of Congress the gentleman will remember that the street was rendered impassable by the tunneling under to reach the Union Station. The railroads, as I understand it, replaced that street in proper condition. I refer now to the steam railroads. They did it without cost to the District or the General Government.

Now, I have not been there recently, but since I came it has been in an almost impassable condition, made so by the street railways laying tracks along there where there had not been any before, they in turn meeting all the expenses of that change.

Mr. GOULDEN. I alluded to private property. Say I own a house on Connecticut avenue, and I go there and put in water or gas pipes. Who is made to restore that street to its original normal condition, the property owner who has the benefit of it or the General Government and the District combined?

Mr. MANN. The property owner, theoretically, who gets the permit. I would like to suggest, if I may in the gentleman's time, this reason in reference to the city of Washington, D. C., paying the entire cost out of the appropriations which are made, and that is on the theory that it is manifestly out of the question in the District of Columbia to make special assessments against government property, because the Government owns so much property. It is out of the question to improve streets of Washington by special assessments without assessing the Government's property, and that is part of the original agreement between the District and the Government.

Mr. GOULDEN. I will say I had reference to long lines of streets laid out in every direction in which there was no government property at all. I understand it is very often the case they do not need the improvements, and they do not have to expend the money unless they desire to do so.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman, but this is a District matter, and any information I can obtain I would like to have along this line. Another idea suggested by the gentleman from Illinois is, he speaks about the Government owning such a vast amount of property in the District. I have heard it stated that the Government should pay one-half of the expense of maintaining this city because they own one-half or more property. I challenge that statement, and say that the reason given or the figures given to me when I was investigating that matter to confirm their statement that the Federal Government owns one-half of the property is made up of this: In this city, when a street is located by act of Congress the fee of the street is vested in the Government, contrary to what is the case in other cities; so that when a street is extended, the fee of the street at once becomes the property of the Government. The streets thus being included in the amount of property owned by the Government, it is thus claimed that one-half of all real estate of the District is owned by the Government.

Mr. MANN. Streets and the parks.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes. Of course the parks are for the benefit of Members of Congress as well as the residents of the city, but it is unequal. Public property of that kind, including the surface of the street, is figured in and charged to the government ownership, so when it comes to the ownership of the property, aside from streets and parks, my contention is that the private ownership here far exceeds the government ownership.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes; the surface of the streets, alleys, parks, and so forth, makes 51 per cent of the entire surface in the city, and that is one of the reasons alleged for liberality on the part of the General Government. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to this phase of the financial condition of the District. Under the law, the District is compelled to pay $975,000 annually on the bonded debt. The net decrease of the debt of the city, funded and unfunded, last year was about $128,000. In other words, the excess of the expenditures, interest on the unfunded debt added to the funded debt, was enough almost to take up the entire payment of the funded debt, and if the estimates are allowed to stand this year you will add nearly $4,000,000 to the unfunded debt and bring it to within $2,000,000 of the funded debt, the interest on the two now aggregating nearly half a million dollars a year. There is one other method that has been suggested—personally I am frank to say I do not fall in with it, but it is made by a very prominent resident and a property owner and taxpayer of this city—namely, that the Government shall increase its per centum to the maximum of, say, 75 per cent of the entire expenses of the District of Columbia for current and extraordinary improvements.

Mr. DAVIS. It ought to go the other way, and the federal expense decreased.

Mr. SABATH. Should it not go the other way?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I am simply giving you the opinion of an intelligent gentleman, a taxpayer, and a long-time resident of the city, to meet the emergency we are in. My own judgment is to raise the rate of taxation or increase the valuation. If you increase the valuation and tax it at one and one-half on a hundred per cent of its true value, we will not be troubled, with any reasonable economy, with a debt for current and extraordinary expenses. And yet, with that advance, the citizens living in Washington City and the District of Columbia will pay less taxes than in your city or mine—state, county, and national taxes combined. I think I can make that statement without any fear of its being controverted.

Mr. FORNES. May I interrupt the gentleman? What is the rate at present?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The rate is 1½ per cent on two-thirds of the true value of the real estate.

Mr. FORNES. Then it follows that if you assessed at full market value the citizens of Washington would pay a higher proportion of taxes, because of increased assessment, whereas the government property, not being assessed at all, would be relieved of that much taxation?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. No; the Government under the law would meet dollar for dollar the amount that the District raised.

Mr. FORNES. Yes. Suppose you had $12,000 to raise?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Put it twelve millions.

Mr. FORNES. Well, any figure.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That is about the figure.

Mr. FORNES. And the present rate of taxation, property being assessed at two-thirds, so to say, of its market value——

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. No; not its market value. It has been stated that at its market value it was assessed at about 45 per cent.

Mr. FORNES. Only 45 per cent? Suppose, then, that you double that assessment and the city would pay, so to say, upon double the assessment; would that not necessarily make the taxation against the Government less?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. No; not under the law.

Mr. DAVIS. It would increase it.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It would increase it. I read from the organic act some time ago.

Mr. FORNES. You have to pay dollar for dollar. If, as you say, it is about $16,000,000——

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The debt is about $14,000,000 now.

Mr. FORNES. I thought you stated $16,600,000.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Those were the estimates for the next fiscal year.

Mr. FORNES. Therefore, if you increase the assessment you either can reduce the rate, or by reducing the rate only a small percentage, of course, the revenue will be larger. The revenue being larger from the real estate in the city, I can not understand why, if the city bears its full share of the cost of government, the rate against the Government should not be less.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I will read to the gentleman, and he will see at once. The matter was gone over when he was not in the Chamber:

> The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall make estimates which, when approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be transmitted to the Congress.

Now, section 16 provides:

> That to the extent to which Congress shall approve of said estimates, Congress shall appropriate the amount of 50 per cent thereof, and the remaining 50 per cent of such approved estimates shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property and privileges in said District other than the property of the United States and of the District of Columbia.

Mr. FORNES. I understand. Now, that which is paid by the Government is paid by the country at large. It is charged to the citizens of the country, who are paying a taxation—and all this money which is paid by the Government comes from taxation. Is it fair for the city of Chicago or the city of New York or the city of Philadelphia or any other city which is paying taxation upon the market value of the property, as it is called, to be offset by 45 per cent of the market value in the District of Columbia?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Well, that is a matter that is up to the Congress. The Congress has already acted. It is in the law, and there is no way but for us to follow it until the law is changed.

Mr. FORNES. Then, is it not justly due to the people that Congress should so adjust the assessment in this District that it will correspond with the assessment generally throughout the country?

Mr. MANN. That would only increase our own expenditure.

Mr. GOULDEN. The gentleman himself is a Member of Congress, and therefore, I believe, equally capable.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I want to say that the committee, facing this financial condition, not only now, but in the near future—for there are projects that have already been recommended, definitely and indefinitely, that will require a number of millions of dollars to carry out—I say the committee, facing this condition of things, felt that they ought to frame a bill strictly in accordance with the law. They have endeavored that no important interest should really suffer by the present bill, and at the same time have provided for a material payment upon the unfunded debt on the 1st of next July.

Mr. SABATH. What is the unfunded debt?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It will be $4,184,000 on the 1st of July.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will occupy the attention of the committee only for a moment for the purpose of supplementing the admirable statement made by the gentleman from Michigan with one suggestion: Since 1901, from year to year, Congress has been advancing to the District government out of the general revenues certain sums of money to meet the current expenses of the District. These advances now aggregate $3,650,563.06. From the 1st of the coming July, under the law, this amount, which is part of the unfunded debt of the District of Columbia, must be paid within the next succeeding five years. Now, this condition confronts Congress: Either it must authorize an increase of the bonded indebtedness of the District of Columbia, or to meet the growing necessities of the District of Columbia there must be bills reported increasing the tax rate, or requiring the people of the city of Washington to assess their property nearer its real value.

Mr. DAVIS. Or decrease the budget along the line of expenditures which should be borne upon private property.

Mr. BURLESON. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, it is possible to decrease the budget. What the budget carries at this time is what is absolutely necessary to properly conduct the affairs of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. Is there not contained in nearly every appropriation bill—I have not examined this one—appropriations of several hundred thousand dollars for the improvement of streets that comprise part of this budget?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. Now, if the District Committee or Congress shall change that system it would reduce the budget quite an extent?

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, certainly. But that would require the enactment of law, with which the Appropriation Committee has nothing to do except to vote as Members of Congress on such bills when brought before the House by the District Committee.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand that.

Mr. BURLESON. Now, as I was saying, Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations have in mind to carry out the law as it is, and require the District of Columbia to repay its unfunded indebtedness within five years; and if the District of Columbia budget is to be increased to meet extraordinary expenses or any other character of expenses, there must either be an increase in the tax rate and assessed values, an increase of the funded indebtedness of the District of Columbia, or an increase of the bonded indebtedness.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. GOULDEN. I hope the gentleman will have the kindness to answer a question in regard to the assessment value for taxation purposes referred to by the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. BURLESON. I am unable to state the aggregate assessed property—of real property—in the District.

Mr. GOULDEN. Can you approximate it?

Mr. BURLESON. I can tell you the amount collected on real estate in the way of taxes last year. There was collected from real property within the District of Columbia, $3,400,000.

Mr. SABATH. How much on personal property?

Mr. BURLESON. Nine hundred thousand dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate under the order of the House having expired, the Clerk will report the bill for amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed, from time to time, to prescribe a schedule of fees to be paid for permits, certificates, and transcripts of records issued by the inspector of buildings of the District of Columbia, for the erection, alteration, repair, or removal of buildings and their appurtenances, and for the location of certain establishments for which permits are now or hereafter may be required under the building regulations of the District of Columbia, said fees to cover the cost and expense of the issuance of said permits and certificates and of the inspection of the work done under said permits; said schedule shall be printed and conspicuously displayed in the office of said inspector of buildings; said fees shall be paid to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia and shall be deposited by him in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I notice that this proposition, which looks to be eminently proper in intent, provides that the fees shall be paid into the Treasury to the credit wholly of the District of Columbia. In other words, as I understand it—I shall be very glad to be corrected if I am in error—the Government pays its half of the expenses of running this office. These fees are paid in for the purpose of covering that expense, but when it comes to crediting the fees, they are credited wholly to the District of Columbia revenues.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, at the present time those who erect buildings in the District of Columbia pay simply for doing the clerical work in connection with the permits. It is now proposed that those making such improvements here in the city shall pay, in addition to the clerical work, substantially enough to cover the cost of inspection in all its departments; and the improvement being here in the District of Columbia, in its real estate, the committee recommend that the fees collected should be credited to the District revenues. Personally I am not particular whether it shall go into the revenues of the District or one-half into the District revenues and one-half into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Here is the point: That the revision itself undertakes to collect enough money to cover the cost and expense of the issuance of permits and certificates, and the inspection of the work done under the permits. Now, all of that service is paid for out of the appropriation, one-half being contributed by the Government out of the General Treasury; but, although we collect this money for the purpose of equaling this expense, we do not reimburse the General Treasury for any of its expense, but turn it over wholly to the District of Columbia, and that is such an unfair proposition that I do not think the gentleman will contend for it.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. If the gentleman will make his amendment, I will accept it.

Mr. MANN. I have no amendment prepared.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. This is the uniform practice in the District. It would be a departure to do otherwise.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is mistaken. That used to be the uniform custom, but I called the attention of the District subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations to this sort of a scheme that was in the appropriation bill in a number of places before, and I notice that they have eliminated it from every other place in the bill except this, and I suspect this crept in by inadvertence.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The taxes on saloons and other special privileges are all given to the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. That is a different proposition. Here is a proposition to cover the expense of inspection.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The fines from the police court all go into the District treasury.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; that is quite a different proposition.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The Government pays half the cost of conducting these courts, but the police court gets the benefit of all the fines.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but that is quite a different proposition. Here is a building to be constructed. There is a certain expense about the issuing of the permits and a certain expense about the inspection certificates. Now, we provide for the officials who issue the permits and who do the inspection work. We pay for the expense of that out of the General Treasury. Then we provide that the man who obtains a permit shall pay in enough money to cover the cost of doing this work, and we think we have got it fixed then and paid back. But then we find, according to the bill, that this money is paid over to the credit of the District, and so the District makes a profit, because the District only pays one-half the expense, and the General Government pays the other half. It seems to me the proposition is so utterly unfair that nobody can contend for it.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Has the gentleman finished?

Mr. MANN. I have a point of order pending.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I may say to the gentleman that not only the police-court fines, but the supreme-court fines, the liquor licenses, the plumbing licenses, the insurance licenses, the electrical permits, the building permits, the engineer's licenses, the fees from tax certificates, the railing permits, the water permits, the sewer and gas permits, the inspector of gas and meter fees, the dog-pound fees, the justice-court fees, the health-department permits, the surveyor's fees, the fees of the sealer of weights and measures, the penalty and interest on taxes; all these are deposited wholly to the credit of the fund of the District of Columbia. So that this would be the exception and not the rule. The fees now under this very language are all deposited in the treasury of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Then it is no advantage to the General Treasury to have this provision go into the bill?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes; by so much as the one-half shall reduce the whole.

Mr. MANN. The one-half will not reduce anything, it only increases the expense to the General Treasury. None of this gets back into the General Treasury.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It helps to pay the inspectors——

Mr. MANN. Not at all; it does not.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan (continuing). Out of the District treasury.

Mr. MANN. It does not help to pay them. We appropriate directly for them out of the General Treasury.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. Well, will the gentleman call my attention to a provision that the inspector shall be paid wholly out of the funds of the District of Columbia——

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I do not mean that.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. He means that it helps pay the District's one-half.

Mr. MANN. That swells the amount we have to pay out of the General Treasury.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It still remains that this increases the resources which the District so much needs, and is in perfect harmony with the previous action of the District along that line.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may be able to help me find something that I am looking for in the bill. There is a provision in the bill itself in reference to one lot of fees that shall be reimbursed to the fund out of which the service is paid.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I do not recollect it at this moment.

Mr. MANN. Well, I shall be compelled to insist on the point of order.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Will not the gentleman from Illinois withdraw his point of order or let it go over?

Mr. MANN. I am willing to let it go over, but not to withdraw it. The gentleman can ask unanimous consent that this be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BOWERS. Would the gentleman withdraw the point of order if the provision was so amended that the deposit in the Treasury should be one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia?

Mr. MANN. Yes; but I think it should be so amended that the money would be for the services rendered.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That is the purpose of it, that it shall furnish a fund that shall meet every expense of inspection.

Mr. MANN. But you do not do it by this provision.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I have no objection to what the gentleman seeks to do. How would this do: Say that one-half of the receipts shall be deposited with the treasurer of the District of Columbia and one-half in the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. MANN. That would suit me, although I think it would be better to pass over the provision now. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that this paragraph may be passed for the present without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this paragraph may be passed for the present without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For assessor's office: For assessor, $3,500, and $500 additional as chairman of the excise and personal tax boards; 2 assistant assessors, at $2,000 each; 2 clerks, at $1,400 each; clerk, arrears division, $1,400; 4 clerks, at $1,200 each; draftsman, $1,200; 4 clerks, at $1,000 each; assistant or clerk, $900; clerk in charge of records, $1,000; 2 clerks, at $900 each; license clerk, $1,200; 2 clerks, at $1,000 each; inspector of licenses, $1,200; assistant inspector of licenses, $1,000; messenger, $600; 3 assistant assessors, at $3,000 each; clerk to board of assistant assessors, $1,500; messenger and driver, for board of assistant assessors, $600; clerk, $600; temporary clerk hire, $500; in all, $44,100.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman of the committee. How often, under the law, is property of the District of Columbia assessed?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Once in three years; that is, the real estate is assessed once in three years.

Mr. NORRIS. How often is the personal property assessed?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Annually.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, as to the employees mentioned here for the assessor's office, is that the regular number that is on the roll all the time? Is there any law by which, when the assessment of real estate is to take place, the clerks and employees shall be increased?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. There is a provision made for additional force when the assessment of real estate is to be made.

Mr. NORRIS. When was the last real estate assessment made?

Mr. BOWERS. Last year.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. We get the benefit of it for the first time in the ensuing fiscal year.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it not true that the force is now just as large as it was then?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. About the same.

Mr. NORRIS. Is the work about the same?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. They want an increase; they say they can not do the work with the present force.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it necessary to keep the entire force the entire three years in order to make an assessment?

Mr. BOWERS. Let me explain. Last year's bill carried with it a provision such as is carried every three years for additional clerk hire—temporary clerk hire—made necessary by the triennial assessment of real estate. That provision is left out of this bill, and it appears only when that assessment is made, and that constitutes the difference between the work which occurs annually and that which occurs only every three years.

Mr. NORRIS. That makes the proposition plain.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, What is the excise board? What has it to do with the property of the District of Columbia?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Primarily the determination of the liquor licenses.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I see this bill makes the assessor the chairman of that board.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes; the assessors are members of that board. That is a part of their duties continuously.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is this excise board in continuous session, or only occasionally?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It is a continuing board, but not in continuous session.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How much of its time is occupied while sitting as a board?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I can not say as to that, but the presumption is that there may be applications for liquor licenses at any time.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How much of the assessor's time is taken up by his being chairman of that board?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It will be easy for the gentleman to see that a member of this committee, unless he has gone specifically into that thing—which is surely a question of administration which we ought to leave to the various boards, because it would produce an infinite amount of detail, much of it valueless—would be unable to answer that question; and I am very frank to say that I do not know anything about how much, and that would be true of a multitude of other matters of information and detail.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For engineer's office, record division: For engineer of highways, $3,000; engineer of bridges, $2,100; superintendent of streets, $2,000; superintendent of county roads, $1,500, and $500 additional as assistant engineer in Rock Creek Park; superintendent of sewers, $3,000; inspector of asphalts and cements, $2,400 (Provided, That the inspector of asphalts and cements shall not receive or accept compensation of any kind from, or perform any work or render any services of a character required of him officially by the District of Columbia to, any person, firm, corporation, or municipality other than the District of Columbia); assistant inspector of asphalts and cements, $1,500; superintendent of repairs, $1,500; superintendent of trees and parkings, $1,800; assistant superintendent of trees and parkings, $1,000; assistant engineer, $2,200; assistant engineer, $2,100; 4 assistant engineers, at $1,800 each; 1 assistant engineer, $1,600; 5 assistant engineers, at $1,500 each; 1 assistant engineer, $1,350; 1 assistant engineer, $1,200; 2 transit men, at $1,200 each; 1 transit man, $1,050; 4 rodmen, at $900 each; 8 rodmen, at $780 each; 12 chainmen, at $650 each; 2 draftsmen, at $1,350 each; 2 draftsmen, at $1,200 each; 1 draftsman, $1,050; 1 general inspector of sewers, $1,300; 1 inspector of sewers, $1,200; 1 bridge inspector, $1,200; 2 inspectors, at $1,500 each; 3 inspectors of streets, at $1,200 each; 3 inspectors, at $1,200 each; 1 inspector, $1,000; 1 inspector, $900; 12 foremen, at $1,200 each; 1 foreman, Rock Creek Park, $1,200; 3 subforemen, at $1,050 each; 1 foreman, $1,050; 10 foremen, at $900 each; 1 bridge keeper, $650; 3 bridge keepers, at $600 each; 2 inspectors of property, at $936 each; 2 property yard keepers, at $1,000 each; 1 inspector of material, $1,200; chief clerk, $1,900; clerk, $1,800; clerk, $1,600; 2 clerks, at $1,500 each; permit clerk, $1,500; assistant permit clerk, $1,000; index clerk and typewriter, $900; 2 clerks, at $1,400 each; 2 clerks, at $1,350 each; 5 clerks, at $1,200 each; 1 clerk, $1,050; 2 clerks, at $1,000 each; clerk, $900; clerk, $840; 2 clerks, at $750 each; clerk, $620; clerk, $600; 7 messengers, at $540 each; 2 skilled laborers, at $600 each; skilled laborer, $625; janitor, $720; principal steam engineer, $1,800; 3 steam engineers, at $1,200 each; 3 assistant steam engineers, at $1,050 each; 6 oilers, at $600 each; 6 firemen, at $875 each; inspector, $1,400; storekeeper, $900; superintendent of stables, $1,500; blacksmith, $975; 2 watchmen, at $630 each; 2 drivers, at $630 each; driver, $540; inspector of gas and meters, $2,000; assistant inspector of gas and meters, $840; messenger, $540; boss carpenter, $1,200; boss painter, $1,200; boss tinner, $1,200; boss plumber, $1,200; boss steam fitter, $1,200; boss grader, $1,000; municipal architect, whose duty it shall be to supervise the preparation of plans for and the construction of all municipal buildings and the repair and improvement of all buildings belonging to the District of Columbia under the direction of the engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia, $3,600; and all laws or parts of laws placing such duties upon the inspector of buildings of the District of Columbia are hereby repealed; in all, $200,062.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the language beginning with "municipal architect," on page 13, line 24, and ending on page 14, line 7, with the word "repealed," for the purpose of making the point of order at the proper time, if the gentleman in charge of the bill can not explain the matter satisfactorily.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the entire paragraph.

Mr. MACON. My point of order, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] will understand, is against the creation of a new office—a municipal architect, at a salary of $3,600. Is not that a new office that is being created?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman, I would say that the inspector of buildings has, as a matter of fact, been to a very large extent the municipal architect. It is well known that there has been a great deal of criticism of him personally and of the conduct of the office. The board of education requested that there be an architect employed purely for the purpose of constructing school buildings. It is believed that a municipal architect will be able to do the duties both for the school board and the municipality at large, and release to that extent the inspector of buildings for the purpose designed in the creation of that office.

Mr. MACON. Is the work of the inspector of buildings so great that he can not attend to it. Has it outgrown him?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Substantially, that is the theory advanced.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON] that recently we have had several unfortunate accidents to buildings in course of erection in the city, which directed attention to the fact that the building inspector's force is overburdened with work, and the District Commissioners urge the creation of this new office in order that the building inspector's force might be relieved of the work to be done by this municipal architect, which is now imposed upon the inspectors under the law; and instead of increasing the inspecting force, which is adequate for ordinary purposes of inspection, we create this new office and relieve the inspector's division of the duties imposed upon it by this work to be done by the architect. It is the most economical way and satisfactory way of handling the situation.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Right along the last remark of the gentleman from Arkansas, that it is the most economical way of doing it, I would say that the present method of conducting the business is to employ outside architects and pay them 3 per cent or more or less in individual cases. It is believed that if the proper officer is secured to perform the duties expected of him, it would result in a material saving. In other words, that as against employing outside architects at a per centum, he will save his salary several times in the course of the year.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman to say that the present method was to employ outside architects upon the basis of 3 per cent commission?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman sure about the commission? That is a very small commission for architect's services.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That, I think, is about the minimum.

Mr. MANN. And I should say that 3 per cent commission would not cover the cost of preparing the plans and specifications and inspecting the work at all. I doubt whether it is done for 3 per cent, and if it be true, if the gentleman be right that it is done for 3 per cent, this will not save any money, because nobody can do this work for less than 3 per cent of the cost.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I find that either I misstated myself or that the gentleman from Illinois has misunderstood me. It is 3 per cent for the preparation of the plans, not for the supervision of the buildings after the plans are being put into execution.

Mr. MANN. Well, 3 per cent for the preparation of plans is not an exorbitant amount for architect's services. The actual work of preparing plans and specifications for a building is very great, as the gentleman will ascertain if he studies the offices of architects.

Now, who selects these architects at present?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I presume the Commissioners of the District in their collective capacity.

Mr. MANN. Who has charge of the construction of school buildings in the District, the District Commissioners or the school board?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The District Commissioners with the inspector of buildings in consultation with the school board.

Mr. MANN. Of course under this provision the school board would have nothing to say about it.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Oh, they would be consulted, no doubt.

Mr. MANN. Why would they be consulted? They might be consulted, but they would not have to be consulted.

Mr. BURLESON. They always are consulted.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether they are or are not, or whether they ought to be, but this provision undertakes to give absolute control over the construction of new school buildings, or the repair and improvement of all the old school buildings, or the repair and improvement of any other building, to one officer at a salary of $3,600. It can not be done if it is tried, and ought not to be, in my opinion.

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that it is not the intention that this municipal architect shall supervise the construction of all school buildings, or that he shall prepare plans for all the school buildings to be erected in the District. It is contemplated that he shall do about one-half of this work. The commissioners would still employ outside architects for the larger buildings, because they do not want all the school buildings of the District of Columbia to be turned out of the same mold; they want some variety in the architectural design, and it is contemplated that outside architects shall be employed in probably, as I now recollect, 50 per cent of the school buildings to be erected in the District.

Mr. MANN. Well, I think the gentleman and I agree. Now will the gentleman explain the meaning of this language:

> Municipal architect, whose duty it shall be to supervise the preparation of plans for and the construction of all municipal buildings and the repair and improvement of all buildings belonging to the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURLESON. Well, it would seem the language read would impose upon the architect the duty of supervising all; but that was not contemplated by the committee, as I recall it, though I am not positive about it, but I think the hearings will disclose that it was intended that this official would prepare the plans of only about 50 per cent of the school buildings.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. If the gentleman from Texas will allow me to read from Commissioner Morrow's hearing, page 19, near the bottom of the page. He said:

> We do not intend that this man—
>
> The municipal architect—
>
> shall do all of the architectural work of the District. He will probably design half of the school buildings. Probably a quarter of the school buildings are now designed in the office of the inspector of buildings. He will simply employ architects and supervise their work.

Mr. BURLESON. That answers the question of the gentleman from Illinois. I would now like his further attention for a moment. The hearings show that outside architects are to be employed to act under the supervision of the municipal architect.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand that under this proposition, where the municipal architect is to be employed at a salary of $3,600 a year, we are still to continue to pay these outside men, which the gentleman from Michigan assured us we would not pay?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman would have given attention instead of visiting with some neighbor——

Mr. MANN. I do not think anybody in the House can accuse the gentleman from Illinois of not giving attention.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan (continuing). He would have been fully enlightened. Did the gentleman hear and apprehend and comprehend the statement of Major Morrow?

Mr. MANN. Yes; but I take the wording of the bill against the statement of somebody before your committee about what they mean and the statement of the gentleman from Michigan himself. The gentleman from Michigan stated the purpose of this was to have this man prepare all the plans and pay him, saving several times the salary by saving the 3 per cent commission. I stated in reply that it would cost 3 per cent to make the plans. Now, the purpose is to pay the salary and the commissions besides.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I think the gentleman is a little at fault there, or else the gentleman from Michigan misspoke himself when he said "all the plans." Now, in regard to the cost. I apprehend they are paying out from 2½ to 3½ per cent for plans, averaging probably 3 per cent. Five per cent is the maximum where they do the work of designing the plans and supervising the construction.

Mr. MANN. It is an architect's usual commission.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, unless the gentleman in charge of this bill can assure me that all this 3 per cent business will be stopped, I am going to insist upon my point of order.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I do not quite get the statement of the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MACON. I say that unless the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER], who is in charge of this bill, can assure me that all of this 3 per cent commission business is going to stop in connection with municipal architectural work, I am going to insist on my point of order, for I am strictly opposed to the idea of creating new offices or increasing salaries in almost every paragraph of the annual appropriation bills.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I may say, in a general way, that this bill is surprisingly free from the creation of new offices and the increasing of salaries or the reduction of salaries. Occasionally, as the exigencies have developed in the course of the hearings, some changes have been made. I am sure the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON] will not insist on the chairman of the committee pledging the committee and the Congress that the new municipal architect shall perform all the duties of that office in the way of originating all plans and the supervision of the construction of buildings. I think it entirely safe to say that with a probable appropriation of from $650,000 to $1,000,000 for school buildings alone it is not within the power, physically speaking, of any one man to do all of that work. At the same time your committee does believe that this office is in the interest of economy and efficiency both.

Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman have any hearings of the members of the school board on this item?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I think there are hearings of the school board incidentally touching this, if not this year, within two or three years preceding. As I stated earlier, they want a school-board architect, pure and simple.

Mr. MANN. Under their control?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Absolutely.

Mr. MANN. That is the reason they want it?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Absolutely.

Mr. MANN. I undertake to say I do not know which is right, but it seems to me we ought to consider very seriously the proposition to have the construction of the school buildings solely under the control of the District Commissioners, under an architect responsible to the District Commissioners, who is not required to consult the school board about anything.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that practically members of the school board have been consulted constantly and changes have been made in accordance with their suggestions. This matter has been gone into, not only this year but other years, with a great deal of care, and this provision is a result of the best judgment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BOWERS. Will the gentleman from Arkansas yield to me now?

Mr. MACON. Certainly.

Mr. BOWERS. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the gentleman in his opposition to new offices, and I think if he will examine this bill and the bill that was reported for the maintenance of the District of Columbia last year, or if he will peruse the newspapers of this city published since this bill was reported to the House, he will be satisfied that it is characterized by the most rigid economy.

Mr. MACON. I want to say "amen" to that statement right now.

Mr. BOWERS. I do not think, therefore, that any criticism as to the creation of new offices can fairly be leveled at this bill. Now, as to the gentleman's suggestion that he will insist upon his point of order unless he can be absolutely assured that all of the "present per cent business" will be done away with, I say to him frankly that as a member of the committee and of the subcommittee that considered this bill, we can not by the creation of this office and the putting of these duties on this officer dispense with all the outside architects who are employed to make plans and do work.

Mr. MACON. Does it dispense with any appreciable number?

Mr. BOWERS. We can dispense, and will dispense, as we believe, with a great part of it, with infinitely more in amount than the salary of this officer. And it was in the interest of economy and with a view of reducing the expenses of the District that this provision was incorporated in the bill. Let me call the gentleman's attention again to what the engineer commissioner of the District, Major Morrow, had to say on that point:

We do not intend that this man shall do all the architectural work of the District.

He could not do it all.

He will probably design half of the school buildings. Probably a quarter of the school buildings are now designed in the office of the inspector of buildings.

In addition to that, I may say, he will design half of the structures needed for the municipality.

He will supervise the other work in addition to the work that he does in the preparation of the plans here. That is the most that we can get, and it seems to me it justifies the provision.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BOWERS. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Suppose that this bill with the language in it becomes law; and suppose that the municipal architect insists upon his right to make all the plans for all the municipal buildings. Do you not believe it to be a fact, under authority of this bill, that he would have exclusive right to do it to the exclusion of everybody else?

Mr. BOWERS. I will say in response to that that I think the matter would be up to the Commissioners of the District. I do not think there is any right vested in the municipal architect to do all the work required by this provision. In fact, I do not believe the provision requires him to do it, and if we should require him to do so it would be fruitless, because I do not believe he could do it all; and if after one year's trial it transpires that this is not justified, that he is not doing the work we expected him to do, it would be very easy to strike out the appropriation from the next bill, and nobody would be more ready to do it than the committee which originated it.

Mr. MACON. I have not seen any appropriations of this character dropped when once they are established.

Mr. BOWERS. If you pass this bill with this provision in it and the occasion ever requires it, you will see it.

Mr. MACON. The gentleman from Mississippi may have the very best intentions on earth to do that very thing, and I believe his intentions are good, but there are others on the committee besides him, and they are in the majority. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Is not this the inevitable result in all propositions of this kind, whether they be right or wrong? If this architect's office is created, he has to have plans and specifications prepared. He takes the expense of them out of the appropriation for the building. So there is no provision made for these expenses of the office.

Mr. BOWERS. That will be done on the outside.

Mr. MANN. Well, he has an office force. If the office force finish one building, will they seek an opportunity to be discharged or an opportunity for continued service?

Mr. BOWERS. I assume they could continue designing the buildings and doing the other work.

Mr. MANN. The next thing that we would find would be that he required an enlargement of that force. So that in a few years we will have an office force for the entire matter, I take it.

Mr. BOWERS. Suppose we do have such a force. Will they not be discharging the duties that will be required?

Mr. MANN. I was calling attention to the gentleman's proposition that 25 or 50 per cent of the buildings would have their plans prepared by this architect and the rest by outside architects.

Mr. BOWERS. We are informed that in many places, indeed, in a majority of the places where such an official exists, that the aid of outside architects is constantly called in; that no one man designs all the buildings that are needed, and that it would be undesirable for one architect to design all if for no other reason because you want a variety in architecture and not the sameness of idea permeating all the buildings of a great city.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not believe that to be desirable?

Mr. BOWERS. No; I do not.

Mr. MANN. And yet the committee of the gentleman reports a bill to the House for the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, who constructs buildings all over the United States, and not one of the plans is prepared outside of the Supervising Architect's office.

Mr. BOWERS. The office of the Supervising Architect?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BOWERS. Why my understanding is that he advertises, and plans are made by architects all over the country and submitted to that office and adopted by him.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I know that once in a while that is done. The plan of the Chicago post-office was prepared by an outside architect, authorized by a special act of Congress. Once in a while they do provide by a law authorizing it, but it is not generally the case.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the gentleman believe that you can have the services of a competent architect for $3,500 a year?

Mr. BOWERS. I think the District can have the benefit of the skill that is needed to do the work in a position of this kind for that salary. He will certainly be able to make the plans for the smaller school buildings and other buildings of that kind, and if the salary is not sufficient, then the commissioners, who have recommended this provision, have woefully underestimated what the salary should be, and it will be the only case of underestimation by them which this committee has discovered.

Mr. HARRISON. Is the gentleman familiar with the work that is done by like men in other cities? In New York State we have a state architect. Is the gentleman aware of what he gets?

Mr. BOWERS. No.

Mr. HARRISON. He gets a salary, and has been known also to collect bills for service as architect. What guaranty is there that this will not occur under the provisions of this paragraph?

Mr. BOWERS. I do not believe that would be possible here. I do not believe that practice would be tolerated for an instant here.

Mr. GARRETT. Just one question.

Mr. BOWERS. I can not say what the New York practice is, but I do not think such a practice as that would be tolerated here for an instant.

Mr. HARRISON. I think this proposition opens the door for all kinds of bills and expenses in the future.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman from Mississippi intimates that there might be some danger of this architect drawing the designs for all the buildings in the city. Does the gentleman from Mississippi not think that there would be more danger of his not drawing any of the plans rather than all the plans?

Mr. BOWERS. I do not think he is going to overwork himself. I think he will do a fair and proper amount of work. I think he will do what he ought to do, and not more than that.

Mr. GARDNER or Michigan. I understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to say that the plans for all federal buildings are made down here in the office of the Supervising Architect. Am I correct?

Mr. MANN. What the gentleman from Illinois stated was that there were cases where they had been made by outside architects, and that the law authorized it, but that as a matter of fact at present they are invariably made, as I understand, in the office of the Supervising Architect.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. If the gentleman means to-day, I can not say; but I do know that the plans for the last public building erected in the district that I represent were made entirely in the city of Detroit. Not only that; there is a general law authorizing the Supervising Architect to employ outside talent for preparing plans for federal buildings.

Mr. BOWERS. And they do that.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The act known as the "Tarsney Act," introduced by a distinguished former Member of this House from my own State, is the law to which I refer.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid that if this act is allowed to create this new office, it will not be more than a year or two before we will have some kind of an assistant architect established. I notice here in this bill we have an assessor to be appropriated for and then we have two assistant assessors. They are on page 6. On page 8 I notice that we have a corporation counsel whom we pay $4,500, and then we appropriate so much for a first assistant corporation counsel, so much for a second assistant corporation counsel, so much for a third assistant corporation counsel, and so on. I believe that if we allow this new office to be created here, it will only be a very short time before we shall have to pay not only $3,600 for a municipal architect, but so much for a first assistant municipal architect, so much for a second assistant architect, and so on. For fear that is the course which will be taken in connection with this matter, I will insist on my point of order and stop it at the very beginning.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I hope the gentleman from Arkansas will not insist on his point of order at this moment.

Mr. MACON. I will withhold my point of order.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Let me say to the gentleman that he builds up objections that may arise in the future, and cites assistants for the district attorney as examples. Why, there is not a populous county in the United States that has not its attorney and its assistant attorney, and more than one assistant where necessary. The reason for this is that it is not possible for one lawyer to be in several different courts at the same time, or to attend to all the business. Precisely so with the assessor's office. You may conjure up, if you wish, any kind of objection and defeat any proposition in that way if you choose. I am not here to say that the time may not come when this city shall have half a million or a million inhabitants, a condition of things that is not very far away, when the necessity will demand an assistant municipal architect; and when he is necessary he ought to be provided for; but "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Provide for the necessities now. I say to the gentleman from Arkansas that his objections are purely speculative. The committee has gone into this proposition with the greatest care, not only at this session, but in preceding hearings, and we have given to you our very best judgment for the welfare of the city and for economy in the administration of municipal affairs. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of order.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to object to anything that the gentleman from Michigan favors, because I believe he is very conscientious in his desire to do right, and that is all any man can do. No one ought to be asked to do more than that. The gentleman from Mississippi, I believe, purposes to do right, and I may say the same about all of the other members of the Appropriations Committee. But, sir, I want to insist that they have from time to time, since I have been a Member of this House, brought in propositions to create new offices or to increase salaries that they have stated were absolutely necessary, and I have been instrumental in having some of these increases stopped—I have been instrumental in having some of these intended offices fail of creation—and yet the affairs of the Government have gone on just as efficiently as before; so I have concluded that it is not absolutely necessary for the proper conduct of the affairs of the Government of the United States to allow every office to be created that the members of the Committee on Appropriations may have in mind or desire to have created; that it is not absolutely necessary for the proper conduct of the affairs of this great Nation to have every salary increased that the Committee on Appropriations desires to have increased.

In reply to what the gentleman from Michigan has said about assistants for nearly all officers, I want to say that I have known of some public officers who did not have assistants. I myself had the honor to serve a circuit of five large counties in my own State, and we have some criminals—I have heard it stated that Arkansas had some criminals in it, and especially in that part of it in which I happen to live, known as the "black belt," on the Mississippi River—but I did not have an assistant. So I believe it is possible for a public official to get along without assistants if he will do something himself; and, sir, I am inclined to think, from what I have heard on both sides of this question, that it is possible for this government to get along without this new office, and for that reason I am going to insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his point of order against the whole paragraph?

Mr. MANN. I would like, first, to ask the gentleman in reference to the provision in the bill, on page 10, concerning the inspector of asphalt and cement, which as it stands is subject to a point of order, although I do not feel disposed to make the point of order; but there has been so much said lately in regard to a scandal in the District that I wish the gentleman in charge of the bill, or some other member of the committee, would give us some authoritative statement on the subject.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The gentleman says page 10 of the bill. We have passed that.

Mr. MANN. I was asking about this so-called scandal, if it be one. I do not know that it is a scandal. But it concerns the measurement of asphalt and cement under the jurisdiction of this inspector. What information can the gentleman give us?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I think that has nothing to do with this provision.

Mr. MANN. I am not at all certain that it has; but whether it has or not, this provision came into the bill about the time that scandal commenced.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Allow me to say that this provision has been in the bill for some time.

Mr. MANN. Several years.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It originated in this way: It was thought that the inspector was not only serving the Government of the United States in his office as inspector, but serving himself in giving his opinion in regard to certain properties, and accompanying that opinion, either authoritatively or suggestively, as a Government guaranty, that it was what it purported to be; and this was put in to correct that. It had nothing whatever to do with the so-called scandal with reference to resurfacing asphalt.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether it had or not.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I say it had not when it was put in.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I understand that.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. So far as I know, it had not then and has not now.

Mr. MANN. Is the scandal the result of this provision in the bill?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Not in the least, as I understand it.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman has had the District Commissioners before the committee and this subject must have been referred to. It is claimed that the District lost $50,000 or $60,000 by false measurement. I do not wish to obtain any information which is secret or which the commissioners intend to use on the trial, but if it is public I think we ought to know about it.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I will say that to which the gentleman refers became known to the committee and to the country after this bill was reported and had gone to the printer.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is the author of that provision.

Mr. MANN. I understand that; I talked with the gentleman from New York before it was put in the bill. I was disposed to make a point of order then, but upon his representation of the need of it I did not do it, because of the confidence I have in the judgment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the inspector of asphalt and cement in this city had a laboratory provided by the Government and was doing this work for the District. It was ascertained that he was also being held out as a federal expert and going about the country doing this work in other cities. The committee thought that it was improper that a man in the employ of the municipal government should be held out as a United States expert and going about engaging in private enterprise. I thought so then, and I think so now. I think in work of that character it is improper that an employee of the municipality or of the District, provided with a laboratory by the Government, should be advertising as an expert of the United States Government and going about the country doing similar work for individual corporations, either public or private.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, and as I remarked before, I have very great confidence in the judgment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], but he put this provision in to head off a particular individual at the time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It happened that at that time the then inspector was doing that work.

Mr. MANN. He was the same inspector who at that time agreed upon the measurements under which the District now claims it has been defrauded out of fifty or sixty or seventy thousand dollars.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know nothing about that except what I saw in the public press, and that was to the effect that the boxes, or whatever they are, in which they measure asphalt were found to contain more or less, whichever way it would work out, than it was supposed, and that the District was paying for more than it was really getting. I have understood from what I have seen in the public press that it is claimed the contractor has collected over $70,000 in excess of the amount he would have been entitled to if the measurements had been correct.

Mr. MANN. Very well. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Arkansas insists on his point of order, and I shall withdraw the point of order as against the whole paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. The Chair will then consider the point of order of the gentleman from Arkansas. We have a rule, with which the committee is familiar, against changing existing law in an appropriation bill or any amendment thereto. This bill, in the 5th line, on page 14, provides for the repeal of all laws or parts of laws doing certain things. Of course anything which curtails something by cutting its head clear off changes it, and the point of order is sustained. The Chair will ask how far the point of order extends?

Mr. MACON. It commences with the words "municipal architect," on line 24, page 13, and extends down until the word "repealed," in line 7.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. Without objection, the total will be changed to accord with the facts.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Without any intention of throwing bouquets, I simply desire to congratulate the gentlemen who compose the subcommittee on appropriations which brought in this bill for its cleanness. I also desire to congratulate the country, a small part of which I represent, upon having such a subcommittee, for they have brought in an appropriation bill consisting of 104 pages, and I have gone through it, beginning with the first line and ending with the last, and notwithstanding I have a slight disposition to make points of order now and then when I find anything in an appropriation bill that I do not think ought to be in it, I must confess that the point I have just made, and which has been sustained, is the only one, in my humble judgment, to be found within the pages of this measure that ought to be made against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. WANGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 16954) to provide for the Thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LONG, Mr. HALE, and Mr. MCENERY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Department of insurance: For superintendent of insurance, $3,500; examiner, $1,500; statistician, $1,500; clerk, $1,000; stenographer, $720; temporary clerk hire, $900; in all, $9,120.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I desire to correct an error made under a misapprehension in this paragraph, and I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 16, page 15, strike out "nine hundred" and insert "twelve hundred." In the same line strike out "one" and insert "four."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman if he proposes to make it what it was last year?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes. They asked for another officer, and we refused that, and at the same time, under a misapprehension, reduced the amount. We simply restore what we had last year, without an additional officer.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the two amendments offered by the gentleman from Michigan, which, without objection, will be considered together.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For services of temporary draftsmen, computers, laborers, additional field party when required, purchase of supplies, care or hire of teams, purchase and maintenance of a motor vehicle, $5,000; all expenditures hereunder to be made only on the written authority of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and may include the purchase of a motor vehicle at a cost not exceeding $1,500, said vehicle to be driven by a member of the field party using the same.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that the gentleman does not increase the amount that is appropriated for this service, but does provide that $1,500 of the $5,000 shall be used for motor-vehicle purposes. How much of this $5,000 is ordinarily used?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. So far as I know, substantially the whole of it; but it is believed, and this was put in the bill by the clear statement of the engineer commissioner, that it would add greatly to the economy of the service if they could have the motor vehicle. As is known, they go over the various parts of the District of Columbia at points widely divergent. They now employ a horse or horses and drive, taking the men with them, and the horses are weighted, and the men go on with the work.

Mr. MANN. They had authority this year to purchase a motor vehicle.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. They did not purchase it, and ask that they might purchase one.

Mr. MANN. I can not see what this last provision amounts to. There was a provision in the bill last year authorizing them to purchase a motor vehicle, but I judge they had not money enough. Now, you put in the same authority and then put in express authority to use $1,500, but do not add anything to the appropriation.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Out of the lump sum.

Mr. MANN. They could have done that without this last provision.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. They did not.

Mr. MANN. I suppose they did not have money enough. If it is desirable to purchase a motor vehicle, why did we not appropriate money enough to permit them to get it?

Mr. BOWERS. The appropriation was increased last year by $3,000. The increase is from $5,000 to $8,000, and the reason for the concluding language is to limit the price that might be paid. Part is cared for by the increase of work, and the statement of the engineer commissioner is that this will accomplish about 50 per cent more work, or twice as much work, in outlying sections. The appropriation for 1909 was about $5,000.

Mr. MANN. That is what it is now. It is $5,000 now, and there is no need of an increase——

Mr. BOWERS. I see the gentleman is right. I was misled by the estimates.

Mr. MANN. Exactly what I wanted to call attention to. The estimate is undoubtedly larger. I do not know whether they need a motor vehicle or not. If it is economy to let them have it it is economy to give them money enough to purchase it.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Was that cleared up?

Mr. MANN. Not at all; the gentleman finds he was in error.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I think I can make that clear to the gentleman. There were three assistant engineers, at $1,500 each, last year——

Mr. MANN. But I am not talking about assistant engineers.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Hear me a moment, please. This bill carries three assistant engineers, at $1,500. The same amount is appropriated for them, but the $1,500 is allowed to stand and is used in the purchase of a motor vehicle, there being at this time but two assistant engineers paid out of this.

Mr. MANN. If there is $5,000 for this, why did not they purchase one out of the existing appropriation?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I think I could not have made myself clear to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. You certainly have not made yourself clear to me on that point. They have $5,000 under the current appropriation law, with authority to purchase a motor vehicle. Now you propose to give $5,000 in the next appropriation, with authority to purchase a motor vehicle, with especial authority to use $1,500 to purchase that motor vehicle.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Now, if the gentleman will be kind enough to pay attention, I will see if I can not make myself understood. They have now two assistant engineers. This bill provides for three——

Mr. BOWERS. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that if he will read a copy of last year's bill he will find that there is no provision in that bill for a motor vehicle.

Mr. MANN. I find that is true. That was not so marked on my copy of the bill, but the appropriation is the same. If the gentleman is satisfied, I have no reason to complain, but it is perfectly clear you have authority to use an appropriation for the current year, or else you have not got enough for the ensuing year if you are going to use one-third for the purchase of a motor vehicle.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Allow me to say—I think the gentleman will bear with me for a moment—we carried one assistant engineer on the per diem roll last year at $1,500. Now, that $1,500 remains in this bill, but the engineer on the per diem roll last year is paid out of the other sum, leaving $1,500 to be used for the purchase of a motor vehicle, which amount last year was paid for an engineer on the per diem roll.

Mr. MANN. Well, do I understand they pay an engineer on the per diem roll out of an appropriation providing for the services of temporary draftsmen, computers, laborers, additional field parties when required, purchase of supplies, care or hire of teams, and so forth?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I understand they may do that; yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Very well, though I would say it was a clear evasion of the law.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fuel, lighting, fitting up building, including lunch-room equipment, and other contingent expenses, $7,500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the last paragraph. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what this lunch-room equipment is?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, there is quite a force of employees at the city library. Some of them live at a considerable distance from where their work requires them to be. Their hours of service do not allow them to go home and get a warm meal. In a room there, not otherwise occupied, there has been provision made where they can make a cup of coffee or tea if they desire to do so. Out of a fund left over in the building of the library this was instituted and has been found a great convenience and conducive to the health and comfort of the employees. I may say that they are paid at a low rate of compensation as compared with many others here in the city, and it is in the interest of health that it is done.

Mr. MANN. What is this lunch-room equipment to cost?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. A very small sum.

Mr. BOWERS. It is to replace some dishes and cooking utensils.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. A very small sum, whatever it is.

Mr. MANN. I am not so sure. What reason is there which the gentleman can give for providing lunch-room equipment in the Public Library building that can not be given for providing lunch-room equipment in every public building in Washington?

Mr. BOWERS. In reply to the gentleman's last suggestion, the reason as stated by the librarian is that with these employees the hours of some begin in the afternoon and run on continuously into the night, thereby depriving them of the opportunity to go home and get dinner. So they are furnished facilities there for taking their own material, their own food, and putting it into edible shape so that they can have a warm meal in the evening. I am giving the gentleman the librarian's statement of it.

Mr. MANN. There is no caterer maintained there?

Mr. BOWERS. None, as I understand. There are simply facilities for them to heat their own meals.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. On this point I want to say that it involves no increase in the appropriation, but authorizes these purchases to be made under a fund already provided.

Mr. MANN. The fact that it involves no increase in appropriation is no argument at all, because whenever you expend money it involves an increase of expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being withdrawn, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of the money appropriated by this act, except appropriations for the militia, shall be used for the purchase, livery, or maintenance of horses, or for the purchase, maintenance, or repair of buggies or carriages and harness, except as provided for in the appropriation for contingent and miscellaneous expenses or unless the appropriation from which the same is proposed to be paid shall specifically authorize such purchase, livery, maintenance, and repair, and except also as hereinafter authorized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he would have any objection, as long as these limitations extend only to the old methods of transportation and we are now engaged in a new method of transportation, namely, by motor vehicles, to inserting the words "motor vehicles" in this, so as to read:

Or for the purchase, maintenance, or repair of motor vehicles, buggies, or carriages, and harness.

Is it not time to make this provision apply to motor vehicles as well as to horses and carriages?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I would say in reply to the gentleman that the committee determined to make an express provision wherever there was a variation.

Mr. MANN. But here is a limitation upon the use of money for these purposes unless it be specifically authorized. If that is not necessary, it ought not to be in here. If it is necessary, it does not apply to the purchase of motor vehicles.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Well, I may say in answer to that, that no motor vehicle has been purchased without specific authorization.

Mr. MANN. Probably not. The gentleman may not be informed whether there has or not. I do not know. There had grown up a practice here of buying horses and carriages which the gentleman in charge of the bill knew nothing about.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Well, I think I am safe in saying——

Mr. MANN. This does not merely apply to purchase, but to repair. Should we not know just as well in relation to motor vehicles as in relation to carriages?

I am not criticising the purchase of motor vehicles, but as long as you have commenced it, why not put it on the same basis as you do the others? I move, Mr. Chairman, unless the gentleman from Michigan wishes, to insert after the word——

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Just a moment. I would like to ask the gentleman whether that would not be an implied authority to purchase and repair automobiles out of some other provision than this when he makes this amendment?

Mr. MANN. Let me answer the gentleman by asking him a question. Does it imply such authority as that with reference to buggies and carriages as the express provision is? Now, that is the purpose of this limitation.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Already the Commissioners may purchase horses, buggies, and carriages. If you put in this limitation, you endanger enlarging the scope rather than restricting it.

Mr. MANN. Let us see.

No part of the money appropriated by this act, except appropriations for the militia, shall be used for the purchase, livery, or maintenance of horses, or for the purchase, maintenance, or repair of buggies or carriages and harness, except as provided for in the appropriation for contingent and miscellaneous expenses, or unless the appropriation from which the same is proposed to be paid shall specifically authorize such purchase, livery, maintenance and repair, and except also as hereinafter authorized.

Now, under that provision the District Commissioners can not purchase horses unless it is specifically authorized in the bill. They can not purchase buggies or horses unless it is specifically authorized in the bill or an appropriation is made for that purpose. Now, the gentleman himself in the bill specifically authorizes the purchase of a motor vehicle. Why, then, should not that limitation cover motor vehicles and appropriations for that purpose? There is no distinction between a carriage and motor vehicle so far as standing before the law is concerned.

Mr. BOWERS. I think the comptroller has ruled that they can not purchase a motor vehicle out of a general, indefinite appropriation. He has held that a motor vehicle can not be purchased unless specifically appropriated for as such.

Mr. MANN. I undertake to say that there are a dozen items in this bill out of which you might purchase a motor vehicle at $3,500.

Mr. BOWERS. The comptroller has held differently, and that there is a limitation on the purchase. But whether they can do it or not, the commissioners have come to the committee with the request for a specific authorization for the purchase of a motor vehicle, because of this very limitation put on the appropriations made heretofore. They authorized the purchase of vehicles in general terms, and even this has been held by the comptroller as insufficient to authorize the purchase of motor vehicles.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I offer an amendment to insert, in line 20, page 19, after the word "of," the words "motor vehicles."

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 20, page 19, after the word "of," insert the words "motor vehicles."

Mr. MANN. That would put motor vehicles on the same plane as other vehicles.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, allow me to read:

No part of the money appropriated by this act, * * * shall be used for the purchase, livery, or maintenance of horses, or for the purchase, maintenance, or repair of buggies or carriages and harness, except as provided for in the appropriation for contingent and miscellaneous expenses, or unless the appropriation from which the same is proposed to be paid shall specifically authorize such purchase, livery, maintenance, and repair, and except also as hereinafter authorized.

Mr. MANN. But you do not name horses and carriages in this miscellaneous and contingent expense.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. What is the use of putting it in here? It is not named.

Mr. MANN. If you have a miscellaneous and contingent expense fund, general in its nature, without any restriction, you can purchase the best French motor vehicle you could buy anywhere.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. But it is restricted.

Mr. MANN. There is no restriction.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The restriction is specifically stated here. If you put this in, it makes it universal.

Mr. MANN. But there is no restriction as to the purchase of motor vehicles out of that appropriation.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The comptroller has made that restriction, and ruled upon it.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the comptroller has not ruled any such thing. The comptroller has ruled that an appropriation for a specific purpose can not be used for the purchase of motor vehicles. Now, the appropriation for vehicles does not include motor vehicles.

But if you make an appropriation simply for contingent and miscellaneous expenses—$25,000—they can purchase what they please out of that appropriation, and the comptroller has not otherwise ruled.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I am authorized to say that he has made just such a ruling.

Mr. MANN. I am authorized to say that the appropriation is not what you are talking about; that it is not that kind of an appropriation.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 14, noes 25.

Mr. MANN. If the committee will not accept a reasonable amendment of that sort, I think I shall have to make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Pending the count,

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of no quorum. It is patent that there is no quorum here, and it is equally patent that the committee does not know a good thing when it sees it. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being withdrawn, the amendment is rejected, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairs, streets, avenues, and alleys: For current work of repairs of streets, avenues, and alleys, including resurfacing and repairs to concrete pavements with the same or other not inferior material, of which sum $50,000 shall be immediately available, $300,000; and this appropriation shall be available for repairing the pavements of the street railways when necessary; the amounts thus expended shall be collected from such railroad company, as provided by section 5 of "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia," approved June 11, 1878, and shall be deposited to the credit of the appropriation for the fiscal year in which they are collected: Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized, in their discretion, to expend not to exceed $100,000 of the sum hereby appropriated in repairing such streets, avenues, and alleys as they may deem advisable by what is known as the heater method of repairs; and to enter into a supplemental contract for such repairs with the present contractor with the District of Columbia for work of resurfacing and repairing asphalt and coal-tar pavements, if a price satisfactory to said commissioners can be agreed upon between said contractor and said commissioners, and in the event that such a satisfactory price can not be agreed upon, the said commissioners are hereby authorized, in their discretion, to enter into a new contract for such work of repairs by the heater method, after competition, in an amount not to exceed $100,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice an item in here which is subject to a point of order, in reference to the heater method of repairs. Will the gentleman give us some information about that?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] has given attention to that. I will ask him to answer the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BURLESON. What does the gentleman wish to know about it?

Mr. MANN. Anything.

Mr. BURLESON. It is a new process of repairing pavements.

Mr. MANN. That is what I supposed. I think we are entitled to some enlightenment.

Mr. BURLESON. We have but little information upon the subject. My understanding is——

Mr. MANN. You have enough information to appropriate a hundred thousand dollars for it.

Mr. BURLESON. Our understanding is that this is a more economical method than has been heretofore used for the repairing of streets, and our idea was if this economical method is used the District and the General Government should get the benefit of it. Consequently we put in this proviso, in order that a contract for the repair of streets by this new method of repairing might be entered into, and if it results in effecting great economy we desire the General Government and the District be given the benefit of it.

Mr. MANN. I quite agree with the gentleman. On the other hand, unless the gentleman has information—I assume that he has some—it is possible under this provision for the District Commissioners, if they wish to, which I assume they do not at present, greatly to favor the present contractor, because they can give him a new contract on this heater method at any price they choose without competition.

Mr. BURLESON. The purpose of the proviso was to prevent such thing; in fact, it was intended to accomplish just the contrary—to effect a saving.

Mr. MANN. The proviso expressly authorizes them to enter into a contract if they choose. I assume that at present they would not.

Mr. BURLESON. It was put in at the request of the engineer commissioner, in order that the District might enter into a contract during the next fiscal year, and by adopting the new method of repairing the streets—the heater method, I believe it is called—effect a saving to the District and the Government.

Mr. GILLETT. It is a method by which they melt the tar right on the street.

Mr. MANN. That is no new method. I have seen that in operation on the streets of my home city for years.

Mr. BURLESON. The method in contemplation may not be new in Chicago, but it is new in Washington.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think I have seen it in Washington since I have been here.

Mr. BURLESON. Recently, yes; but before last year, I think not.

Mr. MANN. No; not recently, unless I am very much mistaken.

Mr. GILLETT. I think this particular method is new.

Mr. BOWERS. This particular method is new.

Mr. BURLESON. It is entirely new here; was never used before this fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. This particular method may be new; and if it is, it may be extremely desirable. It may be worth hundreds of thousands of dollars to this contractor to have it said that Congress has adopted his patented method. That is the reason we ought to know what the gentleman knows about it.

Mr. BURLESON. Our understanding is that it will effect a considerable saving to the District and the General Government if this new method is adopted, and so at the request of the engineer commissioner we have given him this authority to enter into a contract providing for the repair of the streets by the heater method.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Let me ask the gentleman is this new plan patented?

Mr. BURLESON. I think not.

Mr. MANN. If it is not patented and is a new process and comes in here in an appropriation bill, I will be surprised.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is it under the control of any one concern?

Mr. BURLESON. I think not.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman from Texas know anything about it?

Mr. BURLESON. I do not claim to have all the information about it. It was used in the District of Columbia for the first time this year.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What is the information of the gentleman as to whether it is controlled by one concern or not?

Mr. BURLESON. I understand that the engineer can enter into a contract for it.

Mr. DRISCOLL. The word "understand" is very indefinite; it is the meanest word in the English language.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield to me a moment. I think my friend from Texas is mistaken as to the duration of the contract now in existence in reference to the repairs of the streets. I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee, and the clerk is sitting beside him and he can correct me if I am wrong. The contract extends beyond the present fiscal year. In other words, it is a contract for more than one year. Since the contract was made the particular method of repair which is contemplated by this provision has come into use. The contractor, because the price is less and the profits perhaps less, or for some other reason, declines to proceed with this method, sticking to the old method of doing things, and the object of this provision is to enable the commissioners to flank him by doing the work by other means outside of that contract—by this approved and cheaper method, which the engineer commissioner estimates will be about 80 per cent of the present cost.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, that information, I think, is very satisfactory to everybody. I want to call attention of the gentlemen to another provision, and that is in reference to the amounts for repairing pavements on street railways where it provides that the moneys collected shall be deposited to the credit of the appropriation for the fiscal year in which they are collected. That was one of the items I had in my mind a while ago in speaking of some provision like that in the bill, although that does not relate to fees collected. Another provision is on page 21, for advertising notices of taxes in arrears, where the fund is reimbursed out of fees collected

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Anacostia flats: For employment of special counsel to investigate and determine the ownership of the land and riparian rights along the Anacostia River, for the purpose of improvement of the Anacostia flats, $5,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the last paragraph. I understand that there is a commission which has been appointed and is now engaged in collecting information in reference to the title of property owned by the Government in the District of Columbia. That was provided for, I think, last year. Now, what is the object of providing for an attorney to do that same work over again?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I do not understand that this is the same proposition. This is specifically to determine the title as to land and riparian rights along the Anacostia River.

Mr. MANN. To determine the title to private property, or to determine whether the property is private property or belongs to the Government?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The latter.

Mr. MANN. We have a commission now in existence doing that very thing.

Mr. BOWERS. What commission does the gentleman from Illinois refer to?

Mr. MANN. A commission to report as to the title to real estate owned by the United States in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BOWERS. When was the commission authorized?

Mr. MANN. I think last year. It grew up, as I remember it, out of the discussion in the Sydney Bieber case, concerning which there was considerable talk in the House and at the other end of the Capitol last year. I see by the papers that the commission has been at work and is likely to make some kind of a report.

Mr. BOWERS. Was it authorized by law or created by executive action?

Mr. MANN. I do not remember, but I do not see that that makes any difference. If the Executive has jurisdiction to direct some one to make an investigation, and he has exercised that power, there is no necessity for making a specific appropriation for the purpose.

Mr. BOWERS. Let me say in reply that if the commission was created, as the gentleman thinks it was, by reason of the discussion that grew out of the Bieber matter a year ago, it is hardly probable that that commission will regard it within the scope of its work to go into this particular matter here, namely, the Anacostia flats. The Appropriation Committee has been confronted year after year with the contention that some improvement, some reclamation, perhaps, was necessary as to the Anacostia flats. It is demanded as a sanitary measure, if for no other reason.

Now, up to this time they have declined to take up the question of the improvement or the reclamation of those flats because the title to the property is uncertain, and it is in dispute whether that property belongs to the Government or is vested in private persons. As a first and preliminary step, an essential to doing anything, if we determine thereafter that anything should be done, it is necessary that the title of the property should be determined, and it seemed to the committee, and I must confess it seems to me now, even though this commission may be at work, that it is eminently wise to have this question of the title examined into and reported upon by a trained lawyer who can make such investigation and make a report upon which Congress can safely proceed in this very important matter.

Mr. MANN. If the Government seeks to do anything with this property, and if it has title, of course it can not lose the title by any process.

Mr. BOWERS. Certainly not. It is proposed, however, that the Government shall do something with this property if for no other reason than to protect the health of the District, and it is suggested that it be done by a reclamation of the land.

We do not want to go into the business of reclaiming the lands of private owners. We want to determine whether this is owned by the Government or whether it is owned by other persons before any step is taken for the reclamation of these flats. If it is private property and some sanitation is needed, the character of legislation will be very essentially different from that which we would enact if it were Government property, and when reclaimed would be the property of the Government.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has explained the matter very lucidly. The item in the appropriation bill is for the identical purpose I supposed it was—for the purpose of putting the Government on record as commencing a very expensive improvement of the Anacostia flats. There can be no excuse for this appropriation to examine the title to these flats, unless it be the purpose of the Government to proceed with the improvement of the flats; and it seems to me that we ought to have some intimation on that subject before we insert the entering wedge. This improvement is one of undoubtedly great importance to many people and undoubtedly one of tremendous expense to the Government, if undertaken.

Mr. BOWERS. Does the gentleman think that the mere inquiry into the title of this property would bind the Congress to proceed any further with the matter?

Mr. MANN. No; but the gentleman thinks this: There is no object in inquiring into the title of the property and spending money for that purpose unless it be the intention of the Government to make use of that information, and we can not make use of that information unless we proceed to the improvement of the flats. If it were a private owner, he might lose the title to his property through the statute of limitations. That is quite a different proposition. But the Government does not need to protect itself against the running of the statute of limitations or against laches. The title of the Government, such as it is, will remain in the Government for the next hundred years, although we did nothing concerning this property.

Mr. HARRISON. Why does not the corporation counsel investigate it?

Mr. BOWERS. There is no doubt in the world that this inquiry is the first step, but neither that committee nor this House would ever commit itself to any improvement of the Anacostia flats until a proper plan for their improvement was presented, and until they had critically examined into both the project and the cost and determined upon the advisability of making the expenditure and doing the work according to that given plan.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Why does not the corporate counsel investigate this title?

Mr. BOWERS. Because the corporation counsel's office has all the work now that it can do, and because the work can be better done by a specialist in land-title examination.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his point of order?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order for the present.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. How many assistants has the corporation counsel?

Mr. BOWERS. I can not recall now.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Does the gentleman recall the salary of the corporation counsel?

Mr. BOWERS. I can tell the gentleman by turning to the page of the bill. There are so many figures in the bill that it is impossible to carry them in one head.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I note that back here on page 23, line 6, there is a provision for the employment of special counsel not to exceed $3,000 per annum.

Mr. BOWERS. That is a provision that runs with every bill. To say the least of it, there is as much work in that office as it is possible for the force to do, working full or perhaps overtime.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Does not the gentleman think it would be in the interests of economy to add another corporation counsel and cut out these special fees?

Mr. BOWERS. No, I do not; if for no other reason than that given this afternoon by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON] at an earlier stage of the proceedings, that when you create an office it is very hard to get rid of that office. Besides, this is the work of a specialist; this is work of a character that ought to be done by men trained to the particular work of investigating titles. It is a piece of work in the nature of an emergency. It is not continuing in its character. It has to be done, and that is the end of it. There is no need for the services afterwards of the man who makes that investigation.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. If you will permit a suggestion, it seems to me that this is work with which the corporation counsel and his office ought to be familiar, and if they are not now familiar with it they ought to begin to get familiar with questions of this kind.

Mr. BOWERS. Every lawyer is more or less familiar with the examination of titles, and yet that does not interfere with the fact, as every lawyer knows, that there are specialists in the matter of the examination of titles who are infinitely better equipped for that work than the best trial lawyer that ever went into a court room.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. But you do not provide there shall be an expert; you simply provide for special counsel.

Mr. BOWERS. Certainly; and under that term they would employ a man who is an expert, an expert in that class of work, just for the same reason that we know they would not employ a brickmaker or a carpenter or a blacksmith.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I have here the provision in the bill for the office of the corporation counsel, which provides for one corporation counsel at $4,500, a first assistant corporation counsel at $2,500, a second assistant corporation counsel at $1,800, a third assistant counsel at $1,600, a fourth assistant corporation counsel at $1,500, a stenographer, and so forth.

Mr. BOWERS. Yes; does the gentleman think those sums are not necessary for the corporation counsel's office of the District?

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I am unable to tell; but I think it is work that ought to be done through the office of the corporation counsel.

Mr. BOWERS. But the gentleman has not answered my inquiry as to whether the force is too great for the office of the corporation counsel for the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I believe the force ought to be added to if the work is more than they can do.

Mr. BOWERS. You would add to the permanent force by reason of a temporary emergency?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I assume from the language that there are some private landowners interested in this proposition.

Mr. BOWERS. No; the point is this. The understanding of the committee is that this land is claimed by the Government of the United States, that at the same time private proprietors claim to own it. There is a conflict of claims, and it is to determine whether it is Government property that this investigation is made as a preliminary step to moving at all in the premises. In other words, we do not want even to consider this scheme of reclamation if this is private property. If it is Government property, then the question as to whether or not we will consider it will properly arise.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask whether there has been a contest to the title of this property in any court?

Mr. BOWERS. None that I am advised of.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What is the complication about the title to this property?

Mr. BOWERS. The complication arises out of the fact that there have been and are adverse claims to this water front, known as the "Anacostia flats."

Mr. DRISCOLL. Who has made adverse claims?

Mr. BOWERS. I do not know the names of the people, but if the gentleman will examine the hearings he will find that this contest over the title to this property has been brought to the attention of Congress time after time, I do not know for how many years back. There is no doubt in the world there is a substantial controversy.

Mr. DRISCOLL. It does not seem to me we should provide a compensation of $5,000 for a man to investigate this title, and there is no use for it, especially when you do not know how much work is involved, and so forth, and if the gentleman from Illinois does not insist upon his point of order I will.

Mr. BOWERS. I will say to the gentleman, as to the compensation, that it was regarded by all the members of the subcommittee, who are lawyers, as being the minimum sum, and not one of them would have undertaken to do such work for that amount or for a considerably larger sum.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time may be extended for the purpose of asking a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Mississippi be extended for the purpose of asking a question. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I desire to ask whether or not there was any showing before the committee as to the probable length of time it would take for this special counsel to look up this matter.

Mr. BOWERS. No; but he was expected to do the work for the lump sum of $5,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. No matter whether it took six months or a year?

Mr. BOWERS. No matter what time was consumed in the investigation, the sum of $5,000 was to pay for a complete and exhaustive investigation and report on this question.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Was there any special counsel whose names were mentioned or suggested?

Mr. BOWERS. No.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Where are these Anacostia flats?

Mr. BOWERS. They are out here on the Anacostia River, sometimes called, I believe, the "Eastern Branch of the Potomac."

Mr. HARRISON. How many acres?

Mr. BOWERS. It is a large body of land.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask my distinguished friend from Mississippi [Mr. BOWERS] whether he thinks this sum would be the only sum to be appropriated for this purpose?

Mr. BOWERS. I do.

Mr. MANN. Who would have possession of the records at the end of the number of years that would expire?

Mr. BOWERS. The abstract?

Mr. MANN. The numerous abstracts.

Mr. BOWERS. They would be turned over to the Government.

Mr. MANN. Suppose there should be litigation growing out of this between the Government and private owners as to who possessed the title, who would necessarily be employed as counsel for the Government?

Mr. BOWERS. That I can not say.

Mr. MANN. The corporation counsel's office would have no information on the subject. The information would lie mainly in the bosom of the gentleman who had received the $5,000.

Mr. BOWERS. Could not the corporation counsel's office familiarize itself with the subject of taking the abstracts, and would not they necessarily go to the Government as a part of this investigation? If it does not, then the gentleman should perfect this provision by such an amendment as will safeguard that point. It certainly was in the contemplation of the commitee that the abstracts, as well as all other fruits of this investigation, the investigation having been paid for jointly by the Government and the District, should be the property of the Government and the District.

Mr. MANN. I quite agree with the gentleman that the corporation counsel's office could perfect its knowledge in reference to information on the subject, and if there be a dispute between private property owners and the government somebody must perfect the knowledge of the corporation counsel's office on the subject if the corporation counsel's office is to represent the government. And if it is necessary for that office to learn about the titles to these flat properties, then, it seems to me, we might as well do it originally as to do it at secondhand.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has again expired.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Illinois is perfectly willing to have it expire, but I thought I had new time. If the time has expired, not yet being satisfied——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BOWERS] has also expired.

Mr. BOWERS. I understood, Mr. Chairman, that on the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] my time had been extended——

The CHAIRMAN. To answer the question of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BOWERS (continuing). Without any limitation on the extension.

The CHAIRMAN. To answer the question of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MANN. I think I will have to insist on the point of order, Mr. Chairman. The language is as follows:

For employment of special counsel to investigate and determine the ownership of the land and riparian rights along the Anacostia River, for the purpose of improvement of the Anacostia flats, $5,000.

There is no authority in law for the appropriation, and in addition to that it is in the nature of legislation as well.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] desire to be heard upon that?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For public scales: For purchase, repair, and replacement of public scales, $200.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph relating to playgrounds be passed without prejudice until to-morrow morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the paragraph which is about to be read may be passed until to-morrow morning without prejudice.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill why he makes the request? I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. I suggest that the gentleman offer the amendment and let it go over with the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Why does not the gentleman permit the paragraph to be read, then have the amendment read for information and have it go over, too?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I have no objection to that.

Mr. PARSONS. Very well, then, if I may offer my amendment I will do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Playgrounds: For maintenance and renewal of equipment and planting trees for outdoor playgrounds, $1,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York (Mr. PARSONS) offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend on page 34, lines 13 and 14, by striking out the words "one thousand five hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof "fifteen thousand."

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I reserve all points of order on the amendment, Mr. Chairman. I ask unanimous consent that this go over until to-morrow morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan reserves all points of order, and asks unanimous consent that the paragraph and the amendment——

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Be postponed until to-morrow morning and be taken up the first thing after we go into the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks that it be the first thing in order when the House goes into committee to-morrow morning. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I desire at this point to call attention to a matter that was inadvertently omitted and to offer an amendment to change the totals on page 16. I ask that the amendment be read.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the committee will return to the paragraph indicated for the purpose of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, line 18, strike out "thirty-four" and insert "twenty-five."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I want to ask the gentleman from Michigan a question about a preceding section, the provision for the bathing beach. Where is that beach, and what is the purpose of it? I ask for information.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The bathing beach is down near the Washington Monument. It will interest the gentleman some time when he has leisure to go down and examine it; not for the purpose of bathing there, but simply to examine it and see the provision which has been made for those who are not provided, as the gentleman is, with a private bath.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I thank the gentleman. I wanted to get the information. I was not familiar with the facts.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs and improvements to school buildings and grounds and for repairing and renewing heating and ventilating apparatus, $50,000.

For necessary repairs to and changes in plumbing in existing school buildings, $50,000. A detailed statement shall be submitted to Congress of the expenditure of the foregoing sum, and for the fiscal year 1910 estimates shall be submitted in detail as to the particular school buildings requiring unusual repairs of and changes in plumbing.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan a question. Here is an appropriation of $50,000 for necessary repairs to and changes in plumbing. Then, in the preceding paragraph, on page 49, line 3, there is another item of $50,000 for repairs and improvements to school buildings and grounds and for repairing and renewing heating and ventilating apparatus. That $50,000 is to be expended on buildings owned by the Government, is it?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Then how about the next item, $50,000, on page 49, line 7?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That is all on government property.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Then you have a provision in that paragraph, beginning on line 6, down to line 12, on page 49, for a detailed estimate to be submitted to Congress of the expenditure of the foregoing sum, as to the particular school buildings requiring unusual repairs of and changes in plumbing. Why not also require a detailed statement of the expenditures of the $50,000 provided in the paragraph beginning on line 3 of the same page?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That is another one of these matters of administration that the committee does not deem it advisable to enter into. We have to intrust these things largely to those to whom are committed the carrying out of the work. To undertake to instruct them specifically would be a task that we should hardly like to undertake.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. You undertake it in one instance and do not in the other. The amount is as large in one case as it is in the other. It is $50,000 in each case.

Mr. MANN. We now waste $50,000 a year in changing the plumbing in these schools, because we require the commissioners to make an estimate every year of the possible changes, and there is an incentive to make a report showing necessary changes. It is absurd to say that the school buildings in Washington require, year after year, $50,000 in the changing of plumbing. Yet that is done, because we require this detailed estimate. If you required a detailed estimate of something else, it would be shown how necessary it was in each case. It is the most expensive provision in the bill.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Then does the gentleman from Illinois think that provision requiring a detailed statement ought to be stricken from the bill?

Mr. MANN. I think it is ridiculous in there now, year after year.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And expensive.

Mr. MANN. And very expensive. As long as it remains in there you will find they will make the estimate to change from one kind of plumbing to another, and if they run out of new kinds, they will go back and change over again.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I should think it would be a good thing to move to strike it out.

The Clerk read as follows:

No expenditure shall be made under appropriations made by this act for gas or electric current used for any purpose whatsoever at a price exceeding 85 cents per 1,000 cubic feet for gas or 4½ cents per kilowatt hour for electric current. This provision shall not apply to lighting streets, avenues, alleys, or highways, the price for which is otherwise limited by this act.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, by striking out, on page 49, line 21, the word "five," so that it will read "80 cents per 1,000 cubic feet."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 49, line 21, strike out the word "five," so as to read "80 cents per 1,000 cubic feet."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to make any extended remarks on this subject, because it has been debated in the House as recently as December 14, when the Committee on the District of Columbia brought in a bill fixing the price of gas in the District of Columbia at 90 cents; and my colleague [Mr. FITZGERALD] offered an amendment making it 85 cents, which was accepted and passed the House. Since that day the Supreme Court of the United States has rendered a decision upholding the constitutionality of a law of the State of New York which provides that gas shall be sold in New York at 80 cents. Therefore I think it is only suitable that the District of Columbia should have the same price as the city of New York; but, inasmuch as this section refers to the payment by the Government for services rendered by the companies to the Government itself, it certainly is within the discretion of this body, and very advisable, to fix the price at 80 cents. I therefore offer that amendment.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the committee fixed the price named in the bill, the same as that in the bill recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia, with the exception in the matter of street lighting, which is fixed at a rate lower than that fixed by the District Committee. I hardly see why a schoolhouse should pay less. The meters have to be read, the bills have to be presented, sometimes they are larger and sometimes smaller, the same as with other consumers of not large quantities. Personally, I have no objection to the amendment, but it seems to me, as a matter of justice and fairness, as the House bill is not yet law, it would be better to let it stand where the committee has placed it.

Mr. HARRISON. I will disagree with the gentleman to this extent, that this is a good place to make a beginning. I think if we are finally to have 80-cent gas in the District, this is a good place to begin.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think it would be more desirable to get 85 cents and then leave it until the other matter is settled?

Mr. HARRISON. Has the gentleman any assurance that we will get 85-cent gas?

Mr. MANN. No; but the House having passed a bill providing for 85-cent gas, the House can consistently maintain that position; whereas if the gentleman's amendment prevails, we should be one day in favor of 85-cent gas and the next day 80 cents, and would maintain no consistent position.

Mr. HARRISON. The reason for advancing the suggestion is that the situation has changed. We have had the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on the New York case, which decision has been rendered subsequent to the date of this debate in the House on December 14.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but everyone acquainted with the gas proposition takes the position and admits that the price of gas at a particular place depends upon the circumstances in each particular instance, and the price of gas in New York necessarily has no reference to the proper price of gas in Washington.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand the gentleman's colleague [Mr. MADDEN], who has given an exhaustive study to this subject, stated in the House the other day that he thought 75 cents would be a fair price for gas in the District.

Mr. MANN. I do not undertake to say just what the correct price in the District should be; but my colleague [Mr. MADDEN], who has made an exhaustive study of the subject, was willing the other day to pass the bill at 85 cents.

Mr. HARRISON. Only upon the specific statement that he thought a little improvement was better than none. He was in hopes that the House would pass it at 85 cents, but said that 75 cents was a fair price.

Mr. MANN. He agreed to 85 cents, and the House took that position. This is the only course to take if the House wants to maintain its dignity, to maintain the position which it took the other day, until it gets something. Of course this is something that we can regulate at any time afterwards.

Mr. HARRISON. The events which have occurred since the debate in the House should serve for some sort of reason for such action as I recommend.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand that the decision of the Supreme Court with reference to the gas case of New York would affect the situation here at all.

Mr. HARRISON. It affects it so far as it is evident that a law of that sort is going into operation in our State.

Mr. MANN. In New York?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. On the other hand, as I understand the case, they held in favor of 80 cents in that locality, but that does not settle it under that decision that the same price will apply to the District of Columbia. I am not referring to the cost of manufacturing gas.

Mr. HARRISON. Upon that I am willing to take the testimony of your colleague [Mr. MADDEN], who said that 75 cents was a fair price for gas.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman takes the testimony of my colleague as to a part of it. I do not know what the gentleman from Illinois, my colleague, stated.

Mr. HARRISON. I remember it distinctly, and I have repeated it.

Mr. MANN. I remember this: That in the testimony before the District Committee no one put the price of gas at less than 80 cents. I do not undertake to say what the price of gas in the District should be. I do not know whether it should be 80 cents or 75 cents or 85 cents. I think there should be a reduction. It is quite evident, from such study as I have given to the gas question in the past that each case depends somewhat on itself, and the price of gas in the city of New York does not necessarily fix the price of gas in the more sparsely settled territory, such as Washington. We have taken a position of 85 cents as to the price of gas, and, if I have my way about it, we will maintain that position if it causes the bill to go over to an extra session of Congress.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad to have the gentleman say that, because I know that he is in a position to render yeoman service, but I hope the gentleman will vote for this amendment to make gas cheaper.

Mr. MANN. If this amendment is adopted, I think it will cause the price of gas to remain at $1. I do not think the gentleman could offer an amendment that would more surely result in keeping the price of gas up than to offer this one, which changes the position of the House as to price.

Mr. HARRISON. Why?

Mr. MANN. A wabbly man, a man whose position is this way one minute and that way the next, is without influence; nobody cares for his opinion. Nobody can be stubborn who changes his mind every minute.

Mr. HARRISON. A great many Members of the House think that the price of gas ought to be cheaper than that.

Mr. MANN. Well, I will repeat that nobody can be stubborn who changes his mind every minute. The House will have to be mighty stubborn if it gets the price of gas reduced.

Mr. HARRISON. I agree so far as the gentleman goes, but I call attention to the fact that this amendment relates to the sale by these companies of gas to the Government, and the bill brought into the House the other day fixes the price to all the residents, including the Government. It is not exactly the same thing, and there is no wabbling.

Mr. MANN. There is a wabbling as to price.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I hope, in the interest of the lower price of gas, that the committee may be sustained. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that it is in the interest of cheaper gas that we all stand solidly in line for gas at 85 cents.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman will admit that the committee was by no means solid when the vote was taken before. It was 66 to 38, if my recollection serves me. The gentleman may be voicing the position of the minority that voted against the reduction. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and on a division [demanded by Mr. HARRISON] there were 18 ayes and 21 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

For extending the telephone system to one 12-room building in the "fourth division," one 8-room building in the "third division," the Bunker High School, including the cost of the necessary wire, cable, poles, cross arms, braces, conduit connections, extra labor, and other necessary items to be expended under the electrical department, $400.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question in regard to extending this telephone system. Is it a public system or a private system?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It is the government system, the public system, and it is to be extended to these school buildings so as to give the teachers ready communication with the superintendent, and also the fire department and the police department.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I will withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Any unexpended balances in the "Act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1907 and 1908, and for other purposes, to rent, equip, and care for temporary rooms for classes above the second grade, now on half time, and to provide for the estimated increased enrollment that may be caused by the operation of the compulsory education law," is hereby reappropriated and made immediately available for the purchase, erection, and maintenance of portable schoolhouses for temporary use.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an amendment on page 42, line 24.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 42, line 24, strike out the word "eighteen" and insert in lieu thereof the words "twenty-two."

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The effect of that amendment is simply to correct the enumeration.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 25392, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 4856. An act authorizing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to lease San Clemente Island, California, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 7378. An act to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Yankton, S. Dak., by the Winnipeg, Yankton and Gulf Railroad Company—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 7640. An act to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Missouri River at Yankton, S. Dak., by the Yankton, Norfolk and Southern Railway Company—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 7785. An act relative to outward alien manifests on certain vessels—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. PARSONS, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Gwinthlean Macrae Robinson (H. R. 13802), Sixtieth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Also, papers in same case (H. R. 17888), Fifty-ninth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Reuben Vermillion, Fifty-eighth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for three days, on account of important business.

ITALIAN EARTHQUAKE DISASTER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 649), which was read and, with the accompanying papers, by unanimous consent, ordered to be printed and placed in the files of the House:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit a report of the Secretary of State, submitting a translation of a note from the ambassador of Italy at this capital, in which, under instruction of his Government, he expresses his desire to convey to the Congress of the United States the lively sentiments of the gratitude of the Italian Government for the sympathy shown by that body in view of the disasters that have devastated Sicily and Calabria and for the generous appropriation made for the relief of the sufferers.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 12, 1909.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. GARDNER of Michigan (at 5 o'clock p. m.), the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HULL of Iowa, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 8143) granting to the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company a right to change the location of its right of way across the Niobrara Military Reservation, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1835), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 23863) for the exchange of certain lands situated in the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, State of Utah, for lands adjacent thereto, between the Mount Olivet Cemetery Association, of Salt Lake City, Utah, and the Government of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1836), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HASKINS, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 6764) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make an examination of certain claims of the State of Missouri, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1841), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. OVERSTREET, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 216) for a special Lincoln postage stamp, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1842), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee on the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TIRRELL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 21929) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, as amended by an act approved February 5, 1903, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1834), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. SIMS, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred House bill 7479, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 483) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case of John A. Taft for services rendered during the civil war, accompanied by a report (No. 1838), which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HASKINS, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred House bill 23799, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 484) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case for the relief of William Francis, accompanied by a report (No. 1839), which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SIMS, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred House bill 25189, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 485) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case for the relief of the estates of George W. and Richard B. Cooper, deceased, accompanied by a report (No. 1840), which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CANDLER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 24303) for the relief of the estate of Charles Fitzgerald, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1843), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3060) for the relief of the estate of Dr. Thomas J. Coward, deceased, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 1837), which said bill and report were laid on the table.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 22456) granting a pension to Anna E. Siple—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 25465) granting a pension to Bedy Wheeler—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 25644) granting an increase of pension to Isaiah Clarke Steele—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 25913) granting an increase of pension to Jessie G. Hoppock—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 17731) granting an increase of pension to Thomas A. Wirt—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: A bill (H. R. 25981) for the erection of a federal building for the United States at Bowie, Tex.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WEEKS: A bill (H. R. 25982) changing the status of certain officers on the retired list of the navy who were retired on account of wounds or other disability incident to service—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAIR: A bill (H. R. 25983) granting a pension to Albert P. Murray—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25984) granting a pension to Morgan M. Mills—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BANNON: A bill (H. R. 25985) granting an increase of pension to David Holt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARTHOLDT: A bill (H. R. 25986) granting a pension to Henry S. Weir—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BATES: A bill (H. R. 25987) granting an increase of pension to William Wellman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25988) granting an increase of pension to Edward F. Harter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25989) granting an increase of pension to Abram Gaskill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25990) granting a pension to George W. Eckert—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BINGHAM: A bill (H. R. 25991) granting a pension to Mary A. Murphy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BROWNLOW: A bill (H. R. 25992) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth S. Reess—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CAMPBELL: A bill (H. R. 25993) granting an increase of pension to James F. Williams—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COLE: A bill (H. R. 25994) granting an increase of pension to George L. Byers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25995) granting an increase of pension to David W. Henderson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25996) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Lease—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25997) granting an increase of pension to Alvy Degood—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25998) granting a pension to John Ogan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 25999) granting an increase of pension to Bevadilla Henry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CURRIER: A bill (H. R. 26000) granting an increase of pension to Ira B. Gould—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26001) granting an increase of pension to Lyman M. Ramsay—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DAVENPORT: A bill (H. R. 26002) granting an increase of pension to David S. James—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26003) granting an increase of pension to Daniel C. Boswell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DAWES: A bill (H. R. 26004) granting an increase of pension to Daniel W. Nutting—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOCHT: A bill (H. R. 26005) for the relief of Henry C. Wolfe—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 26006) granting a pension to Roxanna N. Wilford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GARDNER of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 26007) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John W. Pierce—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GOEBEL: A bill (H. R. 26008) granting an increase of pension to Daniel H. Converse—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GREENE: A bill (H. R. 26009) granting a pension to Herbert A. Ballou—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26010) granting a pension to Nathan S. Gibbs—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HARDING: A bill (H. R. 26011) to correct the military record of John L. Yohn—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HOLLIDAY: A bill (H. R. 26012) granting an increase of pension to Emri Sites—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOUSTON: A bill (H. R. 26013) granting an increase of pension to William H. Colsher—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26014) granting an increase of pension to Augustus W. Patterson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULL of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 26015) granting an increase of pension to Moses Phillips—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26016) granting an increase of pension to Rufus K. Callahan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ADDISON D. JAMES: A bill (H. R. 26017) granting a pension to George W. Goodman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26018) granting a pension to Thomas Blythe—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26019) granting a pension to J. H. Bule—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26020) granting a pension to R. B. Campbell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26021) granting an increase of pension to George M. Babbitt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 26022) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Minnick—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26023) granting an increase of pension to Philip Heiser—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26024) granting an increase of pension to George Reiffenoch—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26025) granting an increase of pension to William Dalton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26026) granting a pension to George I. Ribyn—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26027) granting a pension to William Kudebeh—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KINKAID: A bill (H. R. 26028) granting an increase of pension to David Cool—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McHENRY: A bill (H. R. 26029) granting an increase of pension to William Croft—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26030) granting an increase of pension to Hiram H. Hetler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26031) granting a pension to Benjamin E. Kneibler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26032) granting a pension to Laura C. Robison—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26033) granting a pension to Ellen Gunton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MARTIN: A bill (H. R. 26034) granting an increase of pension to Edward D. Mundy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26035) granting an increase of pension to James S. Daugherty—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26036) granting a pension to Charles H. Stinchfield—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26037) for the relief of the First National Bank of Bellefourche, S. Dak.—to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. MOUSER: A bill (H. R. 26038) granting an increase of pension to Daniel T. Cockerill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26039) granting an increase of pension to Rudolph Geisiu—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NORRIS: A bill (H. R. 26040) granting an increase of pension to Edward L. Hagan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NYE: A bill (H. R. 26041) granting an increase of pension to James E. White—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RAINEY: A bill (H. R. 26042) granting an increase of pension to Daniel A. Jones—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBINSON: A bill (H. R. 26043) granting a pension to Misses M. E. and S. J. Gladney—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26044) granting a pension to George H. Preddy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RODENBERG: A bill (H. R. 26045) granting an increase of pension to Auguste Eisserman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 26046) granting an increase of pension to Alfred Dodge—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SLEMP: A bill (H. R. 26047) granting an increase of pension to John I. Cochran—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26048) granting an increase of pension to J. W. Hyatt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of California: A bill (H. R. 26049) granting an increase of pension to Wing Greene—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26050) granting an increase of pension to Iodine, alias Lewis J. Vosburg—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26051) granting an increase of pension to George W. Wightman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 26052) granting an increase of pension to Frank Chase—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THISTLEWOOD: A bill (H. R. 26053) granting an increase of pension to James E. Ledbetter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VREELAND: A bill (H. R. 26054) granting an increase of pension to Gardner Wells—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WEEKS: A bill (H. R. 26055) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Balch—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: A bill (H. R. 26056) for the relief of the estate of Charles Fitzgerald—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WILSON of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 26057) granting a pension to John R. Shirley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHAPMAN: A bill (H. R. 26058) granting an increase of pension to Jesse T. Robertson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEENERSON: A bill (H. R. 26059) for the relief of Frederick M. Loveless—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 26060) to correct the military record of George O. Pratt—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26061) granting an increase of pension to John Maneval—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SIMS, from the Committee on War Claims: Resolution (H. Res. 483) referring to the Court of Claims the bill H. R. 7479—to the Private Calendar.

By Mr. HASKINS, from the Committee on War Claims: Resolution (H. Res. 484) referring to the Court of Claims the bill H. R. 23799—to the Private Calendar.

By Mr. SIMS, from the Committee on War Claims: Resolution (H. Res. 485) referring to the Court of Claims the bill H. R. 25189—to the Private Calendar.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ACHESON: Petition of Federation of Jewish Organizations, for appointment of a chaplain in the army and navy for the religious comfort and well-being of Jewish soldiers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Merchants' Association of New York, against unjust censure of railroad management—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ALLEN: Petitions of Naples Grange, of Naples; Crooked River Grange, of Harrison; and Westbrook Grange, of Westbrook, all in the State of Maine, favoring a parcels-post law and postal savings banks law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Eliza Sells—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, petition of R. J. Minesinger and others, of New Philadelphia, Ohio, against passage of Senate bill 3940—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BATES: Petition of Rear-Admiral Henry F. Picking Naval Garrison, No. 4, of Erie, Pa., for legislation retiring petty officers and enlisted men of the navy after twenty-five years of continuous service—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of William Wellman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of George H. Eckert—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany bills for relief of Edw. F. Harter and Abram Gaskill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURKE: Petition of National Negro Fair Association, of Mobile, for an appropriation to aid National Negro Exposition near city of Mobile—to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

Also, petition of W. A. Avery, J. T. Little, M. D., and others, of Pittsburg, Pa., for legislation prohibiting sale of intoxicants on all property controlled by the United States Government—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the executive committee of the Prison Association of New York, praying for an appropriation in aid of the International Prison Congress to be held in Washington, D. C., in 1910—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CALDER: Petition of S. M. Erikson, of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Leon H. Curtice, for legislation to secure fairer consideration of railway interests—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CAPRON: Petition of Rhode Island Bar Association, praying for an increase in the salaries of United States circuit and district judges—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Society of Organized Charity, of Providence, R. I., favoring appropriation in aid of International Prison Congress—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, petition of Board of Trade of Providence, R. I., favoring increase of salaries of United States judges—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Henry Bucklin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CAULFIELD: Petition of St. Louis Typographical Union, No. 8, against Judge Wright's decision in case of Samuel Gompers and others—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COCKS of New York: Petition of Henry Keller, H. W. Dupont, and George E. Miller, favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CURRIER: Petition of residents of Washington, N. H., against Johnston Sunday bill (S. 3940)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petitions of George Menton Grange, of Westmoreland; Park Grange, of West Concord; Starr King Grange, of Jefferson; and Meriden Grange, of Meriden, all in the State of New Hampshire, for parcels-post and postal savings bank laws—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DAVENPORT: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Daniel C. Bosnell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DAVIS: Petition of citizens of Lake Mills, favoring H. R. 18204, known as the "Davis bill" (national cooperation in technical education)—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Elysian Hardware Company and others, of Elysian, Minn., against parcels-post and postal savings banks laws—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DAWSON: Petitions of George Boyer and 26 other business firms of West Liberty, Whitmer & Griffith and 16 other business firms of Wilton Junction, Snavely Brothers and 6 other business firms of Ladora, Floerchinger Brothers and 9 other firms of Oxford, and Emil L. Boering and 56 other firms of Iowa City, all in the State of Iowa, against parcels-post and postal savings banks laws—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DRAPER: Petition of Squires, Sherry & Galusha, of New York, favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DRISCOLL: Petition of J. J. Howe and other citizens of New York, favoring a parcels-post and a postal savings banks law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of business firms of Leonardville, N. Y., against postal savings banks and parcels-post laws—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. ELLIS of Oregon: Petition of Oregon Commandery of the Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, in favor of H. R. 19250 (civil-war volunteer officers' retired bill)—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Astoria Chamber of Commerce and Columbia bar and river pilots, asking for an appropriation for operation of government dredge Chinook—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT: Petition against passage of Senate bill 3940—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. FAIRCHILD: Petition of Ellenville (N. Y.) Grange, No. 956, and Milton (N. Y.) Grange, No. 884, favoring parcels-post system and postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. FLOYD: Petition of citizens of Arkansas, against passage of Senate bill 3940—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. FORNES: Petition of Frank Hervey Field, favoring H. R. 21455—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, petitions of New York Board of Trade and Transportation, R. C. Nye, W. F. Heller, and H. Klenhans, all of New York City, favoring reconsideration of railroad-rate law—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of C. B. Fairchild, favoring S. 7274 (civil-war officers' annuity honor roll)—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FULLER: Petition of George A. P. Cummings, of Joliet, Ill., favoring pensions for ex-prisoners of war in the civil war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Merchants' Association of New York, favoring legislation to secure fair treatment and consideration of railway interests, etc.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GOEBEL: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Daniel H. Converse—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of citizens of Cincinnati, Ohio, for an effective exclusion law against all Asiatics save merchants, students, and travelers—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. GRAHAM: Petition of American Prison Association, for suitable provision for the preparatory work of the International Prison Commission and for the entertainment of the congress—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of R. M. Trimble, C. C. Boggs, and others, of Pittsburg, Pa., for legislation prohibiting sale of intoxicants on all property controlled by the United States Government—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of National Negro Fair Association, favoring an appropriation in aid of National Negro Exposition near the city of Mobile—to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

By Mr. GRONNA: Petition of commercial club of Grand Forks, N. Dak., for improvement of the Red River of the North—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of Cheyenne Branch of Railway Postal Clerks, against retirement plan for superannuated employees in the classified service (H. R. 21261) unless the plan be made wholly voluntary—to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

Also, petition of Asiatic Exclusion League, favoring an exclusion law against all Asiatics save merchants, students, and travelers—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition for legislation to protect prohibition States from the liquor traffic through interstate commerce—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of citizens of Manvel, N. Dak., for retention of present duty on grain—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HAMILTON of Iowa: Petition of citizens of Sigourney, Iowa, against passage of Senate bill 3940—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petitions of citizens of Delta, Rose Hill, Harper, Keota, Sigourney, Grinnell, Malcom, Brooklyn, Evans, Eddyville, Monroe, Lavilia, and Albia, Iowa, against a parcels-post and a postal savings banks law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HENRY of Connecticut: Petition of Plainville Grange, No. 54, Patrons of Husbandry, for parcels post on rural delivery routes and a postal savings banks law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. KNAPP: Petition of Keenan & Berginen, of Watertown, N. Y., favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LIVINGSTON: Papers to accompany bills for relief of John Ward, R. Luther Hays, James K. P. Carlton, John Bridwell, and Prince Ponder—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. McKINLEY of Illinois: Petitions of citizens of Fullerton and Decatur, Ill., favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of citizens of Chicago, for removal of duty on hides—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MANN: Petition of Federation of Jewish Organizations of New York City, favoring appointment of chaplains in the army and navy for Jewish soldiers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of the Merchants' Association of New York, for legislation to encourage return of railway business to normal conditions—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, favoring the Littlefield bill, designed to protect prohibition territory against liquor traffic through interstate commerce—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Chicago-Toledo-Cincinnati Deep Water Association, for surveys for canal between Toledo and Chicago—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. MARTIN: Petitions of Commercial Club of Mitchell, business men of Garden City, and business men of Gayville, all in the State of South Dakota, against parcels-post delivery on rural free-delivery routes and for postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of citizens of Marshall County, S. Dak., against passage of Senate bill 3940 (Johnston Sunday law)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of Central City Mining Union and Lead City (S. Dak.) Miners' Union, for legislation to secure investigation of the Treadwell Mining Company in Alaska—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Also, petition of L. E. Weller, of Plankinton, S. Dak.; E. S. Lovering, of South Dakota; and Murdo McKenzie, of Mindo, S. Dak., favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MOON of Tennessee: Paper to accompany bill for relief of estate of William Duncan—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MUDD: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Rachel A. Ardeeser (previously referred to the Committee on War Claims)—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NORRIS: Petitions of business men of fifth district of Nebraska; citizens of Lawrence, Nebr.; and citizens of Grant, Perkins, and Nuckolls counties, Nebr., against parcels-post and postal savings banks laws—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of citizens of Nebraska, against passage of Senate bill 3940—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. PRATT: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Jessie G. Hopper (previously referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions)—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PRAY: Letter and telegram of Hon. E. R. Taylor, mayor of San Francisco, and C. W. Hodgson, relative to the Hetch Hetchy grant of water privileges to San Francisco—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, petition of Granite Miners' Union of Montana, favoring legal investigation of the Treadwell Mining Company—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. ROBINSON: Papers to accompany bills for relief of Albert McConnell, Mary J. Utter, and Richard B. Rankin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of heirs of J. A. Patillo—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. THOMAS of Ohio: Petitions of P. N. Krapp and others, Grayce Rawson and others, M. D. Hugley and others, and G. R. Pierce and others, all of the State of Ohio, favoring a parcels-post and postal savings banks bills—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of citizens of Barberton, Ohio, favoring parcels-post and postal savings banks laws—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WEEMS: Petitions of E. E. Mansfield and others, and citizens of Carroll County, Ohio, against parcels-post and postal savings banks laws—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of John D. Vail—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania: Petitions of A. H. Buck and 24 other members of Westfield Grange, No. 1088, of Pennsylvania; W. T. Rich and 32 other members of Chatham Grange; and Francis Reid and 15 other members of Roulette Grange, No. 1289, for a parcels-post system and postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of Paul Laverents, John W. Baker, and D. R. Kinport, against passage of H. R. 21261 (retirement plan for superannuated employees in the civil service)—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 13, 1909.

Prayer by Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ELECTORAL VOTE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, authenticated copies of the final ascertainment of electors for President and Vice-President appointed in the States of North Dakota and Texas, which, with the accompanying papers, were ordered to be filed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. McKenney, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

S. 4856. An act authorizing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to lease San Clemente Island, California, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the Central Labor Union of Wilmington, Del., remonstrating against the enjoining of Samuel Gompers et al. from exercising their constitutional rights to freedom of speech, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Maryland School for the Blind, of Baltimore, Md., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the census bill with respect to the record to be made of the blind in the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SCOTT presented a petition of Robinson Grange, No. 251, Patrons of Husbandry, of the State of West Virginia, praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the petition of Alexander C. Moore, of Clarksburg, W. Va., praying for the enactment of legislation to create a volunteer retired list in the War and Navy departments for the surviving officers of the civil war, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KITTREDGE presented a petition of the South Dakota Educational Association, of Aberdeen, S. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for a separation of the Bureau of Education from the Department of the Interior and making it a department under the charge of a secretary of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. GAMBLE presented a petition of the Black Hills Schoolmasters' Club, of Spearfish, S. Dak., praying that an appropriation be made for making available photographic folios of views taken in the work of the Geological Survey and the Reclamation and Forestry services, which was referred to the Committee on the Geological Survey.

Mr. KEAN presented petitions of Pascack Grange, No. 141, of Woodcliff Lake, Wayne Township Grange, No. 145, of Preakness, and Lincoln Grange, No. 136, of Westwood, Patrons of Husbandry, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the petition of Archibald G. Smith, of Lambertville, N. J., praying for the passage of the so-called "postal savings banks bill," which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the memorial of R. E. Blood, of Clifton, N. J., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation inimical to the railroad interests of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of Silver Harvest Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Waldo, Me., and a petition of Franklin Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Woodstock, Me., praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HOPKINS presented a petition of the Wind Mill Manufacturers' Club, of Batavia, Ill., praying for a general reduction of the tariff, and also for the appointment of a permanent nonpartisan tariff commission, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BURKETT presented a petition of the Commercial Club of Norfolk, Nebr., praying for the enactment of legislation granting travel pay to railway postal clerks, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the State Federation of Jewish Organizations, of New York City, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to create the office of Jewish chaplain in the army and navy, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DIXON presented a paper to accompany the bill (S. 8273) to amend an act approved May 30, 1908, entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all surplus lands after allotment," which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BROWN presented a petition of the Commercial Club of Norfolk, Nebr., praying for the enactment of legislation granting travel pay to railway postal clerks, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. RAYNER presented a petition of Linden Spring Grange, No. 260, Patrons of Husbandry, of the State of Maryland, praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

Mr. NELSON. I present a paper, by Hon. L. B. Caswell, of Fort Atkinson, Wis., relating to postal savings banks. It is a very short and clear paper, and I move that it be printed as a document (S. Doc. No. 651).

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 8050) for the relief of James R. Wyrick (Report No. 736); and

A bill (S. 7390) for the relief of Christina Rockwell (Report No. 737).

Mr. FULTON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 13319) for the relief of the heirs of Thomas J. Miller (Report No. 738); and

A bill (H. R. 17344) for the relief of Frederick Daubert. (Report No. 739.)

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7652) to provide suitable civilian clothing and a cash gratuity to naval prisoners on discharge, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 740) thereon.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 7651) to amend article 53 of the Articles for the Government of the Navy (Report No. 741);

A bill (S. 7793) to provide for the naturalization of aliens who have served, or shall hereafter serve, five years in the United States Navy or Marine Corps (Report No. 742); and

A bill (S. 7872) to promote the administration of justice in the navy (Report No. 743).

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred certain bills granting pensions and increase of pensions, submitted a report (No. 744), accompanied by a bill (S. 8422), granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which was read twice by its title, the bill being a substitute for the following Senate bills heretofore referred to that committee:

S. 86. William T. Johnson;
S. 710. Henry T. Powell;
S. 1062. John L. McKee;
S. 1169. Dexter E. Boyden;
S. 1607. William W. Peck;
S. 1715. George Blake;
S. 1914. Fannie E. Holden;
S. 2060. William W. Scott;
S. 2477. John N. Williams;
S. 2605. Sarah Martin;
S. 3064. Thomas Greenley;
S. 3191. John W. Ervin;
S. 3195. William H. Dodd;
S. 3221. James W. Cobb;
S. 3306. Henry C. Bodkin;
S. 3334. Turner Lacey;
S. 3520. Nelson W. Armstrong;
S. 3598. William J. Conrad;
S. 3788. Thomas S. Wineteer;
S. 4178. Philip H. Showers;
S. 4198. Henry C. Elliott;
S. 4225. Wyman F. Patten;
S. 4253. James D. Davis;
S. 4523. Mary M. Ball;
S. 4597. Jacob Mays;
S. 4621. Charles C. Jones;
S. 5119. Caroline Coburn;
S. 5244. Robert E. Banks;
S. 5494. Isaac H. Isaacs;
S. 5504. James A. Brians;
S. 5561. Hiram B. Lord;
S. 5567. James P. Nowland;
S. 5803. Benoni Lewis;
S. 6034. Sarah A. Horr;
S. 6170. Robert W. McCullough, jr.;
S. 6203. Charles J. Hinds;
S. 6210. Henry M. Barber;
S. 6243. James H. McAllister;
S. 6282. Richard D. Coonen;
S. 6395. Joseph L. Wright;
S. 6501. Isabella R. Vosburgh;
S. 6519. George S. Warren;
S. 6570. Eben T. C. Lord;
S. 6651. Francis Weaver;
S. 6680. John A. Pattee;
S. 6735. Washington F. Landers;
S. 6763. Thomas Phelan;
S. 6779. Calvin Boyer;
S. 6785. James A. Grant;
S. 6814. Frank M. Swann;
S. 6827. Christian Paul;
S. 6842. John W. Knapp;
S. 6860. Arthur R. Curtis;
S. 6889. Henry D. Parsons;
S. 6983. Samuel D. Hurd;
S. 7025. Rodney N. Hall;
S. 7036. Hobert B. Doolittle;
S. 7040. Thomas Fox;
S. 7158. Melzar E. Beard;
S. 7229. Barnum Slocum;
S. 7280. Josiah N. Eastman;
S. 7285. Freeland Q. Andrews;
S. 7295. George P. Tucker;
S. 7300. Henry M. Washburn;
S. 7303. John A. Flanders;
S. 7304. Warren Abbott;
S. 7322. Ira S. Allen;
S. 7323. James Kirby;
S. 7332. Franklin R. St. John;
S. 7333. John W. Son;
S. 7354. Francis N. Brokaw;
S. 7356. David C. Crawford;
S. 7382. Robert L. Wilson;
S. 7383. Edwin B. Paddock;
S. 7385. Melvin P. Miller;
S. 7386. Adam Wingenfield;
S. 7389. George W. Becker;
S. 7397. Berdette M. Sperry;
S. 7409. Charles S. Baker;
S. 7411. Berge Johnson;
S. 7417. John Egan;
S. 7426. William A. Richardson;
S. 7438. Lucius Bigelow;
S. 7440. Edwin M. Haynes;
S. 7453. Eliza Palmer;
S. 7459. Francis I. Gardiner;
S. 7471. Elisha Bridges;
S. 7493. David F. Painter;
S. 7494. Charles H. Rankin;
S. 7512. Ira A. Silvernail;
S. 7517. Allen T. Landress;
S. 7540. Ebenezer Winslow, now known as Eben C. Thomas;
S. 7556. George W. Palmer;
S. 7581. Eli W. Wilhite;
S. 7597. Samuel T. Cromwell;
S. 7621. John B. Hazen;
S. 7658. Thomas K. Hastings;
S. 7671. William H. Knight;
S. 7725. Leander Stillwell;
S. 7736. Stephen M. Gilley;
S. 7798. Emily C. Twitchell;
S. 7807. Almeran A. Stillman;
S. 7820. Julia F. Darling;
S. 7837. Edward E. Houstain;
S. 7933. George W. Curl;
S. 7950. Ann M. Mason;
S. 7985. Thomas Painter;
S. 8027. Oliver S. Adams;
S. 8061. Ezra P. Pyram;
S. 8077. Edwin Potter;
S. 8081. Charles E. Sherman; and
S. 8082. Alexander G. Smith.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. KNOX on the 12th instant, authorizing the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint an Under Secretary of State and also a Fourth Assistant Secretary of State, intended to be proposed to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, which was agreed to.

OWNERS OF STEAMSHIP "TABASQUENO."

Mr. FRYE. I report back favorably from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment the bill (H. R. 23351) for the relief of the owners of the Mexican steamship Tabasqueno and I submit a report (No. 735) thereon. The matter has been pending for a long while and I should like to have it acted on now.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was in line 7, after the word "Tabasqueno," to insert "with interest at 6 per cent from the date of the seizure," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $13,485.70 to the owners of the Mexican steamship Tabasqueno, with interest at 6 per cent from the date of the seizure, being for the arrest and detention of the ship and damage to her cargo during the war with Spain, the same being in full of their claim for the arrest and detention of the said ship and damage to her cargo by reason of the seizure of the U. S. S. Hawk, July 30, 1898.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BANKHEAD introduced a bill (S. 8423) for the relief of the heirs of James Y. Brame, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 8424) for the relief of the owners of lighter No. 128, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 8425) granting a pension to Eliza S. Blumer, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 8426) granting an increase of pension to Virginia L. Caldwell, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 8427) to provide for the payment of installments due on contracts or land entries made under the provisions of an act entitled "An act appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands," approved June 17, 1902, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

Mr. SMOOT introduced a bill (S. 8428) granting an increase of pension to Philander C. Burch, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PILES introduced a bill (S. 8429) to refund certain tonnage taxes and light dues levied on the steamship Montara, without register, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PILES (for Mr. ANKENY) introduced a bill (S. 8430) granting an increase of pension to Simon Terwilliger, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAVIS introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8431) granting an increase of pension to Henry B. Wallis; and

A bill (S. 8432) granting an increase of pension to Lucius Fuller.

Mr. GAMBLE introduced a bill (S. 8433) for the relief of the First National Bank of Bellefourche, S. Dak., which was read twice by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To what committee does the Senator from South Dakota wish to have the bill referred?

Mr. GAMBLE. The Committee on Irrigation.

Mr. CLAPP. It strikes me that that bill and the bill for refunding certain tonnage taxes, recently introduced, should both go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GAMBLE. The bill I have just introduced has reference to the construction of an irrigation ditch for the Reclamation Service in Bellefourche, and it is in reference to the appropriation of funds taken up by the Interior Department. I am sure it should be referred to the Committee on Irrigation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. GAMBLE introduced a bill (S. 8434) granting an increase of pension to Thomas E. Stanley, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KITTREDGE introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8435) granting an increase of pension to John E. Green;

A bill (S. 8436) granting a pension to John Lowell; and

A bill (S. 8437) granting an increase of pension to James McKinley.

Mr. CLAY introduced a bill (S. 8438) granting an increase of pension to Carrie Hoyle, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DIXON introduced a bill (S. 8439) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appraise lands in the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., and grant the same to the Great Northern Railway, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BORAH introduced a bill (S. 8440) for the relief of applicants for mineral surveys, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. CLAPP introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

A bill (S. 8441) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be surveyed any unsurveyed lands belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 8442) to authorize cancellation of Indian allotments covering unsuitable lands and allotment of lands in lieu thereof, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 8443) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to permit the quarrying and sale of tufa stone from the San Carlos Indian Reservation in Arizona, and for other purposes.

Mr. CLAPP introduced a bill (S. 8444) granting a pension to Miranda A. Wheelock, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 8445) providing for the distribution of Supreme Court reports by the superintendent of documents, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers (S. Doc. 652), which were ordered to be printed, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HEYBURN introduced a bill (S. 8446) to create an additional division in the judicial district of the State of Idaho, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MARTIN introduced a bill (S. 8447) for the relief of Enoch D. Smith, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 8448) granting a pension to Marcelina J. Cox, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $33,400 for the support and education of 200 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Grand Junction, Colo., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRYE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for the construction of a suitable vessel or launch for the Customs Service, for use at and in the vicinity of Portland, Me., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FLINT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $400,000 for the purchase of land for a site, location, and construction of works for fortifications and coast defenses and emplacements therefor at Point Firmin, Cal., intended to be proposed by him to the fortifications appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF BIG SIOUX RIVER, SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mr. KITTREDGE submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. C. Res. 68), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimates to be made for a project of straightening and improvement of the Big Sioux River, in the State of South Dakota, and report same to the Congress.

RELATIONS BETWEEN CONGRESS AND THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I offer a resolution, and after it has been read I will request the Senate to permit me to submit a few remarks upon it.

The resolution (S. Res. 248) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That any and every public document, paper, or record, or copy thereof, on the files of any department of the Government, relating to any subject whatever over which Congress has any grant of power, jurisdiction, or control, under the Constitution, and any information relative thereto within the possession of the officers of the department, is subject to the call or inspection of the Senate for its use in the exercise of its constitutional powers and jurisdiction.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the particular matter involved in the resolution is one entitled to the serious consideration of the Senate. The importance of the consideration of the question raised by the resolution which has just been read at the desk is emphasized and made a matter of present interest by a message which has recently been received by the Senate from the President of the United States, in which the right of the Senate to give a direction to a head of a department is, as stated in the message, denied in the most emphatic language. It is a matter of very far-reaching consequence, and affects not simply the dignity of the Senate, or perhaps, in one sense, the authority of the Senate, so far as that authority is an attribute of its dignity, but affects the power of the Senate to perform its legitimate constitutional functions.

The message to which I refer was in response to a resolution offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], which is found upon page 543 of the RECORD of this session, January 6. I am going to ask that the resolution and the entire response of the President may be inserted at this point in my remarks. I will not detain the Senate by reading the entire resolution and communication now, because they have so recently been before the Senate that all Senators are familiar with the fact that the resolution was one which related to the question of the action or nonaction of the Attorney-General in regard to the absorption of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company by the Steel trust, and asking whether there had been such action, and the message of the President in which he informed the Senate that he had directed the Attorney-General not to make response.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution and message will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

To the Senate:

In connection with the following resolution of the Senate, passed January 4, 1909:

"Resolved, That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate:

"1. Whether legal proceedings under the act of July 2, 1890, have been instituted by him or by his authority against the United States Steel Corporation on account of the absorption by it in the year 1907 of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company, and if no such proceedings have been instituted state the reasons for such nonaction.

"2. Whether an opinion was rendered by him or under his authority as to the legality of such absorption; and if so, attach a copy if in writing, and if verbal state the substance of it."

I transmit herewith the following letter from the Attorney-General:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, January 6, 1909.

THE PRESIDENT, The White House.

SIR: In accordance with your instructions, I have the honor to inclose you a certified copy of the resolution adopted by the Senate wherein I am directed to inform the Senate whether legal proceedings under the act of July 2, 1890, have been instituted by me or by my authority against the United States Steel Corporation on account of the absorption by it, in the year 1907, of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company. As you are aware, no such proceedings have been instituted.

I remain, yours, most respectfully and truly,

CHARLES J. BONAPARTE,
Attorney-General.

As to the transaction in question I was personally cognizant of and responsible for its every detail. For the information of the Senate I transmit a copy of a letter sent by me to the Attorney-General on November 4, 1907, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, November 4, 1907.

MY DEAR MR. ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Judge E. H. Gary and Mr. H. C. Frick, on behalf of the Steel Corporation, have just called upon me. They state that there is a certain business firm (the name of which I have not been told, but which is of real importance in New York business circles) which will undoubtedly fail this week if help is not given. Among its assets are a majority of the securities of the Tennessee Coal Company. Application has been urgently made to the Steel Corporation to purchase this stock as the only means of avoiding a failure. Judge Gary and Mr. Frick inform me that as a mere business transaction they do not care to purchase the stock; that under ordinary circumstances they would not consider purchasing the stock, because but little benefit will come to the Steel Corporation from the purchase; that they are aware that the purchase will be used as a handle for attack upon them on the ground that they are striving to secure a monopoly of the business and prevent competition—not that this would represent what could honestly be said, but what might recklessly and untruthfully be said. They further inform me that as a matter of fact the policy of the company has been to decline to acquire more than 60 per cent of the steel properties, and that this purpose has been persevered in for several years past with the object of preventing these accusations, and as a matter of fact their proportion of steel properties has slightly decreased, so that it is below this 60 per cent, and the acquisition of the property in question will not raise it above 60 per cent. But they feel that it is immensely to their interest, as to the interest of every responsible business man, to try to prevent a panic and general industrial smash up at this time, and that they are willing to go into this transaction, which they would not otherwise go into, because it seems the opinion of those best fitted to express judgment in New York that it will be an important factor in preventing a break that might be ruinous; and that this has been urged upon them by the combination of the most responsible bankers in New York who are now thus engaged in endeavoring to save the situation. But they asserted they did not wish to do this if I stated that it ought not to be done. I answered that while of course I could not advise them to take the action proposed, I felt it no public duty of mine to interpose any objection.

Sincerely, yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Hon. CHARLES J. BONAPARTE,
Attorney-General.

After sending this letter I was advised orally by the Attorney-General that, in his opinion, no sufficient ground existed for legal proceedings against the Steel Corporation and that the situation had been in no way changed by its acquisition of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company.

I have thus given to the Senate all the information in the possession of the executive department which appears to me to be material or relevant on the subject of the resolution. I feel bound, however, to add that I have instructed the Attorney-General not to respond to that portion of the resolution which calls for a statement of his reasons for nonaction. I have done so because I do not conceive it to be within the authority of the Senate to give directions of this character to the head of an executive department, or to demand from him reasons for his action. Heads of the executive departments are subject to the Constitution, and to the laws passed by the Congress in pursuance of the Constitution, and to the directions of the President of the United States, but to no other direction whatever.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 6, 1909.

Mr. BACON. It will be seen that the President, after himself giving the information which the Senate by its order had directed the Attorney-General to communicate to the Senate, concludes with this language:

I feel bound, however, to add that I have instructed the Attorney-General not to respond to that portion of the resolution which calls for a statement of his reasons for nonaction. I have done so—

And this is the part of the language to which I desire to invite especially the attention of the Senate, as the utterance which calls for some expression on the part of the Senate—

I have done so because I do not conceive it to be within the authority of the Senate to give directions of this character to the head of an executive department, or to demand from him reasons for his action. Heads of the executive departments are subject to the Constitution, and to the laws passed by the Congress in pursuance of the Constitution, and to the directions of the President of the United States, but to no other direction whatever.

There could not be, Mr. President, a bolder and more emphatic denial of the power of the Senate to require any information from the head of a department than is expressed in that language; and the utterance by the President is all the more emphatic and important from the fact that it is a gratuitous denial of the authority of the Senate. If the President had said to the Senate, "I have determined and ordered that this information should not be given to the Senate," and then, as the reason why he had taken that responsibility, had added that he did not conceive it to be within the constitutional power of the Senate, it would not have been a gratuitous utterance. But the President gives all of the information which was desired by the Senate and which was called for by the direction to the Attorney-General, and then, without reason that he should so do, gratuitously, I repeat, makes this emphatic denial of the power on the part of the Senate to require from the head of a department any information by directing him to furnish the same.

I presume the language of the President is intended to convey the opinion that Congress, in its capacity as a lawmaking power, may require of the head of a department any information which it desires, but that the Senate itself can not; he means to say that only by an act of Congress can the head of a department be directed or by the order of the President himself; and in language which is not distinguished by its extreme courtesy he says to the Senate that there is no other power which can give direction to the head of a department.

Mr. President, I have discussed this question before the Senate heretofore, and much that I shall say now I have in substance said before. I think, however, that whenever such a challenge is made by the executive department denying this power on the part of the Senate, it should not be passed by without response, even though that response may be in large part repetition of what may have been said heretofore. If it is within the power of the Executive to lock up the executive departments and say to either House of Congress, "You shall have no information except such as I may permit," then it needs no elaboration to point to the conclusion of the autocracy in fact, whether in name or not, which must result.

Mr. President, while I have very clear views upon this subject, I recognize that if I can bring to the attention of the Senate and of the country, and possibly of the Executive, what has been said upon this subject by some of the greatest lawyers who ever sat in this body, it will have very much more effect than what I might myself say in my own proper place. Therefore, I propose to answer the challenge of the President of the United States in the main by what others have said, and not alone by what I myself shall now say.

It is not the first time, Mr. President, that there has been some friction between the Senate and the Executive upon this question, but I can say—I think without fear of mistake—that it is the first time the denial of the right of the Senate has ever been made in such unlimited and emphatic language as that now employed by the President.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. HALE. I wish to ask the Senator a question. There are two distinct propositions in the President's message.

Mr. BACON. The Senator is quite correct.

Mr. HALE. The one relates to the right to call upon a Cabinet minister for his reasons, perhaps for not acting in a given matter. The other (and I should hope that the President has not taken square ground upon that) relates to a right that has been exercised for generations, and I do not know that it has ever been questioned.

Mr. BACON. I trust if the Senator has a question he will propound it.

Mr. HALE. I was going to ask the Senator a question. I will repeat the sentence with leave of the Senator. As to the direction of Congress to transmit papers or information in the department, I do not know that it has ever been questioned. I should hope it never would be questioned really. But I was going to ask the Senator, as I want to attend to what he says, if I can, to which of these propositions is his argument and his citation of authorities to be directed, the right of the Senate to call for reasons or the right of the Senate or of Congress to call for information, papers, and documents in the departments?

Mr. BACON. Possibly the Senator will get a better response to his inquiry in the development of what I have to say rather than in an attempt to state it in advance in a categorical answer to his question.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I hope I am not making myself offensive.

Mr. BACON. Not in the least. I am simply saying to the Senator that I will endeavor, in the development, to show to the Senate as fully as I can what my views are in regard to each of them.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator propose to consider both propositions?

Mr. BACON. Yes; both.

Mr. HALE. I look upon them as wholly distinct.

Mr. BACON. I think they are distinct, but the Senator will agree that the language of the President covers both. If the President had limited this to the question whether reasons could be demanded, it would narrow the issue very much.

Mr. HALE. Very much.

Mr. BACON. And even as to that I think I can show on authority that we have the right to demand reasons. But the Senator requires me to anticipate in the very outset, before I have stated my proposition at all, in asking me what particular propositions I propose to argue.

Mr. HALE. I had a reason. Having been called from the Senate, and having just returned, I wanted to hear the Senator especially upon the distinctive point of the right to call for papers and information. I agree with him on the other.

Mr. BACON. I propose to discuss the entire question; at least I propose not so much to discuss it myself as to show what has been said by other very learned Senators on this floor.

As I was proceeding to say, the President does not stop at that. He does not stop at the question whether or not we have the right to demand reasons, but he goes on to say, in the most emphatic and peremptory language:

> Heads of the executive departments are subject to the Constitution, and to the laws passed by the Congress in pursuance of the Constitution, and to the directions of the President of the United States, but to no other direction whatever.

That is as broad as human language can make it.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator, then——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield further to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. HALE. At the risk perhaps—I will not say of offending the Senator, because the Senator knows——

Mr. BACON. The honorable Senator need have no hesitation. I am not in the least offended, and there is no reason why I should be.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think that in that language, which I think we all noted with care, the President has committed himself to the proposition that Congress can not call upon the head of a department for information and for papers and documents in the department? I should hope that the President has not committed himself to that proposition.

Mr. BACON. I understand the language to be such as its plain meaning imports. The President says there are but three authorities from which direction can come to the head of a department. One is the Constitution, the other is a law passed in pursuance of the Constitution, and the third is the President himself, and adds—> but to no other direction whatever.

If the Senator will permit me to proceed, I will endeavor to present the matter in a way that possibly might be more satisfactory than by endeavoring to state in advance the particular line rather than to permit the line to be developed.

Mr. HALE. It is an exceedingly important question, and I wanted to see generally before the Senator started what his propositions were and how far he considered the President has gone in his message; that is all.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator kindly again state where that message is in the RECORD?

Mr. BACON. It is on page 543 of the RECORD of January 6.

Mr. President, I believe I had said at the time the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] presented his inquiry, that while there had been some differences between the executive departments and the Senate with reference to the question of the power of the Senate to direct the head of a department, there had never been in the history of the Government so emphatic and peremptory a denial of the power of the Senate as is expressed in this message of the President.

The most remarkable discussion which was ever had upon this question occurred in the Senate some twenty-two years ago, during the first administration of Mr. Cleveland. That grew out of a matter connected with the dismissal of a district attorney in Alabama and the appointment by President Cleveland of his successor. When the matter of the confirmation of his successor was before the Senate, the Senate called upon the President for certain letters and other documents, which were alleged to be in the executive department, with a view of ascertaining what were the reasons of the President for the removal of the district attorney. That right was claimed under a law which then existed, known as the "tenure of office law," which required that before the removal of an officer could become effective the consent of the Senate should be had thereto. That law was passed during the administration of President Johnson, at the time of the great controversy between him and the Congress of the United States, with a view to preventing his removal of those whom Congress desired to have retained in office.

Mr. Cleveland denied the right of the Senate to call for those papers. The resolution asserting the right and power of the Senate was referred to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, then composed of the most distinguished lawyers, I presume, who ever at any one time composed the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. I will read their names. On the part of the majority—they were the Republicans—they were George F. Edmunds, John J. Ingalls, S. J. R. McMillan, James S. Wilson, and William M. Evarts. On the part of the minority they were James L. Pugh, Senator Vest, Senator Coke, and Senator Jackson, who was afterwards a judge of the Supreme Court of the United States.

My attention has been called very kindly by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] to the fact that in reading the list of names I omitted the name of Senator Hoar. Why I did so I do not know; certainly it was not intentional, and the name was before me at the time. Senator Hoar was also a member of the committee at the time, and afterwards its chairman, and one of the most distinguished lawyers and learned scholars who ever sat in this body. I will again read the list to call the attention of the Senate more particularly to this great galaxy of illustrious lawyers—Edmunds, Ingalls, McMillan, Hoar, Wilson, Evarts, Pugh, Vest, Coke, and Jackson—and I repeat that I do not think there has ever been from the foundation of the Government to the present day a collection of such great lawyers at one time upon the Judiciary Committee of the Senate as the men whose names I have just read.

Upon this reference to the committee there was a majority report and a minority report. The remarkable fact is that among all those great lawyers there is no difference of opinion as to the fundamental question of whether or not the Senate has the right—not Congress in its lawmaking capacity, but the Senate—whether or not the Senate has the right, not to request or to ask, but to demand and require the head of any department to furnish any information or any paper or document in his possession or control which may be needed by the Senate in the discharge of its constitutional functions—to direct and command, not to request or to ask. The difference between the majority and the minority of the committee was upon a much narrower question.

It was contended on the part of the minority—the Democrats—that the paper in question did not belong to the official files; that it was a private letter to the President, and therefore not a matter within the power of the Senate to compel the production of.

There was one other distinguished Senator whose name I omitted from the minority—Senator George, of Mississippi, one of the greatest lawyers who ever sat in this or any other body or on any bench.

It was further contended—and that this particular contention was by Senator George was what called my recollection to the fact that I had omitted his name—that the act of 1869, the tenure-of-office act, was an unconstitutional act, and that, therefore, Congress had no right to proceed under it to enforce the production of a paper which was the private paper of the President or was claimed to be so.

The two reports of those great lawyers absolutely agree upon the fundamental proposition that, so far as it related to any document or any paper or information in the control or keeping or possession of the head of a department, the constitutional right of the Senate was without question. There was no difference among those great lawyers as to that question; but the difference was on the narrower line, which I have indicated. But in arriving at their conclusions elaborate reports were made by each, the majority of the committee and the minority of the committee, and in each instance the report is signed not by the chairman of the committee or by some one representing the minority, but the report of the committee is signed in person by each of the great lawyers of the majority, whose names I have read, and the report of the minority is signed by each of the minority, none the less great lawyers, whose names I have also read.

Mr. President, I am going to read from that report, because it not only comes with greater authority than if the words were uttered by me, but the argument is much more cogently made than it would be within my power to make it; and, with the indulgence of the Senate, a large part of the time which I shall take the liberty of occupying, and of which I am sorry I have already consumed so much, will be occupied in the reading of what others have said.

I am reading, Mr. President, from a report made by the Judiciary Committee, known as Report 135, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, and I begin on the fourth page, although I shall have occasion to read a paragraph hereafter which precedes the one which I now read.

I want to say to the Senate that a large part of this report of the committee, and of the minority report as well, relates of course to the matter of papers and the right of the Senate to direct their production. This naturally followed from the fact that the production of certain papers was the subject-matter of the controversy. But Senators will find in the course of the report and of the debates upon it, from which I shall read, that the contention is not limited to the production of papers, but that it extends to the giving of any information and extends to reasons as well as to information; in other words, there is a recognition of the fullest, broadest, and most controlling power on the part of the Senate to know anything and everything which is in the possession of a department which it is important for the Senate to know in the discharge of its constitutional functions, and to know the reasons therefor. I am going to read this myself, rather than ask the Secretary to do so, if my strength holds out:

The important question, then, is whether it is within the constitutional competence of either House of Congress to have access to the official papers and documents in the various public offices of the United States created by laws enacted by themselves. It may be fully admitted that, except in respect to the Department of the Treasury, there is no statute which commands the head of any department to transmit to either House of Congress on its demand any information whatever concerning the administration of his department, but the committee believes it to be clear that from the very nature of the powers intrusted by the Constitution to the two Houses of Congress it is a necessary incident that either House must have at all times the right to know all that officially exists or takes place in any of the departments of the Government. So perfectly was this proposition understood before and at the time of the formation of the Constitution that the Continental Congress, before the adoption of the present Constitution, in establishing a department of foreign affairs and providing for a principal officer thereof, thought it fit to enact that all books, records, and other papers in that office should be open to the inspection of any Member of Congress, provided that no copy should be taken of matters of secret nature without special leave of Congress. It was not thought necessary to enact that the Congress itself should be entitled to the production and inspection of such papers, for that right was supposed to exist in the very nature of things, and when, under the Constitution, the department came to be created, although the provision that each individual Member of Congress should have access to the papers was omitted (evidently for reasons that can now be quite well understood), it was not thought necessary that an affirmative provision should be inserted giving to the Houses of Congress the right to know the contents of the public papers and records in the public offices of the country whose laws and whose offices they were to assist in creating.

It is believed that there is no instance of civilized governments having bodies representative of the people or of states in which the right and the power of those representative bodies to obtain in one form or another complete information as to every paper and transaction in any of the executive departments thereof does not exist, even though such papers might relate to what is ordinarily an executive function, if that function impinged upon any duty or function of the representative bodies.

Mr. President, I will not, of course, consume the time of the Senate in reading the whole of this report, and I may insert more of it in the RECORD than I now read, with the permission of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. BACON (reading)—

A qualification of this general right may under our Constitution exist in case of calls by the House of Representatives for papers relating to treaties, etc., under consideration and not yet disposed of by the President and Senate.

I am still reading from the majority report—

The committee feels authorized to state, after a somewhat careful research, that within the foregoing limits there is scarcely in the history of this Government until now any instance of a refusal by a head of a department, or even of the President himself, to communicate official facts and information, as distinguished from private and unofficial papers, motions, views, reasons, and opinions, to either House of Congress when unconditionally demanded. Indeed, the early journals of the Senate show great numbers of instances of directions to the heads of departments, as of course, to furnish papers and reports upon all sorts of affairs, both legislative and executive.

The instances of requests to the President and commands to the heads of departments by each House of Congress from those days until now for papers and information on every conceivable subject of public affairs are almost innumerable, for it appears to have been thought by all the Presidents who have carried on the Government now for almost a century that even in respect of requests to them, an independent and coordinate branch of the Government, they were under a constitutional duty and obligation to furnish to either House the papers called for, unless, as has happened in very rare instances, when the request was coupled with an appeal to the discretion of the President in respect of the danger of publicity to send the papers if, in his judgment, it should not be incompatible with the public welfare.

Even in times of the highest party excitement and stress, as in 1826 and 1844, it did not seem to occur to the Chief Executive of the United States that it was possible that any official facts or information existing, either in the departments created by law or within his own possession, could, save as before stated, be withheld from either of the Houses of Congress, although such facts or information sometimes involved very intricate and delicate matters of foreign affairs, as well as sometimes the history and conduct of officers connected with the administration of affairs.

Now, Mr. President, I have here the minority report also, which is in the same volume. I could to advantage read from it at length, but I will read only a little of it:

The minority admit, once for all—

There is the broad recognition of the principle—

The minority admit, once for all, that any and every public document, paper, or record on the files of any department, or in the possession of the President, relating to any subject whatever, over which either House of Congress has any grant of power, jurisdiction, or control under the Constitution, is subject to the call or inspection of either House for use in the exercise of its constitutional powers and jurisdiction. It is on this clearly defined and well-founded constitutional principle that, wherever any power is lodged by the Constitution, all incidents follow such power that are necessary and proper to enable the custodian of it to carry it into execution. Whether the power is granted to Congress, or either House, or to the President, or any department or officer of the Government, or to the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the principle is as fundamental as the Constitution itself, and all the necessary incidents of such grants accompany the grants and belong to and can be exercised by the custodians of such powers, jointly or severally, as they may be vested by the Constitution.

It is on the application and enforcement of this unquestioned rule of construction that either House of Congress has the right inherent in the power itself to direct the head of any department, or request the President to transmit any information in the knowledge of either, or any public or official papers or documents, or their contents, on the files or in the keeping of either, provided such papers or documents relate to subjects, matters, or things in the consideration of which the House making the call can use such information, papers, or documents in the exercise of any right, power, jurisdiction, or privilege granted to Congress, or either House, or to the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

It will be seen that the minority, composed of these great lawyers, in the discussion of the question not only admit and assert most strongly the right of the Senate as to the production of papers, but admit and assert as fully the right to the requirement of the communication of any information of any kind whatsoever which may be within the knowledge of the head of any department or any subordinate officer thereof.

Mr. President, growing out of those two reports there was one of the most extended, earnest, elaborate, and learned constitutional debates which is to be found in the records of the Senate. I can not, through lack of time now, read it at length.

That debate was participated in, Mr. President, by as great lawyers as ever sat in this body—Mr. Edmunds, Mr. Evarts, Mr. Hoar, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Spooner, Mr. Sherman, and Mr. Logan, on the part of the majority; and Mr. Pugh, Mr. George, Mr. Vest, Mr. Coke, Mr. Jackson and others, on the part of the minority—and their speeches, made in that debate, are as valuable a contribution to constitutional literature as can be found from the beginning of the Government to the present time in the record of the debates of Congress.

I am going to read first, Mr. President, something from what was said by our late colleague here, Mr. Spooner. Of course I need to say nothing to the Senate as to the ability of Mr. Spooner as a lawyer, and his devotion to the law. Mr. Spooner, in my opinion, is a lawyer who is loyal to the law. A great many lawyers are not loyal to the law. In this instance he avowed that, while he was a party man, his great interest in this matter grew out of the question as to the constitutional rights of the Senate, and he premised what he had to say by this language:

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I make no attempt to disguise the fact, or to apologize for it, that the fortunes of the Republican party are very dear to me, and that I wish that party, here and elsewhere, to reap every fair partisan advantage which may be taken from the blunders and from the shortcomings, if any such there are or shall be, of this administration. But I trust I do not forget, and shall not forget, that I am a Senator of the United States as well as a Republican, and that as a Senator my first duty always is to the people, and that I have no right to take action here to subserve a party interest which would be harmful to the interests of the people.

I deny for myself, and I have authority to deny for every Senator upon this side of the Chamber, the statement so often made on the other side that we desire, or are willing, to harrass, hamper, or embarrass the President in the proper exercise of executive functions. Such a motive would be unworthy, and should not be so lightly imputed.

The principle involved in this controversy, to my mind, is far above the question as to who shall hold the offices in the country.

Having, Mr. President, placed himself upon that high plane, this great lawyer, then a Senator from Wisconsin, proceeded to discuss the question, and I quote in part what he then said. Said he:

Look at the bald case as it stands before the Senate and before the people, unaided by the message which the President sent upon the same subject, and which is in some sense an additional statement of fact. The Senate calls for certain papers, filed within a given period in a public department, touching the management of a public office. An executive officer of the United States, recognizing the fact that the papers are in his custody, not denying for a moment their existence, says to the Senate, by direction of the President, that "it is not considered that the public interest will be promoted by a compliance with said resolution and the transmission of the papers and documents therein mentioned to the Senate in executive session."

Is it to be admitted that a Cabinet officer, even by direction of the President, shall be at liberty to refuse to transmit any papers to the Senate in executive session unless satisfied that the purpose for which the Senate desires them is one which in his opinion is wise and proper? Is it to be assumed by an executive officer or by the President that because a nomination is pending in the Senate of a person to fill an office that the Senate may not in executive session lawfully call for the papers filed in a department touching the conduct of that office?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does the Senator contend that in the adoption of the resolution that called for the reasons of the President in the case which is now being discussed by the Senator the Senate has any greater power or authority to ask for those reasons than has the House of Representatives?

Mr. BACON. We have no greater authority, except in those matters which are peculiarly within the functions and powers of the Senate.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. I notice the authorities that are being read by the Senator relate to information touching public officers where the Senate is a coordinate branch of the Government and has a responsibility with the President. Now, in this case the inquiry was as to a law that had been passed by Congress and in connection with which the Senate had no more authority than the House of Representatives. It strikes me that it would be just as pertinent for the President of the United States to ask why the Senate or Congress did not pass a law as for the Senate or the House to ask the President the reasons why action was not taken on a law.

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, the Senator bases his suggestion upon the proposition that the executive departments are within the control of the President and not within the control of Congress. If the Senator will permit me, before I get through I will endeavor to show him that the executive departments are entirely and peculiarly within the control of Congress.

Congress creates them; Congress confers upon them every power which they have; Congress can take from them their power or can give more power. It can create other departments and it can destroy those which exist.

Mr. HOPKINS. But the Senator, if he will allow me there, will note the fact that "Congress" is not asking for the reasons. It is one branch of Congress that is asking for them.

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly; I understand that.

Mr. HOPKINS. That, to my mind, makes it an entirely different case.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. I merely want to ask a question, to see if I am right about the proposition the Senator is making.

Mr. BACON. I should like to answer the question of the Senator from Illinois first.

Mr. LODGE. I beg pardon. I thought the Senator had done so.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me until I answer the Senator from Illinois, I will, with pleasure, reply to his inquiry.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I was coming to the discussion, but I will anticipate it somewhat. The proposition of the Senator from Illinois is that Congress can demand information of a department, but that either House of Congress can not; in other words, that before a department can be required to give information it must be by a joint resolution or by an act of Congress. That would be true, Mr. President, if there were no separate functions of the two Houses. If Congress has the right to demand of a department or to require of a department any information, it is because Congress has a constitutional function—the function of legislation—which can not properly be performed except it has the information.

Now, the function of legislation, while when it is complete is the joint action of the two Houses, is a function performed by each House in its separate capacity. One House may not be in accord with the other as to the desire for certain legislation, and yet it is certainly within the function of each House to proceed in its own way in the investigations which are necessary for legislation. To say, when the Senate is engaged in the consideration of a question and needs certain information for its own guidance so as to determine how it shall legislate, that it must wait until an act of Congress shall be passed before it can require from a department the information which it needs in that legislation, is certainly without possibility of defense.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the Senator will allow me right there, it seems to me that a mistake is being made by the Senator from Georgia. The inquiry that is being made here is not an inquiry that will aid Congress in this matter at all. It is asking for the reasons why the Attorney-General has failed to act on a law that is upon the statute books of the United States.

Mr. BACON. I understand the Senator's point. How does the Senator know—I will not ask him the question to be answered now, for I prefer the Senator should make a speech in his own time, but I will ask it arguendo—how does the Senator know for what purpose the Senate demands this information? This is information desired as to whether or not a law which is on the statute books has been invoked in the effort to accomplish what is desired in the country in regard to the suppression of monopolies.

Therefore we asked the Attorney-General two questions: First, has there been under the present law any proceeding with reference to the absorption of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company by the United States Steel Company? If not, why? What is the pertinency of that inquiry? We wish to know, if there has been no such proceeding, whether in the opinion of the Attorney-General the law is ample to cover the case, in order, if not ample, that we may proceed with the information which he gives us to amend that law. Is not that a matter of legislation? Is not the information called for pertinent and necessary for such legislation? And as to whether it is pertinent the Senate, as will be abundantly shown, must necessarily be the sole judge.

Now I will with pleasure hear from the Senator from Massachusetts, but I trust we may shortly get through with this colloquy.

Mr. LODGE. I have no intention at all of arguing the case.

Mr. BACON. I was speaking to the Senator from Illinois in suggesting the end of the colloquy.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will not take the time to argue that proposition. I think I can make a good answer to it——

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will.

Mr. HOPKINS. One satisfactory to my own mind at least.

Mr. LODGE. I understand the proposition of the Senator to be that we can require from any department any paper we desire.

Mr. BACON. Or any information we desire relative thereto.

Mr. LODGE. Does that apply to any department?

Mr. BACON. Of course.

Mr. LODGE. Does it apply to the State Department?

Mr. BACON. The Senator well knows——

Mr. LODGE. I am not speaking of the custom and habit——

Mr. BACON. The honorable Senator again interrupts me——

Mr. LODGE. I want to know about the right.

Mr. BACON. We have the right, if the Senator wants to know that.

Mr. LODGE. That is exactly what I want to know.

Mr. BACON. We have the right to compel the Secretary of State to send any papers we want. As to when we shall exercise that right the Senate can be relied upon to use a wise discretion.

Mr. LODGE. If they have the right to refuse in one department, they have in another.

Mr. BACON. I say they have not that right in any department, and I do not base that on my opinion. I am going to give the opinions of such men as Evarts and Hoar and Edmunds and Wilson and Logan and George and Sherman and others. I could occupy much more time than I can possibly do with propriety to-day with the reading of these utterances by these learned men and Senators.

Mr. HOPKINS. If it does not interrupt the Senator too much, Senator Vest and other Democratic Senators during the Cleveland administration took exactly the opposite view to that expressed by Edmunds and Evarts.

Mr. BACON. I do not know whether the Senator from Illinois has been in the Chamber all morning. I stated earlier in my remarks in what particulars they differed and in what respects they agreed. It is very unfortunate that Senators should be out of the Chamber and come in and ask questions which have been fully discussed in their absence.

Mr. HOPKINS. I always feel unfortunate when I am out of the Chamber when the Senator from Georgia speaks.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will not be often embarrassed in that way. I speak very seldom. I have not made an extended speech before at this session of Congress.

When I was interrupted, I was reading from the speech of the former Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. Spooner, and it is rather unfortunate that so cogent and so closely connected an argument as that made by Mr. Spooner should be interrupted by this long colloquy which the Senator has interjected in order to learn what my view is. I was trying to tell him what Mr. Spooner said. Of course time will not permit me, especially with the frequent interruptions, to read this at length, but I will have to put the extracts in my speech without reading them.

Several SENATORS. Read them.

Mr. BACON. I hope Senators who have honored me with inquiries will listen to what others have said, not what I say, but what was said by men whose shoes I am not worthy to unlatch when it comes to legal ability and legal attainments. Mr. Spooner said:

It has always been supposed that either the House of Representatives or the Senate had plenary power to investigate the departments, had abundant authority to examine the Cabinet officers, even to bring them before the committee, with all papers in the office which would tend to show its condition, and the manner in which it had been conducted. It may be done in order to expose corruption; it may be done in order to uncover defects in the organization of a department; it may be done in order that Congress obtain the information essential to the application of a corrective by new legislation. Such power in great fullness must of necessity exist, to be exercised under varied conditions and circumstances, and with many different purposes.

Is this not the attitude? The President, not denying that there may be circumstances under which either the House or the Senate would be entitled to such papers, to demand them and compel their production, assumes that they are wanted for a purpose which in his judgment is not within the jurisdiction of the Senate. If for any purpose within the power of the Senate it can direct under any circumstances the Attorney-General, or any other Cabinet officer, to transmit to the Senate papers touching the conduct of a particular office, then it is essential to the orderly conduct of the Government that the executive officer should assume that the papers are desired for a legitimate purpose. Or has it come to this, that the Senate or the House demanding the production of papers, which either may rightfully demand for some purpose, must go with eastern salaam to the department door, bound to disclose, first to the Attorney-General or the President, the precise purpose for which the papers are desired, under penalty of not receiving them at all?

How would it look, in response to a resolution adopted by the Senate asking that the Attorney-General or the Secretary of the Interior transmit to the Senate papers like these, in their very nature official, relating to the transaction of the public business, for the President to transmit to the Senate a message of this nature?—"If you desire these papers you must first indicate to me the purpose for which you desire them, and if after having disclosed that purpose I think they are within your jurisdiction, and that the purpose to be subserved is a legitimate purpose, I shall transmit them; otherwise not."

Would that be in effect any different from this response of the Attorney-General? Would it not be humiliating? Would it be anything less than a one-man government? Would it do anything less than enable the President of the United States to shut out at his will the sunlight of investigation from all the public offices? Must the Senate, must the House—because if he may require the performance of that precedent condition of the Senate he may of the House—first advise him of the purpose and submit to his judgment as to whether it is a legitimate one?

Again, Mr. Spooner said:

I assert now the proposition that the Senate has a right to obtain of a Cabinet officer upon demand, and of the President upon request, such information to enable it to act intelligently upon the question as to whether it will advise and consent to a proposed removal.

It might with equal propriety be said "whether it will proceed to legislate upon a certain question."

The Senators on the other side will not, I think, charge that the issue so far as I am concerned is not broad enough.

Mr. Spooner, whom we all know, meant by that to say that he had stated that proposition as strongly and as broadly as it was in his power to state it, and Senators on the other side would not complain that it was not stated broadly enough. Then he goes on to say:

Is the proposition sound in law? I want no other principle of law to guide me to a conclusion in favor of the right of the Senate to the information upon that theory than is found in the report submitted by the minority of the committee—and the message which the President has seen fit to transmit. I call the attention of the Senate to the statement of the law in the report submitted by the minority of the Judiciary Committee. It is very guarded and very advisedly made and is sufficiently broad and accurate for the purposes for which I desire to use it.

This may answer, in some degree, the question propounded by the Senator from Illinois—

He then quotes from the minority report—

The minority admit—

The part of the minority report I have already read—

The minority admit, once for all, that any and every public document, paper, or record on the files of any department, or in the possession of the President, relating to any subject whatever over which either House of Congress has any grant of power, jurisdiction, or control under the Constitution, is subject to the call or inspection of either House for use in the exercise of its constitutional powers and jurisdiction.

Then he goes on, quoting further, and continues:

Here, in a lawyer-like way, and in a bold way, as lawyers ought to state their case, the minority, without shuffling or technicality, place the question upon this proposition.

Here is Mr. Spooner's construction of what the minority says:

If the Senate of the United States has any jurisdiction over the subject-matter to which papers relate, or to which information in the hands of a department officer or in the hands of the President relates—

Not confining it, you see, to papers—

then they say unqualifiedly, and it would seem to be unmistakable law, the Senate has a right to the inspection of such documents and a right to elicit such information. The President, placing it upon a little different ground, recognizes the same principle, and in doing this he only follows the example of Washington in somewhat the same language upon the same subject, and of every Executive from Washington down, thus:

Then he quotes from the President, as follows:

To the end that the service may be improved, the Senate is invited to the fullest scrutiny of the persons submitted to them for public office, in recognition of the constitutional power of that body to advise and consent to their appointment. I shall continue, as I have thus far done, to furnish, at the request of the confirming body, all the information I possess touching the fitness of the nominees placed before them for their action, both when they are proposed to fill vacancies and to take the place of suspended officials.

Mr. Spooner, resuming, says:

Why? Because under the Constitution the Senate is a factor in the act constituting, on the whole, the appointment of the officer; because, in the language of the minority of the committee, the Senate under the Constitution has jurisdiction over "the subject-matter."

Now, Mr. President, one more extract from Mr. Spooner's speech on that occasion:

Possessing, therefore, the power—

After discussing fully and at length the very proposition which is suggested in the inquiry made of me by the Senator from Illinois, and coming to the conclusion that the power does exist, Senator Spooner goes on to say:

Possessing, therefore, the right to call for papers and information from the executive department of the Government necessary to enable the Senate to discharge with fidelity and intelligence its duty under the law in the matter of removals, it can not forego that right when in its opinion its exercise is necessary.

It can not suffer, by its acquiescence, the principle as to papers, now asserted by the executive department, to grow into precedent. It is not a question of etiquette, nor is it a question of politics. It is very far above either.

The Senate has no right to trench upon the prerogative or powers of the Executive. The maintenance, sacred and inviolate, of the prerogatives of the three great coordinate departments of the system under which we live, as the fathers framed it, is essential to the permanency and success of our Government. Neither should be permitted to trench upon the other, and neither may permit any impairment, through aggression or concession, of its constitutional faculties and prerogatives.

The Senate can not yield the principle that in any case or under any circumstances the files of the departments, evidencing the conduct of public officers, shall be secret from the inspection, or that any paper or letter bearing upon the conduct of a public office, placed upon the files of any department, or in custody of any executive officer, and which ought to be placed upon the files of any department, can, at the will of anybody, even though it be the President, become personal and subject to removal or destruction.

That related solely to the question whether or not the paper called for was on the official files, the President contending it was not, and admitting if it was a part of the official files it would be subject to the order of the Senate.

Mr. President, if it were practicable I should like to read all of this most cogent and logical argument then made by Senator Spooner in that great historic debate.

Now, Mr. President, I will read from Mr. Hoar, who was also, as I have stated, a member of the committee.

I understood the report—

Referring to the report of the committee represented by the majority—

I understood the report to affirm that the existence of this power in the Senate and the obedience to it by the heads of the departments are necessary—

Mark the language. It is Mr. Hoar who said this. I will read it again:

I understood the report to affirm that the existence of this power in the Senate and the obedience to it by the heads of the departments are necessary for the due and orderly discharge of our constitutional duty, just as the existence of the right of freedom of debate is necessary to the discharge of our constitutional duty.

* * * * * * *

I agree, and I think all the Senate agree with the Senator from Oregon, that the power of seeing what are the papers on the files, on the official files, of the executive department is essential to a proper discharge of the duties of the Senate—a power never denied until this moment.

* * * * * * *

What we affirm is this, that the official papers on the files of this Government are to be seen, whenever they think it is necessary for the discharge of their duty, by the two branches clothed with the powers of legislation, and that is all; and that it is not for the President or the head of a department to determine what use we propose to make of them when we wish them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business of the Senate be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the Senator from Georgia will proceed.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I will now read some things said in that debate by that great constitutional lawyer, William M. Evarts, then a Senator from the State of New York.

I want to call attention to the fact that several of the Senators who participated in that debate had been Cabinet officers, as we call them—heads of departments. We call them by courtesy "Cabinet officers." No such officer as a Cabinet officer is known to the law. As a matter of courtesy they are called "Cabinet officers," not because they are heads of departments, but because the President voluntarily accepts them as his counselors. These distinguished men had been, using the common designation, Cabinet officers, and very eminent Cabinet officers. They were Mr. Evarts and Mr. Sherman; and Mr. Evarts I now read from, after he had served with distinguished honor in the Cabinet, and, as we all know, he was one of the most eminent lawyers of the United States, if not of the world. Mr. Evarts said:

The resolutions of the Judiciary Committee declare that the demand made by the Judiciary Committee for the papers described and under the circumstances in which the information is sought for should have been complied with by the Attorney-General, and that neither his duty nor the instruction of the President justified that refusal. In the minority report I can very briefly find what issue is joined, as I think, so far as a definite issue has been joined by this statement of opinion and duty, as the minority regard it, on the subject:

He again quotes what Senator Spooner quoted as to what the minority admitted was the constitutional right and authority of the Senate. I have already read it, but I will read it again. It can not be read too often:

The minority admit, once for all—

This was the contention, also, of the majority—

The minority admit, once for all, that any and every public document, paper, or record on the files of any department, or in the possession of the President, relating to any subject whatever, over which either House of Congress has any grant of power, jurisdiction, or control under the Constitution, is subject to the call or inspection of either House for use in the exercise of its constitutional powers and jurisdiction.

That is quoted by Mr. Evarts approvingly, having in view, as already stated, the matter in controversy, which was the demand for the production of papers. The reasoning and the expression elsewhere in the reports and in the speeches equally embraces all other information of every kind.

Now, upon this assertion of the Judiciary Committee's resolutions, and upon this admission by the minority of that committee and in the name of the party represented on the other side of the Chamber, it would seem to one familiar that if confinement should be made to the issue there would be very little doubt as to what the conclusion of the Senate would be on these resolutions; but topics have been introduced, topics have been enlarged upon, topics have been made the subject of legal and constitutional argument and of political declamation which, as it seems to me, when they are compared with the issue that is to be decided, when they are compared with the assertion of the Judiciary Committee and the issue presented by the minority of that committee, all, or almost all, that has had this large and general scope and application of political opinion and political issues has no relation to our duty now.

It is said in the first place, and thus the proposition of the committee is sought to be avoided, that the papers called for can by no means touch any matter subject to the public action of the Senate. Let us look a moment at that proposition. Who is to determine—

Here is a vital question—

in the first place that on a topic which the Senate has to do with it has a right to the inspection and use of papers in the departments, but it has no such right when the Senate can not possibly touch or deal with any subject-matter to which those papers relate? Who is to determine, in the first instance, that the Senate may or may not explore and make use of papers that are on file? Certainly the Senate is the judge of that.

The Senate, as a component part of the legislature represented in Congress, is not of limited jurisdiction. It is not confined to this or that topic. Whatever touches, in the language of one of the clauses of the Constitution, the common defense and the general welfare belongs to the two Houses of Congress. When, therefore, either House, under its responsibilities and under the determination of a constitutional majority of votes on any subject in either of these Houses, undertakes itself to deal with public documents and papers in the departments, it deals with what belongs to the Government of the United States for use by the Congress of the United States, and upon its judgment of what its duties, its faculties, and its proposed actions relate to. And now for the first time is it found that a preliminary question arises when the Houses of Congress, one or both of them, have asked for papers on file that there is a preliminary judgment to be exercised and to be final, and to be under the unlimited range of discretion and of personal judgment of the President, whether or not these papers that are described and exist as on the files or on deposit in the departments are, on the face of them, papers that belong to the uses and for the purposes of the duty of the Houses of Congress.

Where is this preliminary line to be drawn? Who is to be patient under it? Who is to look in the face the two Houses of Congress in the illimitable range of their duty, dealing in the matters of the departments, dealing with the matters there deposited and there preserved for the Government for its uses, for action in reference to the Government, and for no other purpose whatever? Who is at liberty to sift and cull out of these papers thus deposited and to be accorded this prejudgment of the action of the two Houses of Congress? Who is to be this arbiter between the Government and the Congress to determine what shall be given and what shall be withheld?

I should like to find votes cast here on the other side of this alley upon that preliminary question. Give us the premises of the powers of the two Houses of Congress under the Constitution that are not disputed here—I mean the general powers—give us the constitution of the departments; give us the arrangements of law regulating the action of these departments; give us the fact that the papers we seek for are in the possession of the Department of Justice and the Attorney-General can lay his hand upon them, and then after that a peremptory instruction of the President can follow out these deposits and select from them those that are suitable for the inspection of the Houses; let it be conceded that it is not thus to be arbitrarily, thus capriciously, thus undutifully, discharged by the President in this preliminary authority; let it be agreed that he means to send to the two Houses all that are useful and pertinent to every public use, how do you by that proposition but advance the most monstrous doctrine—

I call the attention of Senators to the language of Mr. Evarts in this connection—

under the Constitution that the President is the judge of what the duty of the two Houses of Congress relates to, and the further question of what the papers would have to say and to show and to decide whether they were or were not important and interesting to the two Houses of Congress on the very matters that the Congress has authority over.

I have here the speech made in that debate by Senator Logan, from which I now read some extracts:

If the people, through their representatives, can not have access to the records of the country, on the general theory that they are the source of power, when such records or documents are requested to aid in the performance of a duty incumbent upon them in their coordinate capacity, where is such a theory to carry us if it is followed up? We have been told for years by our opponents that the concentration of power was one of our objects, that our theories, as well as the character of our legislation, proved this to be the design of our party, that this had been increasing and growing from year to year, that the power of the Government was being placed in the hands of the few, that the people were being stripped of their power day by day.

I should like for any Senator to tell me what greater concentration of power has been shown during the existence of this Government than the attempt made by the President of the United States to take into his own hands the right to allow or not the people of this country through their representatives to examine public records, documents, and papers as he sees proper. Suppose the man guilty of fraud; suppose he has been guilty of embezzlement; suppose he is charged with any offense, will the President of the United States say, when we send for the papers to examine into the conduct of his office to see how it has been managed, because he has suspended this man the Congress of the United States shall not examine the papers? Will you say that? Suppose the Senate of the United States organizes a committee of investigation to-day and calls upon the President of the United States, the Attorney-General, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster-General, or any other head of a department, for papers in connection with the case either for or against the man accused, will it be said that the Senate of the United States can not have those papers? If so, why refused? Would it be on the ground that they are private documents? Is that the ground?

If this theory is to be carried out, the head of a department might suppress papers that would convict his friends; he might suppress papers that would convict criminals; he might suppress papers that would convict himself if he be corrupt enough, and this merely upon the ground that they were private papers and could not be given out. Suppose papers charging men with violations of law, charging them with robbery, with theft, with murder, with arson, no matter what crime, came to the Secretary of the Treasury as a letter directed to him making these charges, because the letter is written to him and not officially, but is filed with the papers in the archives of the Government, when the Senate calls on him for those papers he says, "It is a private letter. I shall not give it to the Senate or the Congress of the United States," though on the files. Would not that be covering up crime under the guise of private papers on the ground that they will not deliver documents to the Congress of the United States that might involve in criminal proceedings some individual who happens to be an official of the Government and friend of the Secretary?

* * * * * * *

I do not know what is to be the final result of this question. "You may pass these resolutions," said a Senator yesterday, "but when you do that, what have you accomplished? You can not force the President to send these papers."

Well, sir, that is true; with a House of Representatives against the theory that we act upon, there is no remedy for the present; but we can do this, and we will do it; we will bring the fact to the minds of the American people that no man can be a Cæsar in this country; that this is a Government where the people can and will be heard. It may be deferred for a short time, but only for a short time. When the people are or ever have been heard in reference to questions where unwarranted power has been attempted by anyone in this Government, the people have always repudiated the exercise of that unwarranted power, and I believe they ever will.

Senator George, justly estimated as one of the most learned lawyers of his day, in his speech in that debate used this language:

Still, the obligation of the President to uncover, to make known his thoughts and actions, and what he does in his great office, and the reasons for what he does, is to the American people and not to the American Senate, unless in cases in which the Senate may need information to enable it to perform rightly a constitutional duty.

The learned Senator by that plainly implied that where the information was needed by the Senate to perform rightly its constitutional duty, it is necessary and mandatory that the President and, necessarily, each head of a department should, in the language of the Senator, uncover and disclose everything which may be required.

Mr. Sherman in that debate said:

That we have a right to call for information of any kind whatever in any department of the Government, whether it be by written order or by parol, I do not think there is the slightest doubt. Indeed, but for that we could not legislate; but for that we could not act wisely in executive session.

I read now something from what was said in that debate by Senator Edmunds, everywhere recognized as one of the greatest lawyers who ever sat in this body:

Mr. President—

This is Mr. Edmunds from whom I now quote—

Mr. President, the calm and orderly administration of a constitutional government is the subject in which the Senate and the House of Representatives and the President of the United States and the people are all equally interested, and for which they are all, in their respective stations and places, equally responsible. It is in support of that calm and orderly and constitutional exercise of the function of government that I now address myself to these resolutions.

It has been at least forty years since any occasion of this kind has arisen between the executive department of the Government and the Senate; and when a little more than forty years ago a similar but not the same question arose, it had then been a long time before that any such question, or any question like it, had engaged the attention of the Senate or the House of Representatives or the people; for the instances in which there has been evinced the slightest reluctance on the part either of the Executive or the heads of departments to respond to the calls of either House or of their committees for papers in possession either of the Executive or of the departments have been very few indeed. Sometimes in a case of political fever, as it might be called, there have been evinced, wide years apart, a reluctance and a hesitation on the part of the Executive or of the heads of departments to do this thing; and then, that storm being over, the orderly administration of constitutional government went on as before, and either House of Congress on its request or demand, as the case might be, and the committees of either House of Congress acting without a direct and positive authority to send for persons and papers, have always obtained from the departments on their mere request everything that either House or its committees thought necessary for the proper discharge of their duties.

Continuing, Mr. Edmunds says:

The question is whether, on the theory of the Attorney-General or the President of the United States or the minority of this committee, official papers in the Department of Justice bearing upon the administration of the officer that we are asked to remove are relevant to the subject.

I take it there is but one answer to that, although I should say here by way of parenthesis, lest I should forget it by and by, that I do not admit and I do not think any Member of the Senate will admit that the question of the relevancy of official information that we think we need and call for depends upon anybody's judgment but our own.

There is the whole thing in a nutshell. The Senate is the judge of what it needs, and when it has determined what it needs, neither the President nor the head of any department has the right to refuse to give what it demands.

I do not think the warmest administration man on the other side would say, take it year in and year out, decade in and decade out, and century in and century out, that it is any part of the constitutional or legal or other mission of the President of the United States or any head of a department to determine whether official information that exists in the departments and is desired by either House of Congress is to be sent or not, according to his opinion whether it will be useful to them or relevant to their deliberations. I think I am safe in saying that.

In other words, Mr. Edmunds scouts the idea that it is possible that the power rests in the President or in the head of a department to determine whether, when Congress demands any information, it is a legitimate demand and whether Congress has a legitimate use for the information desired. That is a matter for Congress to determine, and not for either the President or the head of a department. Mr. Edmunds absolutely scouts the idea that the contrary of that proposiion could be maintained or recognized for a moment.

Have we got to the point where we can know nothing about the operations of this Government—because all its operations are executive and neither House of Congress has any executive power at all; it only makes laws or the Senate advises treaties and advises appointments; all the operations of the Government are executive, every one of them; and have we come to the day that inasmuch as the President of the United States is the Chief Executive and on his constitutional responsibility must see that the laws are faithfully executed, neither House of Congress can know anything of the facts and circumstances relating to the execution of the laws, because, if they did, they might be able to comprehend the motives and reasons of the President in carrying those laws into execution? Such a statement is shocking, and yet that is the logic of the whole thing, and it is the statement of it in the letter of the Attorney-General, and in the message of the President of the United States, and in the report of the minority of this committee, that however important this official information which exists in the Department of Justice may be to knowing the truth about this case and in other cases, the truth about all others, it can not be given to a branch of the Government that is to act upon the subject, because, if given, the private motives or official motives or reasons of the Executive might be guessed at or known.

Thus said Senator Edmunds, absolutely scouting the idea that such a proposition for a moment could be entertained in the Senate of the United States and recognized as a correct statement of law. He winds up that particular part of it by saying:

That would be the end of all information.

It would seem from what he said in this memorable debate that this great Senator, this acknowledged preeminent constitutional lawyer, thought the Senate, and the House as well, within its sphere, entitled to know upon its demand not only every fact within the knowledge of a department, but also something in regard to the motives and reasons of the officers of the department in their action, or in their nonaction, in the performance of the official duties which the laws enacted by Congress imposed upon them.

Senator Edmunds continued, and I quote him somewhat at length, because he was chairman of the committee and his speech is exhaustive and demonstrates the proposition beyond possibility of logical refutation:

The jurisdiction of the Senate and the House of Representatives, composing the Congress of the United States, is just as broad, aye, even broader than that of the President of the United States. He is an officer to execute law, nothing else. The executive power is vested in a President of the United States, and he is to swear that he will faithfully see to it that the laws are executed. He is not the maker of law, he is not the maker of war or the maker of peace, without the consent of the Houses.

Their jurisdiction is infinitely broader than his, and when the Constitution of the United States commanded him in affirmative terms to from time to time give Congress information of the state of the Union—he shall do it, says the Constitution—it had reference to the universal power of knowledge and information of the two Houses of Congress in respect of every operation of the Government of the United States and every one of its officers, foreign and domestic.

That is "the state of the Union." The "state of the Union" is made up of every drop in the bucket of the execution of every law and the performance of every office under the law, either within its borders or out of it. There is no one mass, no one cue, or quantity, or subject that makes up "the state of the Union," as every gentleman—and there are a good many here who have been Members of the House of Representatives—when they go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, knows. It is the condition of the Government and every part of it, not only its legislative part, about which the President of the United States could communicate no information without impertinence, for the Constitution, has declared that the two Houses are to regulate themselves, but he is to give to Congress, as a positive command, from time to time information on the state of the Union; and that is because they are entitled to have it, and they are entitled to have it every time they call for it, and he violates a positive command of the Constitution when on a constitutional call and in a regular way by either House he omits to do it.

That is the reason why, since the beginning of the Government, from its earliest day until now, when either House, in calling for information, feels that there may be a question as to the public interests being involved in undue and early disclosures of some confidential fact which they are entitled to know, they then usually leave it to the President to send the information, just then or not, according to his judgment as to whether the public interest will be preserved or injured by its being done then.

So, going more broadly than the limitation of the minority of the committee, and speaking for a government of law and a government of the people, I maintain that either House of Congress has a right to know everything that is in the executive departments of the Government. I will state the extremest case possible, and that is either House calling on the President or the Secretary of State for information as to the disbursement of the contingent fund for the payment of the expenses of foreign intercourse, which is ordinarily called the secret-service fund. There is the money of the people from the Treasury appropriated under a law which says that a voucher of the President of the United States shall be good with the accounting officers of the Treasury that the money has been properly expended, while in the State Department are the real vouchers which show whether the money has been expended for one purpose or another, or if there be no voucher and no money, which would show, of course, by a simple proposition in arithmetic and common sense, that it had been embezzled.

Suppose some President of the United States two or three years ago, when I believe we appropriated one or two or three hundred thousand dollars, a very large sum of money, for the contingent expenses of foreign intercourse, not long preceding a great political election, should have turned into the Treasury a lump voucher for that whole hundred or two hundred thousand dollars, whatever the amount was. Suppose at the next meeting of the Senate or the House of Representatives they should be of opinion that for the security of good government and as a guard against any corruption and improper use of that money it was necessary that they should know what had become of it, would it be within the power of the Secretary of State or the President of the United States to say no? If so, we had better be extremely careful hereafter as to how much money we put into the contingent fund for foreign intercourse, if it is a sealed book to the two Houses of Congress. Nobody has yet ever contended that it was, and there is an instance which I shall show to you as illustrating the extremest case that can be stated ,where a Democratic Senate of the United States, if that makes it any better, though I do not think it does, called for that very information, as to what sum of money, how it had been expended by a particular private and secret agent of the United States in another country, and they got it. But, to be sure, the age of reform had not come in. The improvement in public methods, so far as we have yet gone, would seem to be chiefly and most conspicuously the suppression and concealment of public papers, with the best intentions undoubtedly; but I repeat, for the first time in forty years and more, so far as I have been able to discover, has either House failed on its call to get the information that it has asked for from the public departments of the Government.

Upon the question of the authority of the President to direct the heads of departments I cite one other extract from the report of the committee signed by each of these great constitutional lawyers of the majority of the committee:

Your committee is unable to discover, either in the original act of 1789 creating the office of Attorney-General, or in the act of 1870 creating the Department of Justice, any provision which makes the Attorney-General of the United States in any sense the servant of or controlled by the Executive in the performance of the duties imputed to him by law or the nature of his office. It is true that in the creation of the Department of State, of War, and of the Navy it was provided in substance that these Secretaries should perform such duties as should from time to time be enjoined upon them by the President, and should conduct the business of their departments in such manner as the President should direct, but the committee does not think it important to the main question under consideration that such direction is not to be found in the statute creating the Department of Justice, for it is thought it must be obvious that the authority intrusted by the statute in these cases to the President to direct and control the performance of duties was only a superintending authority to regulate the performance of the duties that the law required, and not to require the performance of duties that the laws had not devolved upon the heads of departments, and not to dispense with or forbid the performance of such duties according as it might suit the discretion or the fancy of the Executive. The Executive is bound by the Constitution and by his oath to take care that the laws be faithfully executed, and he is himself as much bound by the regulations of law as the humblest officer in the service of the United States, and he can not have authority to undertake to faithfully execute the laws, whether applied to his own special functions or those of the Departments created by law, otherwise than by causing, so far as he lawfully may, and by lawful methods, the heads of departments and other officers of the United States to do the duties which the law, and not his will, has imputed to them.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Georgia agree with the sentiments which were uttered by Senator Edmunds?

Mr. BACON. I do, undoubtedly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Do the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber generally agree to that?

Mr. BACON. I can not speak for anybody but myself, but I have sufficient confidence in them to believe that they do.

Mr. ALDRICH. Judging by the RECORD, some of them do not.

Mr. BACON. I do not know to what the Senator refers.

Mr. ALDRICH. I refer to the debate which——

Mr. BACON. You mean the sentiments in this case?

Mr. ALDRICH. In cases similar to it.

Mr. BACON. The Senator refers to the controversy that was then before the Senate. I thought the Senator was referring to Senators here at the present day. If the Senator is referring to the question at issue between the Democratic and Republican Senators in 1885 or 1886, when this controversy was had, of course that is different. I have a different answer to the question, if that is what the Senator refers to. But, as I have already shown, while the honorable Senator was not in the Chamber, the Democratic Senators and the Republican Senators all agreed in that debate on the fundamental principle for which I now contend.

Mr. ALDRICH. It was at that time more or less a partisan discussion upon which the Senate divided, I think, equally. I think the Senate divided upon party lines equally.

Mr. BACON. They did not divide on that question at all.

Mr. ALDRICH. Pretty nearly.

Mr. BACON. Not at all. They absolutely agreed upon the fundamental proposition, and in the very speech of Senator Edmunds, from which I am reading, I have already read what he quoted from the minority report to show that they did agree upon the fundamental proposition that every paper and all information within the possession of a department which the Senate had need for in the exercise of its constitutional functions could be demanded by the Senate, not requested, and that it would be the duty of a department to furnish it. Both sides agreed on that.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator contend that the House of Representatives, for instance, could call on the President of the United States for correspondence between our Executive and a foreign government in diplomatic negotiations between the President and the representative of a foreign government?

Mr. BACON. Certainly not. The Senate can do that, not the House. The House can not, because it is not within its constitutional functions; but the Senate can, because it is within its constitutional functions.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senate has nothing to do with diplomatic negotiations.

Mr. BACON. That opens a very wide question, and one that it would not be possible now to debate. I will state to the Senator that I did once have the opportunity to debate that question, and the former Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. Spooner, and myself, in common parlance, thrashed it out here for two or three days. I think it can be abundantly shown that, while the Senate can not require the President to enter upon any negotiations, it is within the proper functions of the Senate to advise the President as to negotiations before he enters upon them if it sees proper to do so, and it has repeatedly done so. Not only so, but the President of the United States in more than one instance has himself advised with the Senate officially and as a body before he entered upon certain negotiations.

Not only so, but during all the period from the foundation of the Government it has been the custom of Secretaries of State to advise individually with Senators. But, as I say, it is a very broad question that the Senator asked me, which I can not now enter upon without abandoning the discussion upon which I am now engaged. I only throw that out. As suggested to me by my distinguished friend, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], Washington came personally and took the opinion and advice of the Senate. There is one particular and very noted instance in the diplomatic history of the Government where the President of the United States, desiring to enter upon certain diplomatic negotiations, appointed commissioners and sent their names to the Senate to be confirmed before they entered upon any negotiations. I could go on for some time with that, but it is manifestly outside the line of my present argument.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator, but I suppose he will admit that that action was entirely voluntary on the part of the President.

Mr. BACON. Voluntary, but none the less proper. We can not require the President of the United States to enter upon negotiations. We can advise him that we think he should do so, and it is not improper that we should. In the same way the President himself may take counsel with the Senate before he proceeds with negotiations. But I do not see the pertinency of that question to the particular line that I am now trying in my feeble way to present to the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. It has no pertinency except that I was desirous of finding out the exact contention of the Senator from Georgia and its full extent.

Mr. BACON. The contention that I make is, if the Senator wants to know it in one sentence, that the Senate of the United States, in the consideration of any matter within its constitutional jurisdiction or for the performance of any duty within its constitutional jurisdiction, has the right, not to request, but to require and direct any department of the Government to furnish to the Senate any paper or any information which it may have relative to the matter.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. HALE. Has the Senator any doubt that under the Constitution—I will not go beyond that—the Senate has that right?

Mr. BACON. None, whatever; not a particle.

Mr. HALE. I agree fully with the Senator.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I want to say to the distinguished and honorable Senator from Maine that if I had any doubt about it, it would be impossible for me to read the debate, from which I have given only a few extracts, without being convinced beyond the shadow of a doubt of the truth of the proposition in its broadest and most radical aspect that it is not for the Senate of the United States (and it is true also of the House as to matters within their jurisdiction) to go to a department and request that it be furnished with certain information. A request if limited to a request implies the right to refuse. A direction or a command implies the right to have an answer without a refusal, and that is what I say is the power of the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. When the Senate in addressing the President for information uses the words, "if in his opinion it is not incompatible with the public interests," it recognizes his discretion in certain cases.

Mr. BACON. So far as those words are concerned which the Senator from South Carolina quotes, they are the words of courtesy which we address always to the President, even where we think we have the absolute right. They are the words of caution which we address to the President when we deal with matters where we recognize that possibly and even probably it may not be proper that the fact should be disclosed to the public. And especially is this invariably recognized by the Senate whenever the inquiry thus addressed to the President relates to matters concerning our foreign relations. And for this reason the inquiries relating to foreign affairs are usually addressed to the President, and not to the Secretary of State, and are couched in this language, putting it in the discretion of the President.

Mr. TILLMAN. But we always direct the heads of departments.

Mr. BACON. Of course, I am trying to say that much myself, and to contend for the power and right to do so.

Mr. President, what does it mean? What does it mean if we have not the right to require, to command? What are the departments? Where do they originate, and by whose power and by whose authority do they continue to exercise their functions? When the Government was formed there were no departments. The Constitution of the United States did not create any departments. The Constitution of the United States makes but one mention of departments. It says that the President of the United States—

> May require the opinion, in writing, of the principal officer in each of the executive departments upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices.

That is the only time they are mentioned in the Constitution of the United States, excepting where it is said in the succeeding section that Congress may vest in the heads of departments the appointment of certain inferior officers.

Here is a Government formed, a Constitution which creates the two legislative branches of the Government, which creates the executive head of the Government, which creates the Supreme Court, and there are provided in the Constitution no other departments of the Government and no machinery for carrying out the governmental functions which are going to be necessarily performed, but all that is left for the subsequent constructive work of Congress. Congress, in pursuance of its legislative functions, as designed and intended by the Constitution, enacts laws creating these departments for the purpose of executing the laws. And this is the way, and the only way, in which these departments have come into existence. Can it be conceived for a moment that over a hundred years ago, when these departments, or most of them, were organized, when Congress was considering what powers should be conferred upon the departments, it was for a moment suspected or imagined that the time would ever come that these departments thus being created by Congress should grow into such power that they should say to their creator, "You shall not even inquire as to how I am discharging the duties which you devolve upon me?" And when I say "inquire" I mean "demand."

As I was saying a moment ago, a request, if limited to a request, implies the right to refuse. A command recognizes the right or the obligation of obedience without the right to refuse.

Consider for a moment the condition of affairs if it be true that a department can shut its door and say to a legislative branch——

Mr. FULTON rose.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me for a moment. I will not yield now; I will a little later.

Mr. FULTON. Very well.

Mr. BACON. Consider for a moment the condition of affairs if an executive department can shut its doors and say to Congress, or to either the Senate or the House, "I will open them when I think they ought to be opened, and I will keep them shut to your demand whenever in my judgment they ought to be closed." We are speaking now not of what they are apt to do, but on the question of their power to do. What could they do under that power? Could they not absolutely block the wheels of Government? Could the House of Representatives or the Senate perform its legislative functions if the departments should exercise such a power? And if they have the power, they can exercise it. If the departments should exercise the power and say, "I will not let you have any information except, in my judgment, it is information which you ought to have," and if they should exercise that power in the extreme, to such an extent that Congress would not have the information necessary to know whether the functions of government were being properly exercised by them or not, what becomes of the legislative branch of the Government, and how are its functions to be performed?

If the President of the United States himself can do it—if the President of the United States can lock the doors of a department and say to Congress:

> You shall have information if I deem it proper that you shall have it, and shall not have it if I am of the opinion it is unreasonable.

What is the result? Manifestly in the exercise of such powers he would be an irresponsible autocrat and the design of the Constitution in creating a representative republic would be utterly defeated. Mr. President, the Congress of the United States is clothed by the Constitution of the United States with the greatest of all powers. The President of the United States is clothed with but one royal power to be exercised by himself alone, and that is the pardoning power. Every other power which he has is exercised either in connection with Congress or with the Senate. He can enact no law. He can make no treaty or appoint any officer of the Government, from a second lieutenant to the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, without the consent of the Senate. Sir, let me refresh the memory of Senators and of the country in reading the enumeration of the great powers conferred by the Constitution upon Congress. The first line in the first article of the Constitution is as follows:

> All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States.

And then section 8 of Article I proceeds to enumerate those powers, as follows:

> SEC. 8. The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States;
>
> To borrow money on the credit of the United States;
>
> To regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes;
>
> To establish an uniform rule of naturalization, and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States;
>
> To coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures;
>
> To provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States;
>
> To establish post-offices and post-roads;
>
> To promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries;
>
> To constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court;
>
> To define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas and offenses against the law of nations;
>
> To declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water;
>
> To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years;
>
> To provide and maintain a navy;
>
> To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces;
>
> To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions;
>
> To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress;
>
> To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever, over such district (not exceeding 10 miles square)—

Referring to the District of Columbia—

> as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings.

And finally, as if all this enumeration of powers was not sufficient, the Constitution continues, as the conclusion and summary of all these great powers:

> To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

Nor is this all. The Congress of the United States, in one branch as an accuser and the other as a court, can try any officer in the United States and remove him from office, including the President himself. If it be true that the President of the United States can lock the doors of a department and say, "I will only open them when I wish," the great function of Congress, the great power of Congress to impeach and remove a President or any head of a department from office for malfeasance in office would be defeated. If the Congress of the United States, or rather, if the House of Representatives, were satisfied of corruption in a department with the connivance of an Executive (of course I am not speaking of any present officers) and desired to get information upon which to base articles of impeachment, and the contention of some Senators who have interrupted me here to-day is correct, denying to either House of Congress the right to have the doors opened upon their demand, and only conceding the right to request and only to secure it with the voluntary permission of the Executive, the President of the United States could in such case lock the doors of a department in which corruption existed and say, "You shall not come in to make an investigation." If it would be lawful for the President to do so, there would be no remedy. That would defeat the impeachment.

It will not do to say that it would be an impeachable offense for the President thus to lock the doors and deny admission to the House, because if it is lawful for him to lock the doors he could not be impeached for doing that lawful act. Extreme cases prove the law, and this is an extreme case, of course, an absolutely improbable case, but nevertheless it proves the law—that it is inconsistent with the exercise of the constitutional functions of either the Senate or the House for a moment to admit that there is any authority which can say "no," when either the Senate or the House demands to know anything which is in any department of the Government which relates to matters within the jurisdiction of such constitutional functions.

Mr. President, upon what possible basis can rest the contention of the President of the United States that the executive departments are subject to his direction, and not to the direction of the Senate in the exercise of its constitutional functions? Are the executive departments a part of the power included in that sentence in the Constitution which says that the "executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States?" Is the executive power one which covers and extends over the powers exercised by the heads of the departments? Most assuredly not.

The executive power as conferred upon the President by the Constitution of the United States can not be added to by the Congress of the United States nor can it be subtracted from. It is there intact and complete; it can be neither added to nor taken from.

How do the executive departments get their power? Where do they get their authority? From the President? From the grant of power under the Constitution to the President that he shall exercise executive power? If so, then the President of the United States undoubtedly has a right to the creation of these departments, and Congress has no such right. If so, the President undoubtedly has the right to say what departments shall exist and what departments shall not exist. If so, the President has the right to say what shall be the functions of each executive department, what they shall do, and what they shall not. Does any man for a moment contend that?

Nor, Mr. President, is it true that in conferring the power upon the executive departments Congress has, in so doing, taken away in any degree from the President of the United States the executive power conferred upon him by the Constitution of the United States, because if that were true, Congress could chip away one part of the executive power by the creation of one department, and then it could chip away another part of the executive power by the creation of another department, and so on until all the executive power of the President of the United States was destroyed.

The truth is that neither proposition is correct. The executive power conferred by the Constitution of the United States does not relate to the powers of the executive departments, because if it did, as I have said, they would be for his creation and not for the creation of Congress. On the other hand, the creation of the executive departments by Congress does not trench in any manner upon the executive power of the President, because, if it did, it would be within the power of Congress to absolutely destroy the power of the Executive.

Thus it stands. The executive departments are created by Congress. They are in their essence created by Congress. They are in all their powers created by Congress. It is for Congress to maintain them in the exercise of their present powers. It is for Congress to take away any part it may see fit of their present powers, and it is equally for Congress, if it sees proper, to add to any of their present powers. These departments are the very breath of the mouth of Congress. By a word Congress has created each and every one of them and conferred upon them without exception each and every power which they possess. By another word Congress can abolish any one of these departments and create another in its stead or confer its powers upon another department. Since I have been a member of the Senate Congress has created the Department of Commerce and Labor, in its creation conferring upon it each and every power which it possesses, and in doing so conferred upon it, among other powers, some of the powers which were for the purpose taken away from the Department of the Interior. And thus it has the unrestrained and unrestrainable power as to the creation or abolition of other departments or the changing of their powers and duties.

It is an impossible contention that a power absolute and unrestrained thus to create and to destroy, thus to change or to set up or to pull down at its will, does not carry with it the power of unlimited control; and equally impossible is the contention that the power thus to control does not carry with it the power to demand and receive all information within the possession of the department which may by Congress, or either House, be deemed within the sphere of its constitutional functions.

Congress is the authority to which the departments are responsible. They are also responsible, within the law, to the President for the proper discharge of their duties. It is his duty to see that they discharge their duties, because it is his duty to see to the execution of the laws. But it is none the less—nay, more; it is much more—the duty of Congress to supervise the workings of the departments and see that they do that which the law commands them to do and to see whether or not the law is sufficient for the purpose for which it was designed. If it can be that the President of the United States or the head of a department can stand at the door and say "no" when Congress makes a demand for information of any kind as to any matter connected with the discharge of the duties of that office, then the functions of the Senate in the discharge of its constitutional duties are practically destroyed. If it is a request, we are petitioners; if it is a command to be obeyed, then we occupy the position which the Constitution of the United States intended we should occupy, and we are discharging the duties and exercising the authority which its terms confer upon us.

The power of the President in directing the heads of departments is clearly stated in the majority report made by these great lawyers. It is the power, in their words, to direct—> by lawful methods, the heads of departments and other officers of the United States to do the duties which the law, and not his will, has imputed to them.

Mr. President, there is no need of friction between the legislative and the executive departments on this question. While the power in the legislative department certainly and necessarily exists, either House of Congress can be relied upon, in the future as in the past, to exercise it wisely and with discretion; and whenever a direction is given which for any reason is unwise, it will be withdrawn whenever that unwisdom is properly shown.

Sir, I do not underestimate these departments, nor would I in any degree depreciate them or the distinguished officers who preside over them. They are great, stupendous departments, the agencies and the means by which all the complicated and vast machinery of this gigantic government is kept in successful action; and from the beginning of the Government in the very first administration of Washington, down to the present times, the ablest and the most illustrious men of the nation have esteemed themselves honored in being chosen as the heads of these great departments.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, the phase of the proposition about which I wish to ask has been discussed when I was absent from the Chamber, and I wish to ask the Senator regarding it, because he has studied it very carefully. Assuming that either House of Congress has the right, or that the Senate has the right, to demand this information—I am speaking of the right to do it, for in one sense I agree with the Senator that that is a correct proposition—but is that a right that can be enforced otherwise than by congressional legislation?

Mr. BACON. Enforced by congressional legislation?

Mr. FULTON. Well, by legislation—joint action.

Mr. BACON. The Senator means whether we have a right to demand it unless we have an act of Congress saying that the Senate may do so?

Mr. FULTON. We have no right; that is, we would have no power to enforce it except through that.

Mr. BACON. The question of enforcement is a matter of some difficulty. I will say to the Senator that Senator Logan, in the debate I have been quoting, discussed that very question. He seemed to concede the fact that there was no present or immediate remedy in case the head of a department or the President should refuse.

Mr. FULTON. Exactly.

Mr. BACON. But he seemed to think that the disclosure to the public of their refusal would have its proper rebuke and remedy at the hands of the people.

I will say to the Senator, in considering that question another suggestion has occurred to me, and that is, when the Senate orders the head of a department or any subordinate of that department to give certain information and he refuses to do so he is certainly in contempt of the Senate, and the Senate, in my opinion—I will not say "in my opinion," for I have not examined the law upon the subject, and so will not give it as a conclusion—but the impression on my mind is that the Senate could certainly deal with it as a matter of contempt. It could certainly deal with it in the matter of the payment of salaries, which would be a very efficient method of securing a recognition of our power.

Mr. FULTON. Certainly. But it seems to me doubtful whether the Senate could proceed as for contempt unless there should first be a statute of Congress so providing. However, I only make the suggestion.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I do not think that that should be any reason why we should fail to recognize and insist upon the recognition of our prerogatives, not only of our prerogatives in the matter of pride and dignity, but of our prerogatives which are essential to the proper discharge of the functions which the Constitution devolves upon us, and which, as has been clearly shown, have been exercised for more than a hundred years. Why should we abandon them for fear some one would fail to obey the law?

Mr. FULTON. It seems to me it would be a right which would be a barren right if we have no way of enforcing it.

Mr. BACON. I do not think so. If that were the case, there are a great many things that are barren in the machinery of the Government. Suppose the Supreme Court of the United States, when a case was to be tried, should say, "We do not intend to hold any court this year," or "We do not intend to hold court for the next ten years." We could impeach them, but we could not compel them to do it. You might say that is a barren right. Of course I am illustrating by the most extreme and impossible case.

Mr. FULTON. I mean to go right back to my prior suggestion, that Congress may, by joint action of the two Houses, pass a law in order to make that a punishable offense.

Mr. BACON. Not only that, but Congress by the two Houses can impeach and remove from office, and in the same way Congress can impeach and remove one of these officers from his office.

Mr. FULTON. I only made the suggestion. It seems to me there is no doubt that Congress can provide by joint action for either House demanding and securing such information in all proper cases; but it seems to me probable that there is no remedy otherwise than that.

Mr. TILLMAN. Who would be the judge as to what are proper cases?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] that in several statutes we have already provided, for instance, as to the Secretary of the Treasury, that he shall make reports when called upon by Congress or by either House of Congress.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, it is a well-recognized principle of law——

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. In addition to what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has just pointed out, I want to call attention to the last paragraph of section 8 of the act creating the Department of Commerce and Labor, which says:

He shall—

Referring to the Secretary—

He shall also, from time to time, make such special investigations and reports as he may be required to do by the President, or by either House of Congress, or which he himself may deem necessary and urgent.

That act was approved by the President of the United States who now holds that office. So, Mr. President, the Chief Executive is committed to the principle that the power exists to compel the head of a department to make special answers to inquiries of either House of Congress.

Mr. FULTON. That simply supports the view I expressed. That by legislative or joint action of the two Houses we can require information to be furnished, I have no doubt, because we can fix the penalty for refusal to comply. But without some such legislation it seems to me that it is hardly to be contended that, in the strict sense of right, it is a right any further than any right that may be put into legislation and through legislation enforced as a right. It is perhaps within the constitutional competency of Congress to provide for it; but it hardly strikes me as being thoroughly sound and logical to say that it is the right of the Senate to demand this, when all there is of it is that we have the power to legislate so that we can put ourselves in the position to demand it and secure it, but without legislation we may demand it but can not require it.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, it is a well-recognized principle of law, known to everybody, that every function which is essential to the execution of power which is conferred upon a body is a function which it has the right to exercise without any further legislative authority. The principle is well stated in the minority report, as follows:

It is on this clearly defined and well-founded constitutional principle that wherever any power is lodged by the Constitution all incidents follow such power that are necessary and proper to enable the custodian of it to carry it into execution.

We have got just as much authority now as we would have if there were a statute about it. The only thing that could be done would be to pass a law which would prescribe a penalty for failure to do it. But if Congress at every session should pass a law which should say that the Senate would have the right to require and demand this information in cases where the proper discharge of its constitutional functions required it, it would not give us any greater authority to require it and to demand it than we have under the Constitution when it imposes upon us the legislative function.

Mr. FULTON. That simply means that we have a right to demand, but we have no power to compel compliance with the demand.

Mr. BACON. I will concede, if the Senator will be satisfied with that, that we have no power to enforce it, though I do not think he is right, but I will concede it for the argument. There is certainly the power of impeachment which the House could set in motion. But even if there were no power of enforcement, that is no reason why we should surrender a great constitutional right, not of a theoretical character, but of a most practical and fundamental character.

Mr. FULTON. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. BACON. Then why does the Senator disagree?

Mr. FULTON. I do not mean it offensively, but I will say that, on the part of the Senator, I think it is idle to attempt to prove that this is a right, when we must admit that we have no way of enforcing it. My idea is that we may provide a way of enforcing these rights.

Mr. BACON. I will remit that part of it to the honorable Senator from Oregon. I myself am content to have it remain as it is.

Now, an important fact to which I want to call the attention of the Senate is this: The President of the United States says that there are but three powers which can direct an executive officer. One is the President of the United States, another is the Constitution of the United States, and the third is the Congress of the United States. That denies to either House of Congress the right to issue a direction to a department. On the one side of this constitutional question stands the present President of the United States. On the other side, as shown by this report in which instances are cited that from the foundation of the Government the contrary has been recognized as the law, stands the great array of Senators who have sat in this and in the other Chamber for a hundred years or more—the greatest names that ornament the history of the United States—Senators who, during that more than a century, have acted upon the correctness of that proposition and have directed the departments and have not requested them.

Why, I remember, Mr. President, one of the first things which I heard when I came into the Senate of the United States, about fourteen years ago, was a suggestion by Mr. Sherman, of Ohio, who was sitting, I think, right where the honorable Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] now sits—or the seat in front of him, I have forgotten which, but in that immediate neighborhood—when some Senator, like myself, who had recently come into the body, introduced a resolution requesting a department to furnish certain information. Senator Sherman, who himself had been a distinguished member of the Cabinet, rose in his place and moved to amend the resolution—no; asked for an amendment; he did not move it, because no action was necessary—to strike out the word "requested" and insert "directed." It was done in that instance, and I have seen him do it a dozen times in the Senate. Not only so—and I mention that simply as a matter within my personal observation—but, as shown by this report, it had been the custom of the Senate for more than a hundred years to use the word "direct." Was it an idle exercise of boastful power or pretended power on the part of those great Senators, or were they using the word advisedly because they knew they had the right to use it? When the President of the United States uses such language as this:

Heads of the executive departments are subject to the Constitution, and to the laws passed by the Congress in pursuance of the Constitution, and to the directions of the President of the United States, but to no other direction whatever.

I put against his word and his opinion the utterances and the practices of the illustrious men who for over one hundred years have ornamented the Senate—constitutional lawyers, the superiors of whom in many instances have not been known to the American bar. Mr. President, in this most learned report and in this great debate those great Senators recognized the fact that this was a vital question; that it was a question which related to the proper discharge of their constitutional duties; that it was a question which related to the ultimate, absolute control of the Government by the executive power or the executive officer and the absorption to himself of all power, and they set out in their report something upon this line which I will trespass a little further upon the Senate to read. It is upon the question as to whether or not the exercise of unlimited power by the President of the United States to shut up the doors of the departments, to lock them and to say to Congress, "You shall not enter except when I will," armed him with power which would, in connection with the control of great patronage, ultimately lead to despotism and autocracy.

In the appendix to their report, in discussing this very question, they said some things about the power of the Executive in dispensing patronage and about the encroachment of the Executive upon other departments of the Government, which, though spoken in 1826, would be quite applicable to the conditions of the present day:

> In 1826 Mr. Benton made a report to the Senate, embracing in part this subject, which ought to be carefully read by every American—

This, now mark you, Mr. President, is what is brought to the attention of the Senate by George F. Edmunds, Mr. Hoar, Mr. Evarts, Mr. McMillan, Mr. Ingalls, and Mr. Wilson, Republican members of the Judiciary Committee. This is what they themselves presented to the Senate:

> In 1826 Mr. Benton made a report to the Senate, embracing in part this subject, which ought to be carefully read by every American. In that paper we find this powerful passage: "The King of England is 'the fountain of honor;' the President of the United States is the source of patronage. He presides over the entire system of federal appointments, jobs, and contracts. He has power over the 'support' of the individuals who administer the system. He makes and unmakes them. He chooses from the circle of his friends and supporters and may dismiss them, and, upon all the principles of human actions, he will dismiss them as often as they disappoint his expectations. There may be exceptions, but the truth of the general rule is proved by the exception. The intended check and control of the Senate, without new constitutional or statutory provisions, will cease to operate. Patronage will penetrate this body, subdue its capacity of resistance, chain it to the car of power, and enable the President to rule as easily and much more securely with than without the nominal check of the Senate.
>
